INTRODUCTION

I have two objects in view in writing this Introduction to the study of the Ouran.

First, I want to acquaint the reader with those things which will help him to understand the meaning of the Quran. If he does not become conversant with them in the very beginning, they keep coming back into his mind over and over again, and often become a hindrance to his going deep into its meaning and spirit.

Second, I want to answer beforehand some of the questions which usually arise during the study of the Quran. I have confined myself to those questions which arose in my own mind when I began my oritical study of it or the ones which I came across afterwards. If there be any other questions besides these, God willing, I will answer them in the next edition.

Unique Book

Before the reader begins the study of the Quran, he must bear in mind the fact that it is a unique Book, quite different from the books one usually reads. Unlike conventional books, the Quran does not contain information, ideas and arguments about specific themes arranged in a literary order. That is why a stranger to the Quran, on his first approach to it, is baffled when he does not find the enunciation of its theme or its division into chapters and sections or separate treatment of different topics and separate instructions for different aspects of life arranged in a serial order. On the contrary, there is something with which he has not been familiar before and which does not conform to ins conception of a book. He finds that it deals with creeds, gives moral instructions, lays down laws, invites people to Islam, admonishes the dis-believers, draws lessons from historical events, administers warnings, gives good tidings, all blended together in a beautiful manner. The same subject is repeated in different ways and one topic follows the other without any apparent connection. Sometimes a new topic crops up in the middle of another without any apparent reason. The speaker and the addressees, and the direction of the address change without any notice. There is no sign of chapters and divisions anywhere. Historical events are presented but not as in history books. The problems of Philosophy and Metaphysics are treated in a manner different from that of the text books on the subjects. Man and the Universe are mentioned in a language different from that of the natural sciences. Likewise it follows its own method of solving cultural, political, social and economic problems and deals with the principles and injunctions of law in a manner quite different from that of the sociologists, lawyers and jurists. Morality is taught in a way that has no parallel in the whole literature on the subject.

That is why the unwary reader is baffled and puzzled when he finds all these things contrary to his pre-conceived conception of a book. He begins to feel that the Ouran is a book without any order or inter-connection between its verses or continuity of its subject. or that it deals with miscellaneous topics in an incoherent manner, or that it had been given the form of a continuous book though it was not a book in the commonly accepted sense of the word. As a result of this, its opponents raise strange objections against the Ouran, and its modern followers adopt strange devices to ward off doubts and objections. They either resort to escapism or put forward strange interpretations to ease their minds. Sometimes they try to create artificial connections between the verses to explain away the apparent incoherencies, and, as a last resort, they even accept the theory that the Quran deals with miscellaneous topics without any order or coherence. Consequently, verses are isolated from their context and confusion is produced in the meanings.

This happens when the reader does not take into consideration the fact that the Quran is a unique book. It does not, like other books, enunciate at the very beginning the subject it deals with and the object it intends to achieve. Its style and method of explaining things are also quite different from those of other books one commonly reads and it does not follow any bookish order. Above all, it is not a book on "religion" in the sense this word is generally understood. That is why when a reader approaches the Quran with the common notions of a book, he is rather puzzled by its style and manner of presentation. He finds that at many places the back-ground has not been mentioned and the circumstances under which a particular passage was revealed have not been stated. As a result of these things, the ordinary reader is unable to benefit fully from the most precious treasures contained in the Quran, though occasionally he may succeed in discovering a few gems here and there. Only those people become victims of such doubts as are not acquainted with these distinctive features of the Quran. They seem to find miscellaneous topics scattered all over its pages and feel difficulties about its meanings. Nav. even those verses, which are absolutely clear, appear to them to be quite irrelevant in the contexts they occur.

The reader may be saved from all these difficulties, if he is warned before-hand that the Book he is going to study is the only book of its kind in the whole world: that its literary style is quite different from that of all other books: that its theme is unique and that his pre-conceived notions of a book cannot help him understand the Quran. Nay, these may even become a hindrance. He should, therefore, first of all free his mind from preconceived notions and get acquainted with the distinctive features of this Book. Then and then alone can he understand it.

In order to understand the Quran thoroughly, it is essential to know the nature of this Book, its central idea and its aim and object. The reader should also be well acquainted with its style, the terms it uses and the method it adopts to explain things. He should also keep in view the back-ground and circumstances under which a certain passage was revealed.

Divine Guidance

First of all, the reader should understand the real nature of the Quran. Whether one believes it to be a revealed book or not, one will have to consider, as a starting point, the claim that is put forward by itself and its bearer, Muhammad (Allah's peace be upon him), that this is the Divine Guidance.

The Lord of the Universe, its Creator, Master and Sovereign created Man and bestowed upon him the faculties of learning, speaking, understanding and discerning right from wrong and good from evil. He granted him freedom of choice, freedom of will, freedom of action and gave him authority to acquire and make use of the things around him. In short, He granted him a kind of autonomy and appointed him as His Vicegerent on the Earth and instructed him to live in accordance with His Guidance.

At the time, when the Lord of the Universe appointed Man as His vicegerent, He warned him very clearly and precisely, leaving no doubt in his mind as to the kind of relations he should have with Him, as if to say, "I am your Master and Sovereign and that of the whole universe; therefore you should worship Me and none else. You are neither independent in My Kingdom nor the subject of anyone else, to whom you might owe obedience or worship. You are being sent to the Earth with certain powers for a fixed term of time for your test. After that you will have to return to Me. Then I will judge the deeds you did in the world and decide whether you have come out successful or failed in the test. Therefore the right course for you is to accept Me voluntarily as Sovereign and worship Me alone and act in the world according to the Guidance I shall send you, and live on the Earth with the conviction and understanding that it is merely the place of your trial. Your real object in earthly life should be to come out successful in the final judgement. Therefore any other course different from and opposed to the Divine Guidance, will be wrong. If you adopt the first course, (and you have full liberty and freedom to adopt it), you will achieve peace and tranquillity in this world and win the home of eternal bliss and joy (Paradise) in the next world, to which you shall have to return. And if you follow any other course (and you are quite free to do this also, if you so choose), you shall incur My disfavour in this world and eternal sorrow and affliction in the Hereafter, where you shall be thrown into the abyss of Hell'.

After such a warning the Owner of the Universe sent Adam and Eve (Allah's peace be upon them) the first human beings, to the Earth and gave them the guidance according to which they and their descendants were to live in this world. Thus the first two human beings were not created in ignorance and darkness but were given very clear and bright Light and the Law they were to follow. This was Islam. (submission to Allah). Before they left this world, they themselves practised and taught the same way to their children and children's children and exhorted them to live as Muslims (obedient servants of Allah). But in the succeeding centuries, by and by, people swerved from this straight way of life (Islam) and adopted different 'crooked ways. They not only lost the Guidance owing to their negligence but also tampered with it because of their wickedness. They attributed to others the qualities and powers of Allah and associated others to rank with Him as gods and ascribed His rights to others. They invented different kinds of religions (ways of life) by mixing up all sorts of superstitions, wrong theories and false philosophies with the Guidance that was given by Allah. They discarded the right, just and moral principles taught by Allah or corrupted them and made such laws of life as suited their prejudices and lusts, and filled Allah's Earth with chaos and iniquity.

Though this was a sad state of affairs, Allah did not will to force these corrupt people to follow the Right Way because this would have been against the limited freedom of action which had been granted to man by Him; nor did He will to destroy them forthwith as soon as rebellion broke out against Him, because this would not have been in keeping with the rules of life laid down for trial in this world. Instead of this, Allah took upon Himself, from the very beginning of man's life on the Earth, to send His Guidance to him during his term of life, leaving him free to follow or not to follow it. Accordingly, He made arrangements for the Guidance of mankind and appointed His' Messengers from among the people them-selves and bestowed upon them the knowledge of the Truth and the Right Way of life. They were charged with the mission to invite people to the Right Way from which they had swerved. The Messengers themselves believed in Allah and acted in accordance with the Guidance they received from Him. They were raised from different nations in different countries and thousands of them were sent during thousands of years. They all had one and the same religion which was based on the Unity of God and accountability in the Hereafter. They all taught the same way of life that was taught to the first Man at the very start of his life in this world. They all followed the same Guidance, that is, those fundamental and eterna principles of morality and culture which were prescribed for the first Man from the very first day of his life. They all had the one and the same mission, that is, to invite all human beings to the same Guidance, and to organise them into one community. All those people who accepted their invitation became one community, which was in duty bound to follow the Divine Guidance and to do its best and utmost to establish it and to guard against any transgressions.

During their respective terms, these Messengers fulfilled their mission admirably well. But it is a pity that the majority of the people were not inclined to accept their invitation and even those who joined their community gradually became corrupt. So much so that some of these communities totally lost that Guidance and others tampered with the Commandments of Allah and mixed them up with false things.

Then the Lord of the Universe sent Muhammad (Allah's peace be upon him) as His last Messenger to fulfil the same mission for which Messengers had been sent before him. He extended his invitation to all human beings, including the corrupt followers of the previous Messengers and asked them to follow the Right Way. He organised all those who accepted the Divine Guidance into one community, which in its trun, was required to re-establish its collective way of life based on the Guidance and to exert its utmost to reform the world, which had gone astray. The Qurān which was revealed to Muhammad (Allah's peace be upon him) is the Book which contains that Invitation and that Divine Guidance.

Central Theme

Now that we have come to know the nature of the Quran, it has become easier to determine the subject it deals with, its central theme and its aim and object,

The SUBJECT it deals with is MAN; it discusses those aspects of his life that lead either to his real success or failure.

The CENTRAL THEME that runs throughout the Quran is the exposition of the Reality and the invitation to the Right Way based on it. It declares that Reality is the same that was revealed by Allah Himself to Adam at the time of his appointment as vice-gerent, and to all the Messengers after him, and the Right Way is the same that was taught by all the Messengers. It also points out that all theories contradictory to this Reality, invented by people about God, the universe, Man and his relations with God and the rest of His creation, are all wrong and that all the ways of life based on them are erroneous and lead to ruinous consequences.

The AIM and OBJECT of the revelations is to invite Man to that Right Way and to present clearly the Guidance which he has lost because of his negligence or has perverted by his wickedness.

If the reader keeps these three basic things in mind, he will find that in this Book there is no incongruity in the style, no gap in the continuity of the subject and no lack of interconnection between its various topics. As a matter of fact, this Book is not irrelevant anywhere with regard to its Subject, its Central Theme and its Aim. From its very beginning to its end, the different topics it deals with are, so intimately connected with its Central Theme that they may be likened to the beautiful gems of the same necklace, despite their different colours and sizes. The Ouran keeps the same object in view, whether it is relating the story of the creation of the Earth or of the Heavens or of Man or is referring to the manifestations in the Universe or stating events from human history. As the aim of the Ouran is to guide Man and not to teach Nature Study or History or Philosophy or any other science or art, it does not concern itself with these latter subjects. The only thing with which it is concerned is to expound the Reality, to remove misunderstandings and mis-conceptions about it. to impress the Truth upon the minds, to warn them of the consequences of wrong attitudes and to invite humanity to the Right Way. The same is true of the criticism of the creeds, of the moral systems, of the deeds of men and communities and of its discussions of the problems of Metaphysics etc. That is why it states or discusses or cites a thing only to the extent relevant to its aims and objects and leaves out unnecessary and irrelevant details and turns over and over again to its Central Theme and to its invitation round which every other topic revolves. When the Quran is studied in this light. no doubt is left that the whole of it is a closely reasoned argument and there is continuity of subject throughout the Book.

Background

One cannot understand fully many of the topics discussed in the Quran unless one is acquainted with the background of their revelation. One should know the social, historical or other antecedents or conditions which help explain any particular topic. For, the Quran was not revealed as a complete book at one and the same time; nor did Allah hand over a written copy of it to Muhammad (Allah's peace be upon him) at the very beginning of his mission and command him to publish it and invite people to adopt a particular way of life. Moreover, it is not a literary work of the common conventional type that develops its central theme in a logical order; nor does it conform to the style of such a work. The Quran adopts its own style to suit the guidance of the Islamic Movement that was started by Allah's Messenger under His direct command. Accordingly, Allah revealed the Quran piece-meal to meet the requirements of the Movement in its different stages.

Makki Strahs

When the Holy Prophet was commanded to start his mission at Makkah, Allah sent down such instructions as the Messenger needed for his own training for the great work that was entrusted to him. The Qurën imparted also the basic knowledge of the Reality and gave brief answer to the common mis-understandings that misled people to adopt wrong ways of life and invited them to accept the basic principles of morality and adopt the right attitude that alone leads to the success and welfare of humanity.

These early messages consisted of short and concise sentences and were conclud in a very fluent and effective language to suit the taste of the people to whom they were first addressed. Their excellent literary style was so appealing that it touched their very hearts. They were so charming that they attracted the attention of the hearers, who began to repeat them because of their beauty and elegance. Though universal truths were enunciated in these messages, they were given a local colour and were supported by arguments, examples and illusrations from the environment with which its first addressees were quite familiar. In order to impress the addressees effectively, these early addresses were confined to their own history, their traditions, their monuments, their beliefs, their morality and their evil ways.

This early stage of the Movement lasted for four years or so with the result that a few good people accepted its message and formed the nucleus of the future Muslim Community. But the large majority of the Quraish began to oppose it because, in their ignorance, they thought that it hit hard at their vested interests and lusts and the old traditions of their fore-fathers. The message of the Quran, however, went on spreading beyond the boundaries of Makkah and reached other clans.

Then the Movement entered its second stage which continued for nine years or so and a fierce struggle began with the old order. Not only the Ouraish but also the majority of its upholders also rose up to kill this Movement employing all sorts of weapons or at least to suppress it. They made false propaganda and levelled accusations and raised frivolous objections against it. They spread suspicions and doubts in order to alienate the common people from it. They hindered strangers from listening to the Holy Prophet and inflicted all sorts of cruelties on those who accepted Islam. They boycotted the Muslims socially and economically in order to intimidate and coerce them. Their persecution became so unbearable that some of them had to leave their homes twice for Abyssinia, and at last all of them had to migrate to Al-Madinah. But in spite of persecution and hindrances, the Movement went on spreading. There was hardly a family or a household left in Makkah from which one person or the other had not accepted Islam. Naturally this produced bitterness in the hearts of the opponents of Islam. The persecution became all the more bitter when they saw that their own brothers, nephews, sons, daughters, sisters etc., had accepted Islam and become its faithful and strong supporters and were ready to defend it even with their lives.

The Movement also got impetus from the fact that it was drawing into its fold the best from among their people who became the embodiments of virtue after accepting Islam. The world, therefore, could not help feeling the moral superiority of the Movement that was so thoroughly transforming the characters of its followers.

All through this long and bitter struggle, Allah continued to reveal, according to the requirements of the occasion, inspiring addresses which highly influenced the thoughts and conduct of the hearers. On the one hand, these addresses instructed the Muslims in their primary duties, infused into them the spirit of loyalty and devotion to bind them together as members of the Muslims Community and taught the ways of piety, high morality and purity of character and trained them to be true missionaries of Islam. On the other hand, these messages consoled, comforted and encouraged the Muslims with promises of success in this world and of eternal bliss in the Hereafter. They urged them also to exert their utmost in the way of Allah with fortitude, endurance and courage. The Muslims were so imbued with the spirit of sacrifice for this noble cause that they were ready to bear every kind of affliction and fight against the bitterest opposition. At the same time, these addresses administered warnings to those people who were opposing the Movement and those who were indifferent to it. Examples were cited from the history of the neighbouring peoples as proofs thereof. Their attention was also drawn to the ruins of the habitations by which they used to pass during their journevs : these were held cut as object lessons. They were asked to observe the phenomena of Nature they saw day and night on the earth and in the heavens as a proof of the Unity of God and of the inevitable Hereafter.

The early addresses exposed the blasphemy of the idolaters and their association of partners with Allah and their worship of the old traditions so vividly as to convince all fair-minded persons of their error. They refuted their misconception that they were independent of God and not accountable to Him in the Hereafter with such clear reasoning as to leave no doubt in their hearts and minds. Every doubt was dispelled and every objection answered and every intricacy and complication, in which they were entangled and in which they were involving others, was unfolded and unravelled. In short, these addresses proved clearly and conclusively that the old ways were based on ignorance and were utterly void of sense. Side by side with this, the dis-believers were admonished for their immorality, their wrong ways of life and customs of ignorance and their opposition to the Truth and their persecution of the Believers. These early addresses also put forward those basic principles of culture and morality which have always been universally accepted and which have always formed the basis of the enlightened Divine civilization.

Several changes took place during the Makki stage of the Movement. It spread wider and wider, day by day, and the opposition to it became stronger and stronger in the same proportion. By and by, it came into contact with the people of different creeds and different ways of life and this gave rise to new problems. The discourses, therefore, began to deal with various new topics as well. This explains the difference of their style from those of the earlier ones.

This is the background of the surahs which were revealed during the thirteen years of Makki life.

Madani Sorahs

After facing opposition for thirteen years in Makkah, the Islamic Movement found a new centre in Al-Madinah where it became possible to collect all its followers from the various parts of Arabia and to unify and strengthen them. Accordingly, the Holy Prophet and the majority of the Muslims migrated to Al-Madinah.

Then the Movement entered its third stage under totally changed conditions. Now that the Muslim Community had succeeded in founding a regular state, an armed encounter ensued with the exponents of the old order of ignorance. Besides this, the Jews and the Christians came into conflict with it, even though they also professed to be the followers of Prophets. It had also to deal with different kinds of hypocrite 'Muslims' who had somehow or other entered its fold. But in spite of all those obstacles, the Movement succeeded in subduing the whole of Arabia after a hard struggle of ten years and was in a position to extend its universal message of reform to the outer world.

As, by and by, several changes took place in this stage also, and every changed condition had its own special problems, so Allah revealed to the Holy Prophet the kind of discourses required for any particular occasion. That is why some of these were couched in the fiery rhetoric of a warner and the others in the form of the roval edicts of the lawgiver. Some adopted the method of a teacher, trainer and reformer and taught the principles and the methods of organising a community, of building up a state and of constructing a good civilisation for the conduct of different affairs of life. Others gave instructions for dealing with the hypocrites or the unbelievers, who had come under the protection of the Islamic State. Then in some of these discourses, the Muslims were taught the kind of relations they should have with the people of the Book and with the belligerent powers and with their own allies. In others they were taught, trained and organised to carry out their obligations as vicegerents of the Lord of the Universe. Some gave instructions for their guidance, and warned them of their weaknesses and exhorted them to sacrifice their lives and properties in the way of Allah. Others taught the moral lessons they needed in defeat and victory, adversity and prosperity, war and peace. In short, these trained them to carry on the missionary work for the propagation of Islam as the successors of the Holy Prophet. Then some discourses invited to Islam the people of the Book, the hypocrites, the unbelievers and the blasphemers, or rebuked them for their hard-heartedness or warned them of the doom in store for them or admonished them for neglecting lessons from the stories and events of the past, so as to leave no excuse for their sticking to the wrong ways of life.

This is the background of the surahs that were revealed during the ten years at Al-Madinah. It is obvious that their style had to be different from that of the Makki Sprahs.

Style

It must have become clear from the above that the revelation of the Ouran began simultaneously with the beginning of the Islamic Movement and continued for twenty-three years. The different portions of the Quran were revealed according to the requirements of the various phases of the Movement. It is thus obvious that a book like this cannot have the kind of uniformity of style which is followed in formal books on religion and the like. It should also be kept in mind that the various portions of the Ouran, both long and short, were not meant to be published in the form of pamphlets at the time of their revelation but were to be delivered as addresses and promulgated as such. Hence they could not be in the style of a written work. Moreover, these addresses were necessarily of a different nature from that of the lectures of a professor; therefore their style would naturally be different from them also. The Holy Prophet was entrusted with a special mission and had to appeal both to the emotions and to the intellect; he had to deal with people of different mentalities and cope with different situations and various kinds of experiences during the course of his mission. Such a person has to do all that is required for extending a message and for leading a movement. He has to impress the different aspects of his message on people's minds in order to change the established world of ideas, and to appeal to the feelings and emotions in order to counteract the forces of his opponents. He has also to train and reform his followers and to imbue them with spirit and courage, and to refute the arguments of opponents and to expose their moral weaknesses and so on. That is why the style of the discourses that Allah sent down to His Messenger had to be what suited the requirements of a Movement. It is, therefore, wrong to seek the style of a formal book or that of college lectures in the dicourses of the Ouran.

That also explains why the same things are repeated over and over again in the Quran. A mission and a movement naturally demand that only those things should be presented which are required at a particular stage and that nothing should be said about the requirements of the next stage. That is why the same things are repeated over and over again as long as the movement remains in the same stage, no matter whether it remains there for mouths or for years. Of course these things have been differently worded and styled to avoid monotony, and couched in a beautiful and dignified language to make them effective and impressive. Moreover, it repeats at suitable places its basic creed and principles in order to keep the Movement strong at every stage. That is why those surahs which were revealed at a particular stage of the Movement generally deal with the same topics. though, of course, in different words and in various forms. Moreover, all the surahs of the Quran contain references to the basic creed, i.e., the Unity of Allah, His attributes, the Hereafter and accountability, punishment and reward, Prophethood, belief in the Book etc. . . They all teach piety, fortitude, endurance, faith and trust in Allah and the like, just because these virtues could not be neglected at any stage of the Movement. If any of these bases had been weakened at any stage even in the least, the Islamic Movement could not have made any progress in its true spirit.

Order

A little thinking in the light of the difference between the Makki and the Madani surahs will also answer the question why the strahs of the Quran were not arranged in the sequence in which they were revealed. This question is also important because it has been used by the enemies of Islam to create misunderstandings about the Quran and make ridiculous conjectures about the present arrangement of the surahs. They are of the opinion that "Muhammad's (Allah's peace be upon him) followers published it, without any discernable order as to chronology or otherwise; merely, trying as would seem, to put the longest chapters first........"

Such conjectures as this are based on ignorance of the wisdom underlying the order of the Quran. Though it was to be the Book for all times, it had to be revealed piece-meal in twenty-three years according to the needs and requirements of the different stages through which the Islamic Movement was passing. It is obvious that the sequence of the revelations that suited the gradual evolution of the Movement could not in any way be suitable after the completion of the Quran. Then another order, suited to the changed conditions, was needed. In the early stages of the movement the Quran addressed those people who were totally ignorant of Islam and, therefore, naturally it had first of all to teach them the basic articles of Faith. But after its completion the Quran was primarily concerned with those who had accepted Islam and formed a community for carrying on the work entrusted to it by the Holy Prophet. Obviously, the order of the complete Book had to be different from its chronological order to suit the requirements of the Muslim Community for all times. Then the Quran had, first of all, to acquaint the Muslims thoroughly with their duties concerning the regulation of their lives. It had also to prepare them for carrying its message to the outer world which was ignorant of Islam. It had also to warn them of the mischlefs and evils that appeared among the followers of the former Prophets so that they should be on their guard against them. Hence Al-Baqarah and similar Madani surahs, and not Al-'Alaq and similar Makki surahs, had to be placed in the beginning of the Ouran.

In this connection, another thing should also be kept in view. It does not suit the purpose of the Quran that all the strains dealing with similar topics should be grouped together. In order to avoid one-sidedness at any stage of its study, it is essential that the Makki surahs should intervene between the Madani strains and that the Madani strains should follow the Makki surahs, and that the surahs revealed at the earliest stages of the Movement should come between those revealed in the later stages so that the entire picture of the complete Islam should always remain before the reader. That is the wisdom of the present order.

It should also be noted that the surahs of the Quran were not arranged in the present order by his successors but by the Holy Prophet himself under the guidance of Allah. Whenever a surah was revealed, he would send for one of his amanuenses and dictate it word for word and direct him to place it after such and such and before such and such a surah. Like-wise in the case of a discourse or passage or verse that was not meant to be an independent surah by itseif, he would direct him to the exact place where it was to be put in the surah of which it was to form a part. Then he used to recite the Quran during the Ṣalāt (prescribed prayer) and on other occasions in the same order. Thus it is an established fact that the surahs of the Quran were arranged in the present order on the same day that the Quran was completed by the one to whom it was revealed under the guidance of the One who revealed it.

Compilation

Allah Who revealed the Quran Himself made arrangements for its safety and security for ever.

No sooner was a passage of the Quran revealed than it was recorded on leaves of date-palm, barks of trees, bones etc., at the dictation of the Holy Prophet and all these pieces were put in a bag. Besides this, some of his Companions themselves wrote these pieces for their own use. At the same time, the Muslims committed these passages to memory as they had to recite them during Salat which was obligatory from the very beginning of Islam.

Though many Companions had committed the whole of the Ouran to memory during the life-time of the Holy Prophet, it had not been compiled in book form. But immediately after his death, an event occurred that necessitated this work. A furious storm of apostasy broke out and many of the Companions, who went to war to suppress it, were killed. Among these martyrs were some of those who had committed the whole of the Quran to memomy. Then it occurred to Hadrat 'Umar that necessary steps should be taken to preserve the Ouran intact in its original form against any and every kind of danger and that it was not wise to depend exclusively upon those who had learnt it by heart. He, therefore, urged that it was essential to put the whole of it in black and white in the form of an authenticated book. He tried to impress the necessity of this step on Hadrat Abu Bakr, who at first showed hesitation to do what the Holy Prophet had not done. But after some discussion, he agreed to it. Accordingly, he entrusted this work to Hadrat Zaid bin Thabit who also showed hesitation at first like Hadrat Aba Bakr and for the same reason, but at last he was convinced and he undertook this historic work.

And he was best qualified for this work. He had frequently acted as an amanuensis to the Holy Prophet and was one of those Companions who had learnt the Ouran directly from him. Moreover he also was present on the occasion when the Holy Prophet recited the whole of the completed Ouran to angel Gabriel. Arrangements were, therefore, made to collect and gather all the written pieces of the Quran left by the Holy Prophet, and those in the possession of his Companions.* Then with the co-operation of those Companions who had committed the whole or any part of the Ouran to memory word for word, all the written pieces were compared with each other for verification. Hadrat Zaid would not take down anything in his manuscript unless all the three sources tallied with one another. Thus was compiled one correct, authenticated and complete copy. This authenticated copy of the whole Ouran was kept in the house of Hadrat Hafsah (Hadrat 'Umar's daughter, and one of the wives of the Holy Prophet) and it was proclaimed that anyone, who desired might make a copy of it or compare with it the copy he already possessed.

As regards the sequence of the strahs, Zaid followed the same order that was followed by the Holy Prophet himself because he could not and would not have followed any other. He was so particular about following the Holy Prophet in every-thing he did, that, at first, he hesitated to undertake the work of the compilation, just because this had not been done during the life-time of the Holy Prophet. It is, therefore, wrong to suppose that the strains were arranged in the existing order after the death of the Holy Prophet. The very fact, that the Holy Prophet recited the whole of the Quran twice before Gabriel during the last Ramadan * of his life, is a clear proof c' the fact that he must have followed some order. And we have already cited a Tradition to the effect that Hadrat Zaid attended the second of these two last recitals. Likewise those Companions, who had committed the whole of the Quran to memory, must have done it in some order and that, too, could not have been any other but the one followed and taught by the Holy Prophet.

Imam Malik says, "The Quran was compiled in the way the Companions heard it from the Holy Prophet." Moreover, at several places, the Quran speaks of itself as a Book. For example, in Surah Muzzammil, an early Makki revelation, Allah says to the Holy Prophet, ".....recite the Quran in order......" LXIII: 4. This also shows that the Quran was meant to be a book from the beginning of the revelation and a book must follow some order.

Difference of Dialects

Though Arabic was the common language of the whole of Arabia, there existed some variations in the dialects of different parts and tribes.

For obvious reasons the Ouran was revealed in the dialect of the Quraish of Makkah. However, the Arabs living in different parts of the country were, at first allowed, for the sake of facility, to recite it according to the dialect of their own clan or district but this did not produce any difference in its meanings. But when Islam spread beyoud the boundaries of Arabia and the Arabs came into contact with the non-Arab Muslims, the Arabic language gradually began to be influenced by its new environment. Then it was feared that the different dialects of the Quran might give rise to various kinds; of mischief and might cause disputes among persons having different dialects. They might even begin to accuse one another of tampering with the Ouran. Moreover, there was the danger that the pure and beautiful Arabic of the Quran might be altered or changed by those Arabs who came in contact with non-Arabs. Therefore, Caliph 'Uthman, in consultation with other Companions of the Holy Prophet, decided that the authenticated copies of the Quran compiled by the order of Hadrat Abu Bakr, should alone be used in the whole of the Muslim world, and the use of all other copies in any other dialect or idiom should be prohibited. As a precautionary measure, he had all the other existing copies burnt to ward off any possibility of future confusion and misunderstanding. For instance, some of the Companions had noted down explanatory words and comments on the margins of their copies and it was feared that these might get mixed up with the original text of the Quran. Though such a possibility did not exist at that time, it was an act of most prudent foresight to make the Quran safe and secure against any possible alteration in the future by burning all other copies.

The Ouran, which is now in use all over the world, is the exact copy of the Ouran which was compiled by the order of Hadrat Abū Bakr and copies of which were officially sent by Hadrat 'Uthman to different places. Even today many very old copies are found in big libraries in different parts of the world and if anyone has any doubt as to whether the Quran has remained absolutely safe and secure against every kind of change and alteration, he can compare any copy of the Quran with any of these copies and reassure himself. Moreover, if one gets a copy of the Ouran from a bookseller, say, of Algeria in Africa in the West and compares it with a copy obtained from a bookseller, say, of Java in the East, one will find both the copies to be identical with each other and also with the copies of the Ouran made during the time of Hadrat 'Uthman. If even then anyone has any doubt left in his mind, he is advised to take any copy of the Ouran from anywhere in the world and ask anyone, out of the millions who know the Ouran by heart, to recite it word for word from the beginning to the end. He will find that the recitation conforms word for word to the written text. This is a clear and irrefutable proof of the fact that the Quran which is in use today is the same Quran which was presented to the world by Muhammad (Allah's peace be upon him). A sceptic might entertain a doubt about its revelation from Allah, but none can have any doubt whatsoever regarding its authenticity and immunity and purity from any and every kind of addition or omission or alteration, for there is nothing so authentic in the whole human history as this fact about the Ouran that it is the same Ouran that was presented by the Holy Prophet to the world.

Now let us consider the case of the variant readings of the Quran, for their existence has created the misunderstanding that it has not remained intact. The following facts will help us to understand their nature and extent:—

- The Arabic script adopted by the amanuenses of the Holy Prophet during his life-time had neither dots nor vowel points. The same was the case with the copy of the Quran compiled by Hadrat Zaid during the time of Hadrat Abn Bakr and also with its copies circulated by Hadrat 'Uhman.
- 2. Though the correctness of the Quranic text was ensured in the written form, the work of its propagation was done orally because of the general illiteracy and scarcity of paper. Little difficulty was, however, felt by the literate Arabs in deciphering this script. There were thousands of such persons who had learnt the whole of the Quran by heart from the Holy Prophet himself and his Companions. They followed and taught the same reading that they had learnt from the Holy Prophet and his Companions.

 Hadrat 'Uhman not only sent an authenticated copy of the Quran to the different centres of Islam, but also sent a Quri* along with it in order to preserve that correct reading which was taught by the Holy Prophet himself.

4. With the passage of time it was felt that there should be vowel points to preserve the correct reading of the Qurān. Accordingly, at the instance of Zaid, the Governor of Başrah (45 to 53 A.H.) dots were assigned for vowel points. Then during the reign of Abdul-Malik (65-85 A.H.) Hajjāi-bin-Yasuf appointed scholars to assign new symbols for vowel points and dots to distinguish between the similar letters. The same practice continues to the present time.

From the above historical fauts, it must have become clear that the reading of the Quran (with a few minor variations) is the same as practised and taught by the Holy Prophet. All the scholars and Quraneo of the Quran have been unanimous in asserting that only that reading will be authentic which (a) conforms to the script of the copy circulated by Hadrat Uthman and (b) complies with the lexicon of Arabic, its usages, idioms and grammar, and above all, (c) is traceable by genuine and continuous links to the Holy Prophet himself. That is why there are only a few variations in its reading and those are not contradictory in their meanings but enlarge their scope and make them more comprehensive. Thus there is absolutely no doubt that the Holy Prophet himself practised those various readings in the instances which exist today, and they make the meanings more comprehensive.

For example, let us take the two authentic readings of (a) verse 3 of Al-Fstihal and (b) verse 6 of Al-Ms'-idah. One reading of I:3, that is, "مَلْكُ يَرُمُ اللَّهِنَ" means the 'Master of the Day of Judgement' and the other reading "مَلْكُ يَرُمُ اللَّهِنَ" means, "the Sovereign of the Day of Judgement 'It is obvious that these two readings make the meaning of the verse all the more clear. (c) One reading of V:6, that is, "وَالْمُسَاوُلُ وَجُوهُ مُكُمُ ... وَالْمُحَلِّكُمُ" wash your faces ... and (wash) your feet' as is done at the time of performing ablution with naked feet. The second reading, that is, ... الله المنافعة المنافعة second reading allows one to wipe one's feet with wet hands, provided that one had washed one's feet and put on thick socks after the performance of the previous ablution. This concession holds good for 24 hours at home and for 72 hours during a journey. It is obvious from the two instances that in the variant readings, there is absolutely no contradiction in essence. On the other hand, they make the meanings all the more comprehensive. And the same is true of all the other variant readings.

Universality

Everyone knows that the Quran claims to provide guidance for the whole of mankind, but when he reads it, he finds that it is mainly addressed to the Arabs, who lived at the time of its revelation. Though at times it also addresses other people and mankind in general, it mainly discusses those things which appealed to the taste of the Arabs and were linked with their environment, history and customs. This naturally gives rise to the question: Why does the Quran contain so many local and national elements of the period in which it was revealed, when it was meant for the guidance of the whole of mankind? Those, who do not understand the wisdom of this, begin to argue like this: the Quran was really meant for the reform of the Arabs of that period but later on, somehow or other, the claim was made that it was a guidance for the whole of mankind and for all ages.

If one does not raise this objection merely for the sake of objection but really wants to understand the matter. I would advise him to read the Ouran and mark the parts which give rise to this doubt. He should then point out any tenet, idea or principle there-in that might have been meant particularly for the Arabs of that period only. He should lav his finger on any moral principle, practical rule or regulation that is not of universal application and was meant only for the Arabs of that period, time and place. The mere fact, that the Ouran refutes the blasphemous creeds and condemns the evil customs of a particular people, living at a particular time and place and bases arguments for the Unity of God on the material gathered from their environment, is not a sufficient proof to establish the allegation that its invitation and appeal was local and temporary. We should examine the question closely and decide whether what it says regarding the blasphemous people of Arabia is or is not equally true of every period and every place, and whether we can or cannot apply the same arguments with equal force to refute the blasphemy of every time and every place, and whether we can or cannot use everywhere, with minor changes, the same arguments that the Ouran puts forward for the Unity of God. If the answer to these questions is in the affirmative, then there is no reason why such a universal revelation should be dubbed as local or temporary, simply because it was addressed to a particular community and during a particular period. There is no philosophy, no way of life and no religion in the world which expounds, from the beginning to the end, everything in the abstract without making any reference to particular cases or concrete examples, for it is simply impossible to build a pattern of life merely in the abstract. Even if we suppose, for the sake of argument, that it were possible to do so, most surely such a system will always remain merely a theory on paper and will never take a practical shape.

Moreover, it is neither necessary nor useful to start from the very outset on international lines any ideological movement that is meant to be ultimately international. The only right method of beginning this will be to start the movement in the country of its origin and present with full force its theories and fundamental principles which are to form the basis of the required system of life. Then its exponents should impress these things on the minds of their own people who have a common language, common habits and common customs. They should first of all put these principles into practice in their own country and prove their worth by evolving a happy and successful system of life. This will naturally attract other nations, and their intelligent people will themselves come forward to understand the movement and start it in their own countries. Thus a certain ideological system does not become national simply because it was at first presented to a particular nation and its arguments were addressed to a particular people. As a matter of fact, what distinguishes a national from an international and a temporary from a permanent system is this: a national system aims either to establish its own superiority or its special claim over other nations or presents principles and theories which, by their very nature, cannot be applied to other nations. On the other hand, an international system grants equal status and equal rights to all human beings and puts forward principles of universal application. Moreover, the principles of a temporary system become impracticable with the passage of time while the # studies the Quran in the light of the above, one will come to the Complete Code conclusion that its teachings are of universal application.

principles of a permanent system are applicable to all times. If one Another thing that causes mental confusion is the oft-repeated assertion that the Ouran is a complete code of life. But when one reads it, one does not find detailed rules and regulations regarding social, cultural, political and economic problems etc. . . One is, therefore, baffled to see that it does not contain any detailed regulations even about Salat and Zakat which are such important obligatory duties that the Quran itself lays great emphasis on them over and over again. That is why a casual reader cannot understand how this Book can be called a complete code. This confusion is caused because the objector loses sight of the fact that Allah did not only send down the Book but also appointed His Messenger to demonstrate its teachings by putting them into actual practice. To illustrate this, we may take the case of the construction of a building. If only a plan of the proposed building is laid down and no engineer is appointed to supervise and direct its construction, then every detail must be supplied. But if an engineer is also appointed along with the plan to construct the building on the spot, obviously there is no need for a detailed plan. In that case only a sketch with its essential features will be quite enough. It would, therefore, be wrong to find fault with such a plan as being incomplete. As Allah sent His Messenger along with the Ouran, only general principles and absolutely essential instructions were needed and not their details. Hence the main function of the Ouran is to present clearly the intellectual and moral bases of the Islamic Way and reinforce them with arguments and appeals to the heart. As far as the practical side of the building of the Islamic Way of life is concerned, it only defines the limits and bounds of every aspect of life without giving detailed rules and regulations. Moreover it fixes sign-posts for guidance at certain important places to show how those parts are to be constructed in accordance with Allah's will. The actual work of building the Islamic Way of life, in accordance with the instructions contained in the Book, was entrusted to the Holy Prophet, who was specially sent to set up the pattern of life for the individual, for the society and for the Islamic State to be constructed practically according to the principles of the Quran. Thus the Quran is a complete code in the sense that is to be taken along with the Sunnah of the Holy Prophet.

Another question which troubles the minds is that of divergencies in the interpretation of the Quran. People say that 'on the one hand, Quran condemns very severely those people who create differences in the Book of Allah and cause division in their religion; on the other hand, so many different interpretations of the injunctions of the Quran have been made that there is hardly to be found any Command with an agreed interpretation. And it is not the people of the later periods alone who differ with one another but even the great scholars of the early period, including the Companions of the Holy Prophet and their followers, did not all agree in every detail in regard to Commands and Prohibitions. Do all these people then deserve the condemnation pronounced in the Quran for making different interpretations? If this is not so, then what kind of differences of opinion have been condemned in the Quran?

The problem is very vast and extensive and this is not the place for its detailed discussion. Suffice it to say here that the Quran is not against healthy difference of opinion in the interpretation of its intentions, provided that (a) there is agreement on the basic principles of Islam among those who differ and (b) they remain united within the fold of the Muslim Community. The Quran deprecates that kind of divergence which starts with self-worship and crookedness and leads to disputes and sectarianism. As the two kinds of differences are neither alike in their nature nor in their results, they should not be placed in one and the same category. The first kind of divergence is essential for progress and is the very soul of life and every community of intelligent and thinking people must encourage it. Its existence is a sign of life and only that community can afford to repress it which desires to have only blockheads in it. The second kind of divergence, as everyone knows, dis-integrates the community which nourishes it: therefore its appearance in a community is not a sign of health but a symptom of disease and it can never produce good results.

These two kinds of divergencies of opinion may further be illustrated by the following:-

Supposing there are two scholars or two judges, who agree, on principle, that Allah and His Messenger alone are entitled to obedience and that the Ouran and the Sunnah are the final authority to determine all laws and regulations. They may then differ in the details or in the decision of a case, provided that neither of them makes his opinion as the criterion of Islam or un-Islam nor declares the other to be outside its fold on account of such a difference of opinion. They may put forward their own arguments in support of their opinions and leave the decision to the public or to the highest court, if it is some judicial matter, or to the legislative body of the community, if it concerns them, Then either one of the two different opinions will prevail or both will be accepted. But it should be noted particularly that no difference can be allowed in the basic principles of Islam nor in such matters as may lead to the formation of a new community. For instance, it would be wrong that a scholar or a jurist or a saint or a leader should form an opinion about some matter (which Allah and His Messenger do not consider to be basic) and declare it to be a basic principle of Islam and then denounce all those who differ from him to be outside its fold, and then on this basis, proceed to form a community of his own followers saving. "This is the real Muslim Community and all outside it are doomed to Hell. Therefore, if you are a Muslim, come and join it, otherwise you are not one". It is this kind of difference of opinion which the Ouran condemns. As regards the first kind of difference, several instances of it occurred during the time of the Holy Prophet himself. He not only permitted it but also spoke well of it, for it was a healthy sign, which showed that intelligent people of the Community were busy thinking and making research. This also showed that the intelligent people of the Community were taking interest in Islam and its teachings and were trying to find solutions for the problems of life within Islam and not outside it. It also provided a proof of the golden rule that while the Community should remain united on principles, it should, at the same time, grant freedom of research to its thinkers within due limits so that the doors of progress should remain open.

Suggestions for Study

Finally, here are a few suggestions for the study of the Quran :

As different people turn to the Quran with different aims and objects, it is not possible to offer any general advice about the method of its study so as to fulfil the requirements of all. I am, however, interested only in those people who want to understand it and seek guidance from it for the solution of human problems. I will, therefore, offer some suggestions which may help satisfy their needs and remove their difficulties.

The one pre-requisite for understanding the Qurun is to study it with an open and detached mind. Whether one believes it to be a revealed book or not, one should, as far as possible, free one's mind of bias in favour of or against it and get rid of all pre-conceived opinions and then approach it with the sole desire of understanding it. Those people who study it with preconceived notions of their own, read only their own ideas between its lines and cannot, therefore, grasp what the Qurun wants to convey. It is obvious that this method of study can never be fruitful even with other books but it is utterly fruitless when applied to the study of the Ourun.

There is another thing which must be kept in view. If one wants to have merely a cursory acquaintance with the contents of the Ouran. then perhaps it might suffice for him to read it once. But, if one wishes to have a deep knowledge of it, one will have to go through it several times and each time from a different point of view. Those who desire to make a thorough study of the Ouran, should read it at least twice with the sole purpose of understanding, as a whole, the system of life it presents. One should also try to find out its fundamentals and the way of life it aims to build on them. During this preliminary study, if some questions occur in his mind, the reader should note them down and patiently continue his study, for he is likely to find their answers somewhere in the Quran itself. If he finds answers to his questions, he should note them down along with the questions. But if he does not find an answer to any question in his first reading, he should patiently make the second reading. I can say it in the light of my own experience that in the second reading hardly any question remains un-answered.

After getting a general insight into the Quran in this way, one should begin its detailed study and take down notes of the different aspects of its teachings. For instance, one should note down what pattern of life it approves and what it disapproves. One should note down the qualities of a good man and those of a bad man, side by side, in order to bring both the patterns clearly before his mind simultaneously. Similarly, one should note down, side by side, those things which lead to the success and salvation of man and those which lead to his failure and ruin. In the same way, he should put down, under different headings, the teachings and instruction of the Quran about creed, morality, duties, obligations, civilization, culture, economics, politics, law, social system, peace, war and other human problems. These notes should be consolidated to form a complete sketch of each aspect of the teachings and then fitted together to form a complete system of life.

Then, if one desires to know the Qurānic solution of a certain human problem he should first make a study of the relevant literature, both ancient, and note down the basic issues. He should also make use of the research so far made into the problem and note down the points at issue. He should then study the Qurān with a view to finding out the answers to those issues. I can say from my own personal experience that when one studies the Qurān with a view to making research into any problem, one will find an answer to it even in those verses which one had skipped over without ever imagining that if lay hidden therein.

It is suggested that each paragraph of "THE MEANING OF THE QURAN" may be made the unit of study. At first it should be studied from the original Arabic Text with the help of some literal translation and then with the help of "THE MEANING of the QURAN." It is expected that the meanings of the Quran will surely become clear by the grace of God.

But in spite of all these devices, one cannot grasp the inspiring spirit of the Quran, unless one beings to put its message into practice. for the Quran is neither a book of abstract ideas and theories which may bestudied in an easy chair nor is it a book of religious enigmas which may be unravelled in monasteries and universities. It is a Book that has been sent down to invite people to start a movement and to lead its followers and direct their activities towards the achievement of its mission. One has, therefore, to go to the battlefield of life to understand its real meaning. That was why a quiet and amiable person like Muhammad (Allah's peace be upon him) had to come out of his seclusion and start the Islamic Movement and fight against the rebellious world. It was the Quran that urged him to declare war against every kind of falsehood and engage in conflict with the leaders of disbelief without any consideration of the consequences. Then it attracted good souls from every home and gathered them under the banner of its leader in order to fight against the upholders of the old order who organised themselves into a gang to oppose them. During this long and bitter struggle between right and wrong, truth and falsehood, which continued for twenty-three years or so, the Quran went on guiding the Movement in every phase and at every stage, until it succeeded in establishing the Islamic Way of life in its perfection.

It is thus obvious that one cannot possibily grasp the truths contained in the Quran by the mere recitation of its words. For this purpose one must take active part in the conflict between belief and unbelief, Islam and un-Islam, truth and falsehood. One can understand it only if one takes up its Message, invites the world to accept it and moves on and on in accordance with its, Guidance. Thus alone will one experience and understand all that which happened during the revelation of the Quran. One will meet with the same conditions that were experienced at Makkah, Ta-'if and Habash and pass through the same kind of fire that had to be passed through at Badr, Uhd, Hunain, Tabük etc. One will meet with Abū Jahls and Abū Lahabs and come across hypocrites, the double-faced, the "Jews", in short, every type of people mentioned in the Quran. Incidentally, this is a wonderful experience of its own kind and worth the trial.

While passing through any one of these stages of this experience, one will find some verses and some surahs of the Quran, which will themselves tell that they were revealed at such and such a stage and brought such and such instructions for the guidance of the Movement. In this way the Quran will lay bare its spirit even though one might not be able to understand all the lexical meanings of its words and solve all the intricacies of grammar and rhetoric. The same formula applies to its Commandments, its moral teachings, its instructions about economics and culture and its laws regarding different aspects of human life. These things can never be understood unless they are put into practice. It is thus obvious that those individuals and communities who discard it from practical life, cannot understand its meaning and imbibe its spirit by mere lip-service to it.

This is from me and true knowlege is with Allah; I have full trust in Him and turn to Him for true guidance.

As I do not intend to discuss in the Introduction all the problems which might arise during the study of the Quran, I have purposely left untouched those questions that might arise during the study of some verses or strahs, for I want to deal with them in "THE MEAN-ING OF THE QURAN" at their proper places. I have taken up only those questions and problems which pertain to the general study of the Quran as a whole. The reader is, therefore, requested to defer giving his final judgement on such questions till he has read the whole of "The MEANING." Then, if he finds that some questions have not been answered at all or have not been dealt with fully, he should let me know about it for future consideration.

PREFACE TO FIRST EDITION, 1934

I DO not wish to write a long Preface. I wish merely to explain the history of my Project, the scope and plan of this work, and the objects I have held in view.

In separate introductory Notes I have mentioned the useful books to which I have referred, under the headings: Commentaries on the Qur-an; Translations of the Qur-an; and Useful Works of Reference. I have similarly explained the system which I have followed in the transliteration of Arabic words and names; the Abbreviations I have used; and the principal divisions of the Qur-an.

It may be asked: Is there any need for a fresh English Translation? To those who ask this question I commend a careful consideration of the facts which I have set out in my Note on Translations. After they have read it, I would invite them to take any particular passage in Part I, say ii. 74 or ii. 102, or ii. 164 in the second Part and compare it with any previous version they choose. If they find that I have helped them even the least bit further in understanding its meaning, or appreciating its beauty, or catching something of the grandeur of the original, I would claim its beauty or the continuation of the properties of o

It is the duty of every Muslim, man, woman, or child, to read the Qur-an and understand it according to his own capacity. If any one of us attains to some knowledge-7r understanding of it by study, contemplation, and the test of life, both outward and inward, it is his duty, according to his capacity, to instruct others, and share with them the joy and peace which result from contact with the spiritual world. The Qur-an—indeed every religious book—has to be read, not only with the tongue and voice and eyes, but with the best light that our intellect can supply, and even more, with the treust and purest light which our heart and conscience can give us. It is in this spirit that I would have my readers approach the Qur-according to the contract of the contra

It was between the ages of four and five that I first learned to read its Arabic words, to revel in its rhythm and music, and wonder at its meaning. I have a dim recollection of the Khaim ceremony which closed that stage. It was called "completion": it really just begon a spiritual awakening that has gone on ever since. My revered father taught me Arabic, but I must have imbibed from him into my innermost being something more,—something which told me that all the worlds whoughts, all the worlds most beautiful languages and literatures, are but vehicles for that ineffable message which comes to the heart in rare moments of ceatage. The soul of mysticism and cortany is in the Qur-ân, a well as that plain guidance for the plain man which a world in a hurry affects to consider as sufficient. It is good to make this personal confession, to an age in which it is in the highest degree unfashionable to speak of religion or spiritual peace or consolation, an age in which words like these draw forth only derision, pity, or contempt.

I have explored Western lands, Western manners, and the depths of Western thought and Western learning, to an extent which has rarely fallen to the lot of an Eastern mortal. But I have never lost touch with my Eastern heritage. Through all my successes and failures I have learned to rely more and more upon the one true thing in all life—the voice that speaks in a tongue above that of mortal man. For me the embodiment of that voice has been in the noble words of the Arabic Qur an, which I have tried to translate for myself and apply to my experience again and again. The service of the Qur-an has been the pride and the privilege of many Muslims. I felt that with such life-experience as has fallen to my lot, my service to the Qur-an should be to present it in a fitting garb in English. That ambition I have cherished in my mind for more than forty years. I have collected books and materials for it. I have visited places, undertaken journeys, taken notes, sought the society of men, and tried to explore their thoughts and bearts, in order to equip myself for the task. Sometimes I have considered it too stupendous for me,-the double task of understanding the original, and reproducing its poblity, its beauty, its poetry, its grandeur, and its sweet practical reasonable application to everyday experience. Then I have blamed myself for lack of courage, - the spiritual courage of men who dared all in the Cause which was so dear to them.

Two sets of apparently accidental circumstances at last decided me. A man's life is subject to inner storms far more devastating than those in the physical world around him. In such a storm, in the bitter appuish of a personal sorrow which nearly unseated my reason and made life seem meaningless, a new hope was born out of a systematic pursuit of my long-cherished project. Watered by tears, my manuscript began to grow in depth and earnestness if not in bulk. I guarded it like a secret treasure. Wanderer that I am, I carried it about, thousands of miles, to all sorts of countries and among all sorts of people. At length, in the city of Lahore, I happened to mention the matter to some young people who held me in respect and affection. They showed an enthusiasm and an eagerness which surprised me. They almost took the matter out of my hands. They asked for immediate publication. I had various bits ready, but not even one complete Sipara. They made me promise to complete at least one Sibara before I left Lahore. As if by magic, a publisher, a katth (calligraphist to write the Arabic Text), an engraver of blocks for such text, and a printer were found, all equally anxious to push forward the scheme. Blessed be youth, for its energy and determination. "Where others flinch, rash youth will dare ! "

Gentle and discerning reader! what I wish to present to you is an English Interpretation, side by side with the Arabic Text. The English shall be, not a mere substitution of one word for another, but the best expression I can give to the fullest meaning which I can understand from the Arabic Text. The rhythm, music, and exalted tone of the original should be reflected in the English Interpretation. It may be but a faint reflection, but such beauty and power as my pen can command shall be brought to its service. I want to make English itself an Islamic language. if such a person as I can do it. And I must give you all the accessory aid which I can. In rhythmic prose, or free verse (whichever you like to call it), I prepare the atmosphere for you in a running Commentary. Introducing the subject generally, I come to the actual Suras. Where they are short, I give you one or two paragraphs of my rhythmic Commentary to prepare you for the Text. Where the Sura is long. I introduce the subject-matter in short appropriate paragraphs of the Commentary from time to time, each indicating the particular verses to which it refers. The paragraphs of the running Commentary are numbered consecutively, with some regard to the connection with the preceding and the following paragraphs. It is possible to read this running rhythmic Commentary by itself to get a general bird's-eye view of the contents of the Holy Book before you proceed to the study of the Book itself.

The text in English is printed in larger type than the running Commentary, in order to distinguish, at a glance, the substance from the shadow. It is also displayed differently, in parallel columns with the Arabic Text. Each Sura and the verse of each Sura is separately numbered, and the numbers are shown page by page. The system of numbering the verses has not been uniform in previous translations. European editors and translators have allowed their numbering to diverge considerably from that accepted in the East. This causes confusion in giving and verifying references. The different Qirasts sometimes differ as to the punctuation stops and the numbering of the verses. This is not a vital matter, but it causes confusion in references. It is important that at least in Islamic countries one system of numbering should be adopted. I have adopted mainly that of the Egyptian edition published under the authority of the King of Egypt. This will probably be accepted in Egypt and in Arabic-speaking countries, as those countries generally look up to Egypt in matters of literature. I am glad to see that the text shortly to be published by the Anjuman-i-Himayat-i-Islam of Lahore is following the same system of numbering. I recommend to other publishers in India the same good example. If once this is done we shall have a uniform system of numbering. I have retained the numbering of Sections, as it is universally used in the Arabic copies, and marks a logical division of the Suras. I have supplied a further aid to the reader in indicating sub-divisions of the Sections into paragraphs. They are not numbered, but are distinguished by the use of a flowery initial letter.

In translating the Text I have aired no views of my own, but followed the received Commentators. Where they differ among themselves, I have had to chose what appeared to me to be the most reasonable opinion from all points of view. Where it is a question imprely of words, I have not considered the question important enough to discuss in the Notes, but where it is a question of substance, I hope adequate explanations will be found in the Notes. Where I have departed from the literal translation in order-to express the spirit of the original better in English, I have explained the literal meaning in the Notes. For example, see ii. 104 n. and ii. 26 n. In choosing an English word for an Arabic word a translator neckssarily excessible own judgment and may be unconsciously expressing a point of view, but that is inswitable.

Let me explain the scope of the Notes. I have made them as short as possible consistently with the object I have in view, vis., to give to the English reader, scholar as well as general reader, a fairly complete but concise view of what I understand to be the meaning of the Text. To discuss theological controversies or enter into polemical arguments I have considered outside my scope. Such discussions and arguments may be necessary and valuable, but they should find a place in separate trestises, if only out of respect to the Holy Book. Besides, such discussions leave no room for more important matters on which present-day readers desire information. In this respect our Commentators have not always been discreet. On questions of law, the Qur-an lays down general principles, and these I have explained. I have avoided technical details: these will be found discussed in their proper place in my book on "Anglo-Muhammadan Law." Nor have I devoted much space to grammatical or philological Notes. On these points I consider that the labours of the vast body of our learned men in the past have left little new to say now. There is usually not much controversy, and I have accepted their conclusions without setting out the reasons for them. Where it has been necessary for the understanding of the Text to refer to the particular occasion for the revelation of a particular verse, I have done so briefly, but have not allowed it to absorb a disproportionate amount of space. It will be found that every verse revealed for a particular occasion has also a general meaning. The particular occasion and the particular people concerned have passed away, but the general meaning and its application remain true for all time. What we are concerned about now, in the fourteenth century of the Hijra, is: what guidance can we draw for ourselves from the message of God?

I spoke of the general meaning of the verses. Every earnest and reverent student of the Qur-fan, as he proceeds with his study, will find, with an inward joy difficult to describe, how this general meaning also enlarges as his own capacity for understanding increases. It is like a traveller climbing a mountain: the higher he goes, the farther he sees. From a literary point of view the poet Keats has described his feeling when he discovered Chanman's Homer:—

Then felt I like some watcher of the skies When a new planet swims into his ken, Or like stout Corter when with eagle eyes He stared at the Pacific,—and all his men Looked at each other with a wild surmise,—Silent, won a peak in Darien.

How much greater is the joy and sense of wonder and miracle when the Qur. In opens our spiritual eyes! The meaning which we thought we had grasped expands. New worlds are opened out. As we progress, still newer, and again newer worlds "swim into our ken." The miracle deepens and deepens, and almost completely absorbs us. And yet we know that the "face of God"—our final goal—has not yet been reached. We are in the mulk of Sulaiman (Q. ii. 102), which the evil ones denied, belied, and even turned into blasphemy. But we can ignore blasphemy, ridicule and contempt, for we are on the threshold of Realities, and a little perfume from the earden of the Holy One has already eladdened our nostrils.

Such meaning it is most difficult to express. But where I can, I have indicated it in the Notes, in the Commentary, and with the help of the rivthm and the elevated language of the Text.

The Arabic Text I have had printed from photographic blocks made for me by Master Muhammad Sharif. The calligraphy is from the pen of Pit 'Abdul Hamid, with whom I have been in touch and who has complied with my desire for a bold round hand, with the words clearly separated, the vowel points accurately placed over or under the letters to which they relate, and the verses duly numbered and placed in juxtaposition with their English equivalents. Calligraphy occupies an important place in Muslim Art, and it is my desire that my version should not in any way be deficient in this respect.

I have been fortunate in securing the co-operation of Professor Zafar Iqbál in looking over the proofs of the Arabic Text. In connection with the Anjuman's edition of the Arabic Quran he has devoted much time and thought to the correct punctuation of the Text, and he has also investigated its history and problems. I hope he will some day publish these valuable notes. I have been privileged to see the Anjuman's Text before its formal publication. I consider it the most carefully prepared Text of any produced in India, and I have generally followed it in punctuation and the numbering of verses,—the only points on which any difficulties are likely to arise on the Outanic Text.

It has been my desire to have the printing done in the best style possible, with new type, on good glazed paper, and with the best ink procurable. I hope the result will please those who are good enough to approve of the more essential features of the work. The proprietors of the Ripon Press and all their staff, but especially Mr. Badruddin Badr, their Proof Examiner, have taken a keen interest in their work. The somewhat unusual demands made on their time and attention they have met cheerfully, and I am obliged to them. The publisher, Shaikli Muḥammad Ashraf, has thrown himself heart and soul into his work, and I hope the public will appreciate his efforts.

My plan is to issue each. Sipāra as it is ready, at intervals of not more than three months. As the work proceeds, I hope it will be possible to accelerate the pace. The paging will be continuous in the subsequent volumes. The final binding will be in either three or two volumes. It is my intention to provide a complete analytical Index to the whole. I hope all interested will sign the publisher's subscription order in advance.

One final word to my readers. Read, study, and digest the Holy Book. Read slowly, and let it sink into your heart and soul. Such study will, like virtue, be its own reward. If you find anything in this volume to criticise, please let it not spoil your enjoyment of the rest. If you write to me, quoting chapter and verse, I shall be glad to consider your criticism, but let it not vex you if I exercise my own judgment in deciding for myself. Any corrections accepted will be gratefully acknowledged. On the other hand, if there is something that specially pleases you or helps you, please do not hesitate to write to me. I have given up other interests to help you. It will be a pleasure to know that my labour has not been in vain. If you address me care of my Publisher at his Lahore address, he will always forward the letters to me.

PREFACE TO THIRD EDITION, 1938

BESIDES the names which I mentioned in my Preface of 1934, of those who have assisted me in various ways, I have much pleasure in adding a few more at this stage. Khan Sahib Khwije Lahf Ahmad, of the Central Provinces Educational Service, has been a diligent and critical reader of the Parts as issued, and his friendly correspondence has enabled me to correct misprints and elucidate some points. Mr. Fadhi Muhammad Khan, I.F.S., of Labore, have also been helpful in pointing out misprints. Maulvi Muhammad Shaft, Principal of the Oriental College, Labore, has been good enough to answer most readily my queries on questions of scholarship referred to him. To these and other gentlemen, who have favoured, me with correspondence, it have much pleasure in expressing my obligation.

The seal and energy which my publisher, Shaigh Muhammad Ashraf, has thrown into the work, require renewed acknowledgement. For four years he and I have co-operated in a great undertaking, and all processes connected with it have been carried out by loving Muslim hands.

Since I last greeted my readers collectively I have been able to perform the Filgrimage to the holy city of Mecca and the sacred territory around it and seen with my own eyes the city and territory of Medina, with all the country around and between the holy Crities. I have realised for myself the scenes in which the revelations came which I have humbly sought to interpret. I hope that some glimpses of this experience will have been conveyed to my dear readers. Will they pray that God may give me strength to complete this work and to serve Islam in other ways?

COMMENTARIES ON THE QUR-AN

QURANIC literature is so voluminous that no single man can compass a perusal of the whole. Besides the extant works there were innumerable works written for special groups of people or from special points of view or for special purposes, which have perished. And more works are being added every day. The activity in this line has never been greater than it is now.

There is no Book in the world in whose service so much talent, so much labour, so much time and money have been expended as has been the case with the Qur-4n. A mere glance at Imam Suyūti's (d. 911 H.) liqān or Haji Khalifa's (d. 1059 H.) Kashf-us-sunūm will show the encyclopædic volume of the Quranic sciences in their day.

Since then the volume has continued to go on increasing, although it must be admitted that the quality of the later literature on the subject leaves much to be desired. With the retrogression of the Islamic nations in original work in science, art, and philosophy, and the concomitant limitation in their outlook and experience in various phases of intellectual and spiritual life, has come a certain limitation in the free spirit of research and enquiry. The new Renaissance of Islam which is just beginning will, it is hoped, sweep away cohwebs and let in the full light of reason and understanding:

The need for an explanation of the verses of the Qur-an arose quite early. Even before the whole of the Qur-an was revealed, people used to ask the Apostle all sorts of questions as to the meaning of certain words in the verses revealed, or of their bearing on problems as they arose, or details of certain historical or spiritual matters on which they sought more light. The Apostle's answers were carefully stored in the memory of the Companions (as-hab) and were afterwards written down. In the next generation, the Tabi'in, were those who had not personally conversed with the Apostle, like the Companions, but had conversed with the Companions and learned from them. Subsequent generations always went back to establish a chain of evidence through the Tabi'in and the Companions. Through them grew up the science of Hadith or Traditions. As this literature grew, it became necessary to establish strict rules by which the evidence could be examined and tested, so as to separate that which was considered to be establi-hed from that which was doubtful or weak, and that which was to be rejected as unproved. In the evolution of the science of Hadith, it became clear that even among the Companions certain persons had better memories than others, or better opportunities of becoming really acquainted with the Apostle's true meaning, or in other ways, a better title to be called true expositors, and the number of such persons came to be limited to ten only. Similarly the claims of the Tabi'in came to be examined and graded, and so on. Thus arose a new science, in which the names and positions of persons in Hadith literature were examined biographically and in other ways.

The Hadish literature dealt with all sorts of matters, including Theology, Ethics, and Exegesis (explanation of the Qur-an). Exegesis soon became an independent science by itself and was called Tafsir, and the sphere of Tafsir itself began to widen as the experience and knowledge of the Arabs and Arabic writers began to increase. Begines the examination of correct traditions from various kinds and grades of authorities, it began to examine the meaning of words philologically, collecting a vast amount of learning as to root meanings, the usage of the Quraish tribe of Arabs, to which the Apostle belonged, the usage and meaning of words in the purest original Arabic before it became mixed up with foreign idioms and usages by the use of the Arabic language by non-Arabs in Islam, and by the influence of the enormous geographical expansion of the Arab race in the first few centuries of Islam. The increasing knowledge of history and of Jewish and Christian legends enabled the Commentators to illustrate the Text of the Holy Book with reference to these. Sometimes the amount of Jewish stuff (some of it absurd), which found its way into the Commentaries, was out of all proportion to its importance and relevance, and gave rise to the legend, which has been exploited by polemical Christian and Jewish writers, that Islam was built up on an imperfect knowledge of Christianity and Judaism, or that it accepts as true the illustrative legends from the Talmud or the Midrash or various fantastic schools of Christianity. Then came philosophy and the mystic doctrine of the Safs schools. The development of the science of kalam (built on formal logic), and its further offshoot the 'Ilm-ul-'Agaid (the philosophical exposition of the grounds of our belief; introduced further elements on the intellectual side, while Taquel (esoteric exposition of the hidden or inner meaning) introduced elements on the spiritual side, based on a sort of transcendental intuition of the expositor. The Safi mystics at least adhered to the rules of their own Orders, which were very strict. But many of the non-Sufi writers on Taawil indulged in an amount of licence in interpretation which has rightly called forth a protest on the part of the more sober 'Ulama.

For my part I agree with this protest. While freely reserving the right of individual judgment on the part of every earnest writer, I think the art of interpretation must stick as closely as possible to the text which it seeks to interpret. Every serious writer and thinker has a right to use all the knowledge and experience he possesses in the service of the Qur-ân. But he must not mix up his own theories and conclusions, however reasonable, with the interpretation of the Text itself, which is usually perfectly perspicuous, as it claims it to be. Our difficulties in interpretation often arise from various causes. of which I will mention just a few:

- (1) Arabic words in the Text have acquired other meanings than those which were understood by the Apostle and his Companions. All living languages undergo such transformations. The early Commentators and Philologists went into these matters with a very comprehensive grasp, and we must accept their conclusions. Where they are not unanimous, we must use our judgment and historic sense in adopting the interpretation of that authority which appeals to us most. We must not devise new verbal meanings.
- (2) Even since the early Commentators wrote, the Arabic language has further developed, and later Commentators often abandon the interpretations of earlier Commentators without sufficient reason. In exercising our selective judgment in such cases it would be a good rule to prefer the earlier to the later interpretation, though, where a later writer has reviewed the earlier interpretations and given good reasons for his own view, he has an advantage which we must freely concede to bim.
- (3) Classical Arabic has a vocabulary in which the meaning of each root-word is so comprehensive that it is difficult to interpret it in a modern analytical language word for word, or by the use of the same word in all places where the original word occurs in the Text. A striking example is furnished by the word Sabr, about which see my notes on it. 45 and it. 153. Even though one particular shade of meaning may be predominant in any particular passage, the others are latent. So in a ray of light, when a prism analyses it, we may look at a portion of the field where a particular colour predominates, but other colours do not escape our glance. An Arabic word is often a full ray of light; when a translator looks at it through the prism of a modern analytical language, he misses a great deal of its meaning by confining his attention to one particular colour. European translators have often failed in this respect and sometimes even been landed in absurdities because these delicate rich tones are not etudied in their languages or literatures, and they do not look for them or appreciate them in the best examples of Oriental style. If they despise them or think them fantastic, they had best leave the interpretation of Oriental literatures alone. This is all the more so in religious or spiritual literature. No human language can possibly be adequate for the expression of the highest spiritual thought. Such thought must be expressed symbolically in terse and comprehensive words, out of which people will perceive just as much light and colour as their spiritual eyes are capable of perceiving. It is possible that their prism will only show them a dark blue while a whole glorious symphony of colours is hidden from their eyes. And so it comes about that through the prism of a clever English translation, poor 'Umar (Omar Khayyam emerges as a sensualist and cypic who sees no higher purpose in life than drunking wine, dallying with women, and holding up his hands in despair at "this sorry scheme of thinge entire." And so the parables of stern morality in the Qur-fin, its mystic earnestness, and its pictores of future beatitude are distorted into idle fables, incoherent effusions, and a sensial puradise!

(4) An opposite error sometimes arises because in certain matters the rich vocabulary of the Qur-an distinguishes between things and ideas of a certain kind by special words, for which there is only a general word in English. Instances are: Rahmān and Rahīm (Most Merciful); see i. 1. n.; a/Z, safaha, gafara (to forgive); see ii. 10 n.; and the various words for Creation; see ii. 11 n. The fact is that it gives us a very limited idea of God's Mercy, when we only use the English word "mercy": the Quranic idea implies not only pity and forgiveness but the Grace which protects us and keeps us from sin, and indeed guides us to the light of His "Countenance." So the "forgiveness" of God is a thing totally different in quality from the forgiveness which a man can give to his brother man: the equation implied in "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those that trespass against us" is a misleading fallacy. So, again, "Creation" is not just a simple process done by God at some remote time and finished with: the Quranic idea implies various processes and the continuous presence and activity of God in His Creation.

(5) God's purpose is eternal, and His plan is perfect, but man's intelligence is limited at its very best. In the same individual it grows and declines according to the strength of his powers and the width of his experience. If we take munkind collectively the variations are even greater from age to age and from people to people. There is thus no finality in human interpretation. And in the thing interpreted—God's Creation—there is constant flux and change. So that the impact of the one on the other must yield diverse results. The view of Kunchinjunga remained the same, but if Kunchinjunga intelligence is a double cause of variation in the view. So I believe in progressive interpretation, in the need for understanding and explaining spiritual matters from different angles. The difficulties that confront me may not be the same as those that confront you. The problems which our age has to meet may not be the same as those that confront which purgled earnest minds of the fourth or sixth or later centuries of the Hijra. Therefore it is no merit to hug the solutions offered in the fourth or sixth centuries when our souls cry out in hunger for solace in the fourtestent century of the Hijra.

The distinction drawn by Commentators between matters of report (stangilist) and matters of judgment (me/gilizt) is a sound one, and I heartily sacept it. But I would extend the scope of the me/gilizt far beyond questions of idiom and meaning. In the former the issues are: what actually happened, or what was actually-said, or how were certain things done? Here the closer we go back to contemporary authority, the better. In the latter, the issues are: what is the bearing of this truth on our lives, or what illustration helps us best to grasp this, or what is the wisdom we can extract from this? In such matters, the closer we come to our own circumstances and experiences, the better. It is not only our right but our duty to seek honestly our own solutions, and while we respect authority, we must not neglect or despise the gifts which God has accumulated for us through the ages.

The principles on which I have worked may be briefly stated. In matters of philology and language I accept the best authority among those who were competent to deal with these questions: the older the better. In matters of narration, contemporary authorities are best, subject to such corrections as have to be applied for their points of view. As to the particular occasions on which particular verses were revealed, the information is interesting and valuable from a historical point of view, and our older writers have collected ample material for it. But to lay too much stress on it to-day puts the picture out of all perspective. The Qur-an was not revealed for a particular occasion only, but for all time. The particular occasion is now past. Our chief interest now is to see how it can guide us in our present lives. Its meaning is so manifold, and when tested, it is so true, that we should be wise to concentrate on the matters 'that immediately help us. So in nature plants seek out of the soil just that food which gives them nourishment. There is plenty of other food left in the soil, which other plants take, which can digest it. In matters of remote h-tory or folk lore, we must take the results of the latest researches. In interpreting Jewish or Christian legends or beliefs we must go to Jewish or Christian sources, but by way of illustration only, not in the direction of incorporating such beliefs or systems. Though they were true in their original purity, we are not sure of the torm which they subsequently took, and in any case the fuller light of the sun obscures the lesser light of the stars.

In the application of spiritual truths to our own times and our own lives, we must use every kind of knowledge, science, and experience which we possess, but we must not obtrude irrelevant matter into our discussions. Let us take simple examples. When we speak of the rising of sun in the east, we do not go on to reconcile the expression with the Copernican system of astronomy. What we mean is as true under the Copernican system as it was under the Ptolemæic system. When we speak of the endless plains of India, we are not put on our defence because the earth is round. Nor will such poetic expressions as the seven firmaments raise questions as to the nature of space in modern astronomy. Man's intellect is given to him to investigate the nature of the physical world around him. He forms different conceptions of it at different times. Spiritual truths are quite independent of the question which of these conceptions are true. They deal with matters which are beyond the ken of physical science. In explaining or illustrating them we shall use such language as is current among the people to whom we speak.

Let me set out the names of the most important Tofsis, especially those to which I have from time to time referred. They are not, however, in any sense my authorities. They belong to widely different schools of thought, and some of them express extreme views with which I do not agree. I only adopt the general sense of accepted Commentaries.

- (1) The monumental work of Abū Ja'far Muhammad Ibn Jatīr Tabarī, d. 310 H A perfect mine of historical information, as the author was both a historian and a Traditionist. Copies are not easily accessible.
- (2) The Mufradāt, a dictionary of difficult words and phrases in the Qur-an, by Abul-Qasim Husain Ragib, of Ispahan, d. 503 H. Also explains allusions.
- (3) The Kashakāf, by Abul-Qásim Maḥmūd Zamakhsharī, of Khwārism, d. 538 H. Very full in the explanation of words and idioms; takes a decidedly rational and ethical view of doctrine. Numerous Commentaries have been written on this Commentary.
- (4) Tafsīr Kabīr, by Fakhr-ud-din Muhammad Rāsī, d. 606 H. Very comprehensive. Strong in interpretations from a Şūfī or spiritual point of view.
- (5) Anwär-ut-Tantil, by Qadhi Naşir-ud-din Abū Şa'id Baidhāwi, d. 685 H. Ilei drawn largely from the Mufradāt, the Kashahāf, and the Tafsir Kabir, but incorporates a good deal of original matter. A very popular Commentary, on which again numerous Commentaries have been written.
- (6) The Taisir of Abul-Fida Isma'il Ibn Kathīr, d. 774 H. Voluminous, but has great suthority among the 'Ulama.
- (7) İtqān fī 'uiūm-il-Qur ān, by Jalāl-ud-dīn Suyūķī, d. 911 H. A comprehensive review of the sciences of the Qur-an, being an introduction to his Majona'-ul-Bahrain.

(8) Tafsir Jalālain.—Written by the two Jalāl-ud-dins, one of whom was the author of the ligān, mentioned above, d. 911 II. A concise and meritorious Commentary, on which again a number of Commentaries have been written.

(9) Our country has produced some notable scholars in the realm of Tafsir.*
They wrote in Arabic and Persian, and the latter ones have written in Urdu.

The earliest I can trace is Shaikh 'Ali Ibn Alımad Mahaimi (of Mahim, near Bombay), d. 835 H. = 1432 A.D., author of the Tafsix Rahmimi. Almost contemporary with him was 'Allama Shams-ud din, of Daulatabad and Delhi, lmost contemporary with him was 'Allama Shams-ud din, of Daulatabad and Delhi, lmost contemporary Persian. During the nineteenth century, the famous Muhaddith of Delhi, Shah Wali-ullah, and his two sons Shah 'Abdul 'Aziz (d. 1824) and Shah 'Abdul Qadir (d. 1826) wrote both translations and Commentaries. Shah 'Abdul 'Aziz wrote in Persian and Shah 'Abdul Qadir in Urdu. The Urdu Commentary of Sir Sayyid Alımad Khan of 'Aligarh (d. 1898) has not met the approval of the 'Ulama. On the other hand 'the more recent Urdu Commentary of Maulvi 'Abdul Haqq, the Tafsir Haqqūmi, has passed through several editions, is quite modern in tone and manageable in bulk, and is widely circulated in India. I have derived much instruction from it and have used it constantly. The Commentary of Maulvi Abul Kalam Azad has been planned on a spacious scale and has not yet been finished.

(10) The Modernist school in Egypt got a wise lead from the late Shaikh Muhammad 'Abduh (d. 1323 H. = 1905 A.D.), whose unfinished Commentary is being, completed by Muhammad Rashid Ridhā, the talented editor of the Manār newspaper. The work of Shaikh Tantawi, Jauhari, a pupil of 'Abduh, finds the "jewels" of the Qur-an and of the sciences mutually illuminative, and suggests many new lines of thought. 'Allama Farid Wajdi is also spoken of as a good modern Commentator: I have not yet been able to get a copy of his work.

(11) It has been said that the Qur-an is its own best Commentary. As we proceed with the study of the Book, we find how true this is. A careful comparison and collation of passages from the Qur-an removes many difficulties. Use a good Concordance, such as the one I have named among the Works of Reference, and you will find that one passage throws light on another.

ALMOST all languages spoken by Muslims have translations of the Our-an in them. Usually the Text is printed with the Translation. If the language is undeveloped, many of the Arabic words of the Qur-an are taken over bodily into it for want of corresponding words in the language. Even in cultivated languages like Persian or Turkish, the introduction of religious terms from Arabic gave a body of words which were common to the whole Islamic world, and thus cemented that unity of the Muslim Brotherhood which is typified by the Oibla. Where the notion itself is new to the speakers of polished languages, they are glad to borrow the Arabic word expressing that notion and all the associations connected with it. Such a word is Qibla. Where the language is undeveloped, the translation is nothing more than a rough explanation of the Arabic Text. The translation has neither grammatical finish nor a form which can stand independently by itself. That is what happened with the earlier Urdu translations. They were really rough explanations, The ambition of every learned Muslim is to read the Qur-an in Arabic. The ambition of every Muslim is to read the sounds of the Arabic Text. I wish that his or her ambition were also to understand the Qur-an, either in Arabic or in the mother tongue or some well-developed tongue which he or she understands. Hence the need for good and accurate translations.

The translations into non-European languages known to me are: Persian, Turkish, Urdu, Tamil (used by Moplas), Pashto (for Afghans), Bengali, Malay, some of the languages of the Eastern Archipelago, and some of the African languages.

believe there is also a Chinese (dialectical) translation.

The earliest Urdu translation was by Shah 'Abdul Qadir of Delhi (d. 1826). He has already been mentioned among the Indian Commentators. Since then numerous Urdu translations have followed, some of which have been left incomplete. Among the complete ones, much used at the present day, may be mentioned those of Shah Raff'udd-din of Delhi, Shah Ashral 'All Thanawi, and Maulvi Nazir Ahmad (d. 1912). Personally I prefer the last. The projected Urdu translation by Hakim

Ahmad Shuja' has not yet been published.

Before the development of the modern European vernaculars, the cultivated language of Europe was Latin. A Latin translation was made for the Monastery of Clugny about 1143 itn the sixth century of the Hijra) but not published till 1543. The place of publication was Basle and the publisher Bibliander. This was translated into Italian, German, and Dutch. Schweigger's German translation was published at Nurenburg (Bavaria) in 1616. A French translation by Du Ryer was published at Paris in 1647, and a Russian one at St. Petersburg in 1776. Savary's French translation appeared in 1783, and Kasimurski's French translation (which has passed through several editions) first appeared in 1840, the French interest in Islam having been stimulated by French conquests in Algeria and North Africa. The Germans have followed up Schweigger with Boysen's translation in 1773, Wahl's in 1828, and Ullmann's (first edition in 1840). I believe the Ahmadiya Association of Lahore have in hand a fresh translation into German and Dutch.

Meanwhile Maracci had produced in 1689 a Latin version of the Qur an with the Arabic Text and quotations from various Arabic Commentaries, carefully selected and garbled, so as to give the worst possible impression of Islam to Europe. Maracci was a learned man, and there is no pretence about the object he had in view, viz., to discredit Islam by an elaborate show of quotations from Muslim authorities themselves. Maracci was himself a Confessor to Pope Innocent XI; his work is dedicated to the holy Roman Emperor Leopold I; and he introduces it by an introductory volume containing what he calls a "Refutation of the Qur an."

The first English translation by A. Ross was but a translation of the first French translation of Du Rever of 1647, and was published a few years after Du Kyer's. George Sale's translation (1734) was based on Altrance's Latin version, and even his notes and his Preliminary Discourse are based mainly on Maracci. Considering that Maracci's object was to discredit Islam in the eyes of Europe, it is remarkable that Sale's translation should be looked upon as a standard translation in the English-speaking world, and should pass through edition after edition, being even included in the series called the Chandos Classics and receiving the benediction of Sir E. Denison Ross. The Rev. J M. Rodwell arranged the Saras in a rough chronological order. His translation was first published in 1861. Though he tries to render the idiom fairly, his notes show the mind of a Christian clergyman, who was more concerned to "show up" the Book than to appreciate or expound its beauties. Prof. E. H. Palmer's translation first published in 1870) suffers from the idea that the Qur-an ought to be translated into colloquial language. He failed to realise the beauty and geondeur of style in the original Arabic. To him that style was "rude and rugged": we may more justifiably call his translation careless and slipshod.

The amount of mischief done by these versions of non-Muslim and anti-Muslim writers has led Muslim writers to venture into the field of English transla-The first Muslim to undertake an English translation was Dr. Muhammad 'Abdul Hakim Khan, of Patiala, 1905. Mirza Hairat of Delhi also published a translation, (Delhi 1919); the Commentary which he intended to publish in a separate volume of Introduction was, as far as I know, never published. My dear friend. the late Nawwab 'Imad ul-Mulk Saiyid Husain Bilgrami of Hyderabad, Deccantranslated a portion, but he did not live to complete his work. The Ahmadiya Sect has also been active in the field. Its Oadivan Anjuman published a version of the first Sipara in 1915. Apparently no more was published. Its Labore Anjuman has published Maulvi Muhammad 'Ali's translation (first edition in 1917), which has passed through more than one edition. It is a scholarly work, and is equipped with adequate explanatory matter in the notes and the Preface, and a fairly full Index. But the English of the Text is decidedly weak, and is not likely to appeal to those who know no Arabic. There are two other Muslim translations of great merit. But they have been published without the Arabic Text. Hanz Gulam Sarwar's translation (published in 1930 or 1929 deserves to be better known than it is. He has provided fairly full summaries of the Suras, section by section, but he has practically no notes to his Text. I think such notes are necessary for a full understanding of the Text. In many cases the Arabic words and phrases are so pregnant of meaning that a Translator would be in despair unless he were allowed to explain all that he understands by them. Mr. Marmaduke Pickthall's translation was published in 1930. He is an English Muslim, a literary man of standing, and an Arabic scholar. But he has added very few notes to elucidate the Text. His rendering is " almost literal ": it can hardly be expected that it can give an adequate idea of a Book which (in his own words) can be described as "that inimitable symphony the very sounds of which move men to tears and ecstasy." Perhaps the attempt to catch something of that symphony in another language is impossible. Greatly daring, I have made that attempt. We do not blame an artist who tries to catch in his picture something of the glorious light of a spring landscape.

The English language being widely spread over the world, many people interested in Islam will get their ideas of the Qur-an from English translations. It is good that qualified Muslims should make the attempt to present the picture which their own mental and spiritual vision presents to themselves. The Indian educational system has enthroned English as the common language of culture for a population of 350 millions. The most educated of its 80 millions of Muslimsunless they know Arabic-look to English as the most cultivated medium of expression. Their non-Muslim fellow countrymen judge-usually misjudge-their religion by the material which is available to them in English. We should improve and increase this material as much as we can and from as many points of view as we can. Some Muslim nations-like the Turks-have now determined to provide their religious literature (including the Holy Book) in their own national language. In order to keep them in touch with the thought and points of view of their brethren in faith, the English language would under present conditions be the most convenient medium. These are the considerations which have moved me to undertake the stupendous task of providing an English Interpretation of the Our-an. I pray for strength and light, so that I may be enabled to succeed in this service to Islam.

USEFUL WORKS OF REFERENCE

THE wide compass of the Qur-an makes it necessary to consult works of reference on almost every conceivable subject, to enable us to elucidate the various points that arise. To deal adequately with such a Book, the widest reading is necessary as well as the most varied experience in life. But the interests of readers require that a handy Commentary should not roam too far afield. Bearing this in view the three essential kinds of books would be: (a) Previous Commentaries; (b) previous Translations; (c) Dictionaries and General Works of Reference, easily accessible. I have set out (a) and (b) in the previous two Notes. I note a few under (c):—

- 1. Imam Abul-Qasım Husain Ragib's Mufradāt; a concise Arabic dictionary of words and phrases in the Qur-an. Already mentioned under Commentaries.
  - 2. The well-known Arabic Dictionary, Qamus.
  - 3. The well-known Arabic Dictionary, Lisan-ul-'Arab.
  - 4. The concise Arabic-Perisan Dictionary, Şurāh.
  - 5. | Penrice's Dictionary & Glossary of the Koran.
  - 6. E. W. Lane : English-Arabic Lexicon.
- 7. lmām Jalāl-ud-din Suyūţi's  $ttq\bar{a}nf\bar{\imath}$  'ulūm-il-Qur- $\bar{a}n$ : a veritable encyclopædia of Quranic sciences.
- 8. Noldeke und Schwally: Geschichte des Qorans. A German Essay on the Chronology of the Qur-an. Its criticisms and conclusions are from a non-Muslim point of view and to us not always acceptable, though it is practically the last word of European scholarship on the subject.
- 9. Encyclopædia of Islam. Nearly completed. Very unequal in its various parts.
- Encyclopadia Britannica, 14th edition. A great advance on previous editions, as regards the attention it devotes to Arabic learning.
  - 11. Hughes's Dictionary of Islam. Out of date, but still useful.
  - 12. .Ibn Hisham : Sīrat-ur-Rasūl. A fairly detailed Life of the Apostle.
- 13. Maulvi Shibli Nu'mani (d. 1914=1334 H.): Sīrai un-Nabī (an Urdu Life of the Apostle).
- Fath ur Rahmān, an Arabic Concordance to the Qur-an, by Faidh-ullah Bik Hasani, printed in Cairo in 1346 H. Full and well arranged, and easy to use.

TRANSLITERATION OF ARABIC WORDS AND NAMES

THE following table shows the system which I have followed in transliterating the letters of the Arabic alphabet:—

1:	Consonantal   sound	a	ط ظ		t z
1	Long vowel*	ā	ع َ		(Inverted a postrophe)
ب		Ь	. غ	*	g
ت		t	ت	*	f
ث		th	ق	*	q
٤		i	ک		k
	*	h	j	*	1
とやっ		kh		*	m
		d	ك	()	n
3		Z,	8 3		h
- )		r	9	consonant	W
ز		Z,	2	long vowel*	ā
س		S	٠ و	diphthong	au
عن	*	sh	ي .	consonant	У
ص		S	ي	long vowel*	i
ۻ	1	dh	ی	diphthong	ai
	Short vowels	1	( fatha)"	a
		/-	(kasra)	i
			(dhamma)	u

- 1. For the  $hamz\bar{a}$  ( $_{L}$ ) I have used no distinctive sign. An apostrophe for it and an inverted apostrophe for the 'ain ( $_{L}$ ), or vice versa, is confusing to English readers. As a moved consonant, it is sufficiently shown in English by the long or short vowel which moves it, e.g., ab, Raā/. Where it is a hiatus preceded by a fatha, I have shown it by a second a: thus, lqraa, the cave of Hiraz. In other cases it has not been possible to show it without using a distinctive sign. The name of the Holy Book is usually written Ourān; but I prefer to write  $Qur\bar{a}n$ .
- The final h preceded by the short a is scarcely pronounced, and I have left it out. Hence Sura, Fathia, Hijra, etc., where the Arabic spelling would require Surah, Fathiah, Hijrah, etc.
- 3. In internationalised words and names I have used the spelling ordinarily current in English;  $\epsilon \, \varepsilon_i$ , Mecca, Medina, Maulvi, Urdu, Islam, Israel, Abraham, Jacob. Here the boundary is thin and rather ill-defined, and possibly my practice and that of my proof-readers have not been absolutely uniform.
- 4. Some names, e.g., Ishmael, Hagar, etc., have acquired a contemptuous association in their European forms, while the persons they represent are sacred personages held in great honour in Islam. I have, therefore, avoided the European forms and used the Arabic forms, Isma'il, Hajar, etc.
- *Where it is really pronounced long. Hence ahalaqna-kum but ahalaqnal-insan; 4bu Sufyan but Alul-Qasim; fin-nar but fi-hi.

PUNCTUATION MARKS IN THE ARABIC TEXT

The punctuation marks in the Arabic Text have been worked out by our 'Ulama with great care and minute attention to details. The earliest manuscripts had few or no punctuation marks. Their growth and development furnish an interesting history, on which I hope Professor Zafar Iqbal, who has gone into the question, will publish his notes. In classical Europe, Greek had practically no punctuation marks. Later Latin had one or two rudimentary ones. In modern Europe they developed with printing. Aldus Manutius (16th century) was the first to work out a regular system. The Muslims were much earlier in the field for Quranic purposes, although in current Urdu, Persian, or Arabic, punctuation is not a strong point.

Quranic punctuation is an elaborate system, in which three kinds of marks are used. First, there are marks to show the variations in the systems of Qiraat. The most important of these is what is known as the Mu'anaga alia. This literally means the action of two persons embracing each other shoulder to shoulder, as in the ceremonious salute at the celebration of 'Id. The technical meaning in connection with the Quranic text is that a certain word or expression so marked can be construed as going either with the words or expressions preceding it or with those following it. The word or expression in question is indicated by three dots ... placed before and after it, above other punctuation marks if any. An example will be found in it. 2, where the word fi-hi may be construed either as referring to the word raib in the preceding clause, or to the word hudan in the succeeding clause. Either or both constructions are admissible. Passages where such constructions occur are indicated in the margin of the Arabic Text: by the abbreviation &, where this was worked out by the earlier Commentators (Mutagaddimin), or by the word will in tull, where it was worked out by the later Commentators (Mutaakikhirin). The numeral above it shows the serial number of the Mu'anaga of each series.

Secondly, there are marginal marks showing division into sections or paragraphs. These are denoted by the letter  $(ain \ (e))$  in the margin, and are explained under the heading "Divisions of the Quran."

Thirdly, there are the ordinary punctuation marks in the Text. A knowledge of the most important of these is necessary for an intelligent reading of the Text. Most important of all is a big circle  $\bigcirc$  to denote the end of one Ayat and the beginning of another. If the end of the Âyat is not also the end of a sentence, the mark of a smaller stop is put above it. Where one mark is put on the top of another, the former governs the latter. A warning not to stop is denoted by  $\Im$ . The letter  $\Im$  ( $\Im$  is so important that it is also shown prominently in the margin as  $\Im$  is  $\Im$  is so important that it is also shown prominently in the margin as  $\Im$  is  $\Im$  is  $\Im$  is shows that a stop is optional, but if you do not stop, the sense is not spoiled. There are other marks to show the extent to which a stop is permissible, a.g., for taking breath, etc., or where option is allowed, whether it is better to stop or not to stop. The letter  $\Im$  (multiag) denotes a full stop, i.e., the end of a sentence, but not the end of an argument, as in the case of a paragraph or section (e).

DIVISIONS OF THE QUR-AN

The reading of the Qu-an is considered a pious duty by every Muslim and is actually performed in practice by every literate person, man, woman, and child. For the convenience of those who wish to complete the whole reading in a given time, the whole Text is divided into thirty equal parts, or seven equal parts. The thirtieth Part is called jus-un in Arabic, and Stpāra or sumply Pāra in Persian and Urdu. If you read a Sīpāra every day, you complete the whole reading in a month of thirty days. The seventh part is called a Mansil. If one is read every day, the whole is completed in a week. Usually the arithmetical quarters of a Sīpāra (one-fourth, one-half, three quarters) are also marked in the Arabic copies as Ar-rub'. Anninf, and Alb-thālatha.

According to subject-matter, the division is different. The whole of the Qur-an is arranged in 114 Sūras of very unequal size. The Sūras are numbered and the consecutive number is shown just before the title of the Sūra, both in Arabic and English. In Arabic, the figure just after the title shows the chronological order as usually accepted by Muslim writers. Each Sūra consists of a number of Ayats, Sūra I contains 7 Ayats and Sūra II contains 286. For the meaning of Sūra and Ayat see C. 42 nn. 15-17. The most convenient form of quotation is to name the Sūra and the Āyat: thus ii. 120 means the 120th Āyat of the second Sūra. A Sūra is usually spoken of as a Chapter in English, but that translation is hardly satisfactory, If you examine the order you will find that each Sūra is a step in a gradation. I have left the word untranslated, as a technical term in our religious literature. The Āyat or verse division is usually determined by the rhythm and cadence in the Arabic Text. Sometimes an Āyat contains many sentences. Sometimes as sentence is divided by a break in an Āyat. But usually there is a pause in meaning at the end of an Āyat.

A division of the Sūra into Sections is shown in all Arabic Texts. These are logical divisions according to meaning. The word translated "Section" is in Arabic Ruhä", a "bowing of the head" The end of a Ruhä" is shown in Arabic by so. Usually three figures are written with $\rho_c$. The top figure shows the number of Rukä's completed in that Sūra. The middle figure shows the number of Rukä's completed in that Sūra. The middle figure shows the number of Rukä's completed in that Sūpāra, irrespective of Sūras. For example, the first $\rho_c$ in Sūpāra II which continues Sūra II from Sipāra I is usually marked $\rho_c$. It means that at that point 17 Rukâ's of Sūra II have been completed, that the Rukâ' of which it marks the close contains 6 Åyats, and that it is the first Rukâ' that falls in Sipāra II, I have further marked the sub-division of Rukâ's into shorter paragraphs where necessary, by using in the English text a bold flowery Initial: $\rho_c n_c$ see the initial $\rho_c$ in it. 35.

INTRODUCTION

- C. 1.—Glory to God Most High, full of Grace and Mercy;
  He created All, including Man.
  To Man He gave a special place in His Creation,
  He honoured man to be His Agent,
  And to that end, endued him with understanding,
  Purified his affections, and gave him spiritual insight;
  So that man should understand Nature,
  Understand himself,
  And know God through His wondrous Signs,
  And glorify Him in Truth, reverence, and unity.
- C. 2.—For the fulfilment of this great trust
  Man was further given a Will,
  So that his acts should reflect God's universal Will and Law,
  And his mind, freely choosing,
  Should experience the sublime joy.
  Of being in harmony with the Infinite,
  And with the great drama of the world around him.
  And with his own spiritual growth.
- C. 3.—But, created though he was in the best of moulds, Man fell from Unity when his Will was warped, And he chose the crooked path of Discord. And sorrow and pain, selfashness and degradation, Ignorance and hatred, despair and unbelief Poisoned his life, and he saw shapes of evil In the physical, moral, and spiritual world, And in himself.
- C. 4.—Then did his soul rise against himself, And his self-discord made discord between hith and kin: Men began to fear the strong and oppress the weak, To boast in prosperity, and curse in adversity, And to flee each other, pursuing phentoms, For the truth and reality of Unity Was gone from their minds.
- C. 5.—When men spread themselves over the earth,
  And became many nations,
  Speaking diverse languages,
  And observing diverse customs and laws;

The evils became multiplied,
As one race or nation
Became alienated from another.
The Brotherhood of Man was now doubly forgotten,—
First, between individuals, and secondly, between nations.
Arrogance, selfishness, and untruth
Were sown and reaped in larger fields;
And Peace, Faith, Love and Justice
Were obscured over masses of men,
As large tracts of land are starved
Of sunshine by clouds floating far on high.

C. 6 .- But God, in His infinite mercy and love. Who Forgives and guides individuals and nations, And turns to good even what seems to us evil, Never forsakes the struggling soul that turns to Him. · Nor the groups of men and women Who join together to obey His Will and Law And strengthen each other in unity and truth. Nor the Nations that dwell In mountain or valley, heat or cold, In regions fertile or arid, In societies that roam over land or seas, Or hunt, or tend flocks, or till the soil. Or seek the seas for food or oil or fat or gems. Or dig out from the bowels of the earth Precious stones or metals or stored-up heat and energy. Or practise arts and crafts, or produce abundant wealth By machines of ingenious workmanship, Or live a frugal life of contemplation : For all are children of One God. : And share His loving care And must be brought within the pale Of His eternal unity and harmony.

C. 7.—And so this light of eternal Unity
Has shone in all ages and among all nations,
Through chosen Apostles of God, who came
As men to dwell among men,
To share their joys and sorrows,
To suffer for them and with them,—
Aye, and to suffer more than falls
To ordinary mortal lot,—
That so their message and their life

Might fulfil the eternal

And unchanging purpose of the Most High,—

To lead man to his noblest destiny.

Of God's unity, might, grace and love.

C. 8.—Ever this eternal light of Unity,

This mystic light of God's own Will,

Has shone and shines with undiminished splendour.

The names of many Messengers are inscribed.

In the records of many nations and many tongues,

And many, were the forms in which their, message was delivered,

According to the needs of the times and the understanding of the people;

And manifold were the lives of the Messengers,

And manifold also was the response of their people;

But they all witnessed to the One Truth;

C. 9.—As the records of man are imperfect,
And the memory of man unstable:
The names of many of these messengers
Are known in one place and not in another,
Or among one people and not among others;
And some of their names may have perished utterly;
But their message stands one and indivisible,
Even though it may have been forgotten,
Or twisted by ignorance, error, superstition or perversity;
Or misunderstood in the blinding light
Of time or tortuous Circumstance.

C. 10.—Many were the faiths in the composite world
Of Western Asia, Northern Africa, and Europe,
And many were the fragments of ancient wisdom,
Saved, transformed, renewed, or iningled;
And many new streams of wisdom were powed through the crucibles
Of noble minds,—prophets, poets, preachers,
Philosophers, and thinking men of action;
And many were the conflicts, and many
The noble attempts reaching out towards Unity,
And many were the subtle influences
Interchanged with the other worlds
Of further and Eastern Asia,—
Aye, and perchance with the scattered Isles
Of the Pacific and the world between
The Atlantic and the Pacific.

C. 11 .- At length came the time when the Voice of Unity

Should speak and declare to the People,
Without the need of Priests or Priest-craft,
Without miracles save those that happen
Now and always in the spiritual world,
Without mystery, save those mysteries
Which unfold themselves in the growing lance expecience of man and his vision of God,—
To declare with unfaltering voice
The Unity of God, the Brotherhood of Man,
And Grace and Mercy, Bounty and Love,
Poured out in unstinted measure for ever and ever.

C. 12 .- And this great healing light shone

Among a people steeped in ignorance,
Brave and free, but without cohesion or union,
Simple and rude, but with an easy familiarity with Nature,
Accustomed to Nature's hardships and her rugged resistance to man,
But dreaming of the delights of gardens and fruitful fields,
Cruel, yet with a rough sense of equality,
And wielding a tongue, flexible, beautiful,
And able to respond, with bravity and eloquence,
To the sublimest thoughts which man could conceive.

C. 13.— Who were fit to be vehicles of this light?— Not men intoxicated with words and mysteries, Men whom politics had debauched or tyranny had subdued, Men whose refinement had ended in vices, Who saw Nature only through books or artificial conceits, Or in moods which bred softness, incolence, or luxury, Who spoke of love and justice, but practised Gross selfishness between class and class, Sex and sex, condition and condition; And had perverted their language, once beautiful, Into jargons of empty elegance and unmeaning futility.

C. 14.—For the glory of Helias, and her freedom and wisdom had departed;
Rome's great systems of law, organisation, and universal citizenship
Had sunk into the mire of ecclesiastical formalism,
And dogmatism, and exclusive arrogance;
The living fire of Persia's Prophet scarce smouldered
In her votaries of luxury;
In India, countless castes and kingdoms
Cancelled the unity of Buddha's teaching;
The wounds of China had not yet been healed by T'ang culture;
And Japan was still a disciple of China.

- C. 15.—Then, in the sacred city of pagan Arabia,

  Shone a light that spread in all directions.

  It was centrally placed for the bounds of the world

  Of men's habitations in Asia, Europe, and Africa.

  It made the Arabs the leading nation of culture and sciency,

  Of organised enterprise, law, and arts,

  With a real for the conquest of Nature and her mysteries.
- C. 16.—Behold! There was born into the world of sense
  The unlettered Apostle, the comely child, Noble of birth, but nobler still in the grace and wisdom of human love
  And human understanding; dowered with the key
  Which opened to him the enchanted palace
  Of nature; marked out to receive—
  To receive and preach in burning words'
  The spiritual truth and message of the Most High.
- C. 17.—Others before him had been born 'In darkness, beyond the reach Of history; others again it pleased God-To send as Messengers, preaching, working In the dim twilight of history, Wherein men fashion legends After their own hearts and dimly seek A light afar, remote from the lives Mean and sordid, such as they knew.
- 'C. 18.—But Muhammad came in the fullest blaze
  Of history; with no learning he put to shame
  The wisdom of the learned; with pasture folk
  He lived and worked, and won their love; in hills
  And valleys, caves and deserts, he wandered,
  But never lost his way to truth and righteousness;
  From his pure and spotless heart the Angels washed
  Off the dust that flew around him; through the ways
  Of crooked city folk, he walked upright and straight,
  And won from them the ungrudging name
  Of the Man of Faith 1 who never broke his word,
- C. 19.—To the Praiseworthy<sup>2</sup> indeed be praise:

  Born in the Sacred City<sup>3</sup> he destroyed

  Its superstition; loyal to his people to the core,

He stood for all humanity; orphan-born
And poor, he envied not the rich,
And made his special care all those Whom the world neglected or oppressed,—
Orphans, women, slaves, and those in need
Of food or comforts, mental solace, spiritual strength,
Or virtues downtrodden in the haunts of men.

- C. 20.—His mother sand his foster-mother s Loved and wondered at the child; His grandfather, 'Abdul Muttalib, Of all his twice eight children and their offspring, Loved him best and all his sweet and gentle ways; His uncle Abū Tālib, loth though he was To give up the cult of his fathess, Knew well the purity of Muhammad's Mind and soul, and was his stoutest champion When the other chiefs of Mecca sought to kill The man who challenged in his person Their narrow Pagan selfish lives.
- C. 21.—To his cousin 'All, the well-beloved, a
  Born when he was thirty, he appeared
  As the very pattern of a perfect man,
  As gentle as he was wise and true and strong,
  The one in whose defence and aid
  He spent his utmost strength and skill,
  Holding life cheap in support of a cause so high,
  And placing without reserve his chivalry,
  His prowess, his wit and learning, and his sword
  At the service of this mighty Messenger of God.
- C. 22.—Not till the age of forty? did he receive
  The Commission to stand forth and proclaim
  The Bounty of God, and His gift, to lowly Man,
  Of knowledge by Word and Pen; but all through
  His years of preparation he did search
  The Trufh: he sought it in Nature's forms and laws,
  Her beauty and her stern unflinching ways;
  He sought it in the inner world
  Of human lives, men's joys and sorrows,
  Their kindly virtues and their sins

<sup>4.</sup> Amina. 5. Nalima. 6. Murtadha. 7. The Arabian year before H. 10 was roughly luni-solar: See Appendix XI, p. 1077.

Of pride, injustice, cruel wrong, And greed of gain, scarce checked by the inner voice That spoke of duty, moral law, and higher still, The Will Supreme of God, to which the will Of man must tune itself to find its highest bliss.

- C. 23.—But he grew steadfastly in virtue and purity;
  Untaught by men, he learnt from them, and learned
  To teach them; even as a boy of nine,
  When he went in a trade catavan with Abū Talib
  To Syria, b his tender soul marked inwardly
  How God did speak in the wide expanse
  Of deserts, in the stern grandeur of rocks,
  In the refreshing flow of streams, in the smiling
  Bloom of gardens, in the art and skill with which Men and birds and all life sought for light
  From the Life of Lives, even as every plant
  Seeks through devious ways-the light of the Sun.
- C. 24.—Nor less was he grieved at Man's ingratitude
  When he rebelled and held as naught the Signs
  Of God, and turned His gifts to baser uses,
  Driving rarer souls to hermit life,
  Clouding the heavenly mirror of pure affections
  With selfish passions, mad unseemly wrangles,
  And hard unhallowed loathsome tortures of themselves.
- C. 25 He worked, and joyed in honest labour;

  He traded with integrity to himrili and to others;

  He joined the throngs of cities and their busy life,

  But saw its good and evil as types

  Of an inner and more lasting life hereafter;

  People gladly sought his help as unpire

  And peacemaker because they knew his soul

  Was just and righteous: he loved the society

  Of old and young, but oft withdrew to solitude

  For Prayer and inward spiritual strength;

  He despised not wealth but used it for others;

  He was happy in poverty and used it as his badge

It was on such visits that he met and conversed with Nestorian Christian monks like Bahra who were quick to recognise his spiritual worth. Perhaps the meeting was in Busta in the Jahal Druze district of Syria, some 80 miles south of Damascus. There was another Burts in Rdom. north of Petra in Transpredania. Burts was famous for trafe in costly red dyes, and is referred to as Bozzah in Isaaih, Isiai 1 Neither of these towns is to be confounded with the modern Barra.

and his pride 9 when wealth was within his reach.
But not within his grasp, as a man among men.

- C. 26.—At twenty-five he was united in the holy bonds
  Of wellock with Khadija the Great, the noble lady
  Who befriended him when he had no worldly resources,
  Trusted him when his worth was little known,
  Enbouraged and understood him in his spiritual struggles,
  Believed in him when with trembling steps
  He took up the Call and withstood obloquy,
  Persecution, insults, threats, and tortures,
  And was a life-long helpmate till she was gathered
  To the saints in his fifty-first year,—
  A perfect woman, the mother of those that believe.
- C. 27.—There is a cave in the side of Mount Hirsa
  Some three miles north of the City of Mecca,
  In a valley which turns left from the road to 'Arafat.
  To which Muhammad used to retire for peaceful contemplation;
  Often alone, but sometimes with Ehadija.
  Days and nights he spent there with his Lord.
  Hard were the problems he revolved in his mind,—
  Harder and more cross-grained than the red granite
  Of the rock around him,—problems not his own,
  But his people's, yea, and of human destiny,
  Of the mercy of God, and the age-long conflict
  Of evil and righteousness, sin and abounding Grace.
- C. 28.—Not till forty years of earthly life had passed

  That the veil was lifted from the Preserved Tablet
  And its contents began to be transferred to the tablet of his mind,
  To be proclaimed to the world, and read and studied

  For all time;—a fountain of mercy and wisdom,
  A warning to the heedless, a guide to the erring,
  An assurance to those in doubt, a solace to the suffering,
  A hope to those in despair,—to complete the chain
  Of Revelation through the mouths
  Of divinely inspired Apostles.
- C. 29.—The Chosen One <sup>16</sup> was in the Cave of Hiraa. For two years and more he had prayed there and adored His Creator and wondered at the mystery Of man with his corruptible flesh, just growing

Out of a clot, ha and the soul in him Reaching out to knowledge sublime, new And ever new, taught by the bounty Of God, and leading to that which man himself Knoweth not. 'And now, behold! a dazzling. Vision of beauty and light overpowered his senses, And he heard the word "lorea!"

C. 30,—"Igras!"—which being interpreted may mean
"Read!" or "Proclaim!" or "Recite!"
The unlettered Apostle was puzzled;
He could not read. The Angel seemed
To press him to his, breast in a close embrace,
And the cry rang clear "Igras!"
And so it happened three times: until
The first overpowering sensation yielded
To a collected grasp of the words which made clear
His Mission; its Author, God the Creator,
Its subject, Man, God's wondrows handiwork,
Capable, by Grace, of rising to heights sublimes;
And the instrument of that mission, the sanctified Pen,
And the sanctified Book, the Gift of God,
Which men might read, or write, or study, or treasure in their soule

C. 31.-The veil was lifted from the Chosen One's eyes. And his soul for a moment was filled with divine Ecstssy... When this passed. And he returned to the world of Time And Circumstance and this world of Sense. He felt like one whose eyes had seen A light of dazzling beauty, and felt daged On his return to common sights. The darkness now seemed tenfold dark: The solitude seemed tenfold empty: The mount of Hiras, henceforth known As the Mountain of Light,11 the mere shell Of an intense memory. Was it a dream? Terror seized his limbs and he straightway cou Her who shared his immost life, And told her of his sense of exaltation. And the awful void when the curtain closed,

C. 32.—She understood, rejoiced, and comforted him; Gave strength to his shaken senses; Wrapped up in warmth his shivering body, Unused as yet to bear the strain and stress Of an experience care to mortal men. She knew it was no dream or delusion. She went and consulted her cousin Waraqa, A devout worshipper of God in the Faith of Christ, Learned in spiritual lore. He listened And with her rejoiced that he, Muhammad, Was God's Chosen One to renew the Faith.

- C. 33:—She said: Hlessed be thou, Chosen One 1

  Do we not see thy inner life,—true and pure?

  Do not all see thy outer life,—true and pure?

  Loyal to kin, hospitable to strangers?

  No thought of harm or mischief ever stained thy mind Nor word ever passed thy lips that was not true Or stilled not the passions of narrower men.

  Ever ready in the service of God, thou art he Of whom I bear witness: there's no God but He, And thou art His chogen Apostle.
- C. 34.—Khadija believed, exaited in faith
  Above all women; 'All, the well-beloved,
  Then a child of ten, but ljon hearted,
  Plighted his faith, and became from that moment
  The right hand of Islam; Aba Bakr, the Sincere; 'A
  The True-hearted, the man of wealth and influence,
  Who used both without stint for the Cause;
  The sober Counsellor, the inseparable friend,
  Never hesitated to declare his faith;
  And Zaid, the freedman of Muhammad,
  Counted his freedom as naught compared
  With the service of Muhammad and Islam.
  These were the hist fruits of the mission:
  A woman, a child, a man of affairs, and a freedman,
  All banded together in the equality of Islam,
  - C. 35.—The revelation had come, the mission

    And the inspiration. But what was it leading to?

    It was a miracle, but not in the sense

    Of a reversing of Nature; Mustafa's vision

    Was linked with Eternity, but he was no soothsayer

    Foretelling passing events; the mysteries

Of knowledge were being opened out, but his message Was no mere esoteric doctrine, to be grasped by a few in contemplation, fleeing from action; Nor was it the practice of single or social monasticism, Undisturbed by the whims or passions of life. He was asked to stand forth, to preach, to declare The One Universal God, the Gracious, the Merciful, And to lead men to the Right and forbid the Wrong.

- C. 36.—The wrong?—The selfish pride of birth,
  The massing of power and wealth in the hands
  Of a few, the slaughter of female infants,
  The orgies of gambling and drunkenness,
  The frauds of temples and idols and priests,
  The feuds and arrogance of tribes and races,
  The separation of Sacred and Profane,
  As if the unity of All Life and All Truth
  Did not flow from the unity of God Most High.
- C. 37.—He was loyal to his family, but could he support
  Their monopoly of power?—To his tribe,
  But were the Quraish the only creatures
  Of God?—To the temple of Mecca, but Could he wink at Lat and "Uzza, and the other monsters,
  Whose worship killed the spiritual growth of Man?—
  To the earlier Revelations, but could he hold
  With the superstitions and falsehoods, the dogmas and creeds
  Which west against reason and nature, and the inner light
  Which was now fanned into flame by the Will of God?
- C. 38.—And so his very virtues and layalties pointed

  To offence and conflict, mockery, and misrepresentation,
  Hatred and pessecution, threats, tortures, and exile
  For him and his, and martydoms, wars, revolutions,
  And the shaking of the foundations of history
  And the social order. But Islam meant
  The willing submission of his will to God,
  The active attainment of Peace through Conflict,
- C. 39.—And he gave that submission, not without effort, Even as Moses 12 did before him, And Jesus 12 in the agony of the garden of Gethsemans.

C. 40.—For three and twenty years, in patience,
Conflict, hope, and final triumph,
Did this man of God receive
And teach the Message of the Most High.
It came, like the fruit of the soul's own yearning,
To teach profound spiritual truths,
Answer questions, appeal to men
In their doubts and fears, help and put heart
In them in moments of trial, and ordain
For them laws by which they could live
In society lives of purky, goodness and peace.

C. 41.—These messages came as inspiration

To Muhammad as the need arose,
On different occasions and in different places:
Ne recited them, and they were recorded
By the Pen: they were imprinted on his heart
And mind, and on the memory
Of his loving disciples: as the body
Of sacred Scripture grew, it was arranged
For purposes of public prayer and reading:
This is the Hook, or the Reading, or the Quran.

INTRODUCTION TO SURA I (Fanka)

- C. 42.—First comes that beautiful Sūra,"
  The Opening Chapter so, Seven Verses,"
  Rightly called the Essence of the Book.
  It teaches us the perfect Frayer,
  For if we can pray aright, it means
  That we have some knowledge of God
  And His attributes, of His relations
  To us and His creation, which includes
  Ourselves; that we glimpse the source
  From which we come, and that final goal
  Which is our spiritual destiny
  Under God's true judgment: then
  We offer ourselves to God and seek His light:
- C. 43.—Prayer is the heart of Religion and Faith

  But how shall we pray? "What words shall convey.
  The yearnings of our miserable ignorant hearts
  To the Knower of all? Is it worthy of Him
  Or of our spiritual nature to ask

  For vanities, or even for such physical needs
  As our daily bread? The Inspired One
  Taught us a Prayer that suma up our faith,
  Our hope, and our aspiration in things that matter.
  We think in devotion of God's name and His Nature;
  We praise Him for His creation and His Cherishing care;
  We call to mind the Realities, seen and unseen;
  We offer Him worship and ask for His guidance;
  And we know the straight from the crooked path
  By the light of His grace that illumines the righteous.

<sup>15.</sup> Each chapter or portion of the Quran is called a SGra, which means a Degree or Step, by which we mount up. Sometimes whole SGras were revealed, and sometimes portions, which were arranged together according to subject-matter under the Apostle's directions. Some SGras are long, and some are short, but a logical thread runs through them all. Each verse of the SGra is called an Ayart (plural, Ayat), which means also a sign. A verse of revealiton is a Sign of God's widom and goodness jout as much as God's beautiful handiwork in the material creation or His dealings in history are signs to us, if we would understand. Some Ayats are long, and some are short. The Ayat is the true unit of the Quran

18. By universal consent it is rightly placed at the beginning of the Qur-an, as summing up, in marvellously terse and comprehensive words, man's relation to God in contemplation and prayer, in our spiritual contemplation the first words should be those of praise. If the praise is from our immost being, it brings us into union with God's will. Then our eyes see all good, peace, and harmony. Evil, rebellon, and conflict are purged out. They do not exist for us, for oucever are lifted up above them in praise. Then we see God's attributes better (verses 2-4). This leads us to the attitude of worship and acknowledgment (verse 5). And finally comes prayer for guidance, and the attitude of worship and acknowledgment (verse 5). And manny comes player for guidance, and a contemplation of what guidance means (verse 5.7).

God needs no praise, for He is above all praise; He needs no petition, for He knows our needs better than we do ourselves; and His bountes are open without asking, to the righteous and the sinner alike. The prayer is for our own spiritual education, consolation, and confirmation.

That is why the words in this Sura are given to us in the form in which we should utter them, that is way the worden cuin suits are given to us in the form in which we should little when we reach enlightenment, they flow spontaneously (form us. 19. The Arabic words "Robman" and "Rabim," translated "Most Gracious" and "Most Meciful" are both intensive forms referring to different aspects of God's attribute of Mercy. The Merciult "are both intensive forms referring to different aspects of God's attribute of Mercy. The Arabic intensive is more suited to express God's attributes than the superlative degree in English. The latter implies a comparison with other beings, or with other times or places, while there is a being like unto God, and He is independent of Time and Place. Mercy may imply pity, long-suffering, patience, and forgiveness, all of which the sineer needs and God Most Merciful bestows in abundant measure. But there is a Mercy that goes before even the need arises, the Grace which is ever watchful, and lows from God Most Gracious to all His creatures, protecting them, preserving them, guiding this and leading them to clearer light and higher like. For this reason the attribute is a fine of the God, the formula: "In the name of God Most Gracious, Most Merciful' is placed before so gift of the Qurân (except the ninth), and repeated at the beginning of every act by the Multim who dedirected his life to God, and whose home is in His Mercy. dedicates his life to God, and whose hope is in His Mercy.

Opinion is divided whether the Bismilian should be numbered as a separate verse or not. It is unanimously agreed that it is a part of the Quran. Therefore it is better to give it an independent number in the first Sura. For subsequent Suras it is treated as an introduction or head-line, and therefore not numbered.

INTRODUCTION TO SURA II (Bagara)

As the Opening Sura sums up in seven beautiful verses the essence of the Qur-an, so this Sura sums up in 286 verses the whole teaching of the Qur-an. It is a closely reasoned argument.

Summary.—It begins (verses 1-29) with mystic doctrine as to the three kinds of men and how they receive God's message.

This leads to the story of the creation of man, the high destiny intended for him, his fall, and the hope held out to him (ii. 30-39).

Israel's story is then told according to their own records and traditions—what privileges they received and how they abused them (ii. 40-86), thus illustrating again as by a parable the general story of man.

In particular, reference is made to Moses and Jesus and their struggles with an unruly people: how the people of the Book played false with their own lights and in their pride rejected Mullammad, who came in the true line of apostolic succession (ii. 87-121).

They falsely laid claim to the virtues of Father Abraham: he was indeed a righteous Imam, but he was the progenitor of Isma ll's line (Arabs) as well as of Israel's line, and he with Isma'll built the Ka'ba (Temple of Meccai and purified it, thus establishing a common religion, of which Islam is the universal exponent (ii, 122-141).

The Ka'ba was now to be the centre of universal worship and the symbol of Islamic unity (ii. 142-167).

The Islamic Ummat (brotherhood) having thus been established with its definite centre and symbol, ordinances are laid down for the social life of the community, with the proviso (ii. 177) that righteousness does not constain formalities, but in faith, kindness, prayer, charity, probity, and patience under suffering. The ordinances relate to food and drink, bequests, fasts, jinād, wine and gambling, treatment of orphans and women, etc. (ii. 168-242.)

Lest the subject of jihād should be misunderstood, it is taken up again in the story of Saul, Goliath and David, in contrast to the story of Jesus (ii. 243-253).

And so the lesson is enforced that true virtue lies in practical deeds of manliness, kindness, and good faith (ii. 254.283), and God's nature is called to mind in the sublime Ayat-ui-Kur-s; the Verse of the Throne (ii. 255).

The Sura ends with an exhortation to Faith, Chedience, a' sense of Personal Responsibility, and Prayer (ii. 284-286).

This is the longest Sora of the Qur-an, and in it occurs the longest verse (ii. 282). The name of the Sūra is from the Parable of the Heifer in ii. 67-71, which illustrates the insufficiency of carping obedience. When faith is lost, people put off obedience with various excuses: even when at last they obey in the letter, they fail in the spirit, which means that they get fossilized, and their self-sufficiency prevents them from seeing that spiritually they are not alive but dead. For life is movement, activity, striving, fighting against baser things. And this is the burden of the Sūra.

This is in the main an early Medina Sora,

C, 44.—The Message of God is a guide that is sure (ii 1:20) To those who seek His light. But those Who reject faith are blind: their hearts Are sealed. Woe to the hypocrites, Self-deceived and deceiving others, With mockery on their lips, and mischief In their hearts, and fear; the clouds That bring fertilizing rain to others, To them bring but deafening thunder-peals And lightning fashes blinding to their eyes.

M. are found prefixed to this Stars, and Stars iii, xxix, xxx, xxx and xxxii its in all. In a and iii the argument is about the use and fall of nations, their past, and their flutter in history, with ordinances for the new universal People of Islam. In xxix a similar their flutter in history, with ordinances for the new universal People of Islam. In xxix a similar flutter in the horous tended the star of the mystery of Life and Death, Failure and Tiumph. Past and Failure in the horous control will solur. The burden of xxx is that God is the source of all things and the lines of the source of all things and the lines of the source of all things and all hings of the source of all things and the lines of the source of all things and the lines of the source of all things and the lines of the source of all things and the lines of the source of all things and the lines of the source of all things and the lines of the source of all things and the lines of the source of all things and the lines of the source of all things and the lines of the source of all things and the lines of the source of all the source of all the source of all the source of all things and the lines of the source of all the source of all the source of the source of all the source of the source things and all things return to Him. In xxxi and xxxii the same lesson is enforced: God is the Creator and He will be the judge on the Last Day. There is therefore a common thread, the mystery of Life and Death, Beginning and End.

Much has been written about the meaning of these letters, but most of it is pure conjecture, Some commentators are content to recognize them as some mystic symbols, of which it is unprofitable to discuss the meaning by mere verbal logic. In mysticism we accept symbols as such for the time to discuss the meaning oy mere verbal logic. In invisticism we accept symbols as such for the time beautiful the discovery of the such as promulgated in human speech. This might be appropriate to the first Sura (which Bagara really is if we treat Faitha as a preface): but if it was prefixed to others, why to these six only?

If we look to the nature of the sounds which the letters represent, A is a breathing and comes If we look to the nature of the sounds which the letters represent, A is a breathing and comes from the throat, L is a lingual-palatal-dental sound from the middle of the mouth, and M is a laball or lip-sound. <sup>40.</sup> For Tagwa see ii. 2 n. 28. I connect this dependent clause with "adore, etc." above, though it could be connected with "created." According to my construction the argument will be an follows. Adoration is the act of the highest and humblest reverence and worship. When you get into that relationship with 60d, Who is your Creator and Guardian, your faith produces works of righteousness. It is a chance given you will you exercise your free will and take it? If you do, your whole nature with be transformed.

The north has been brought plainly before you. Will you still resist it and go after false gods, the creation of your own fancy? The false gods may be idols, superstitions, Self, or even great or glorous things like Poetry, Art, or Science, when set up as rivals to God. They may be pride of race, pride of birth, pride of wealth or position, pride of power, pride of learning, or even spiritual pride.

<sup>42.</sup> How do we know that there is revelation, and that it is from God? Here is a concrete test. The acher of God? Truth has placed before you many Stras. Can you produce one like it? If there is any one besides God, who can inspire spiritual fruth in such noble language, produce your evidence. Or is it that your doubts are merely argumentative, refractory, against your own inner tight, or conscience? All true revelation is steel a miracle, and stands on its own merits.

If by your own efforts you cannot match the spiritual light, and yet contumaciously reject spiritual Patiti, then there will be, a fire in your souls, the Punishment that burns up all your cherisned idols. Perhaps you will at least fear this penalty, which your self-loving souls can understand. This fire consumes both the worshippers of the False and the Idols which they falsely worship. Can this bring then to their senses? It is power is not only over the feeling, palpitating heart of man theart in a spiritual sense, as it persists long after the physical heart), but he cannot escape from it even if he imagines himself reduced to interness like stock for stones; for it is all-devouring.

And what can be more delighbut than a Garden where you observe from a press of which the choicest fruit is before you. The fruit of goodness is goodness, sentiar, but choicer in every degree of ascent. You think it is the same, but it is because of your past experiences and alsociations of fremory. 47. It would seem that the angels; though sholy and pure, and endued with power from God, yet represented only one bide of Creation. We may imagine them without passion or emotion, of which the highest flower is love. If man was to be endued with emotions, those emotions could like with to the highest flower is love. If man was to be endued with emotions, those emotions could like with the time to be seen that the second will or choosing would have to go with them, in order that man might steer his own bark. This power of will or choosing would have to go with them, in order that man might steer his own bark. This power of will ((when used aright) gave him to some extent a mastery over his own fortunes and over nature, thus bringing him nearer to the God-like nature, which has supreme mastery and will. We may suppose the angels had no independent wills of their own; their perfection in other ways reflected God's perfection but could not reside them to the dignity of vicegerency. The perfect vicegerent is he who has the power of initiative himself, but whose independent action always reflects perfect the will of his Principal. The distinction is expressed by Shakespeare (Sonnet 94) in those fine lines; "They are the lords and owners of their faces, Others but stewards of their excellence." The angels in their one-diddness saw only the mischiel consequent on the misuse of the emotional nature by man; perhaps they also, being without emotions, did not understand the whole of God's nature, which gives and asks for being without emotions, did not understand the whole of God's nature, which gives and asks for they do not know, and they acknowledge for its 32 below hort their fault (for there is no equestion of fault) but their imperfection of knowledge. At the same time, the matter is brought home to them when the actual capacities of man are shown to them (ii. 13.13).

48. The literal words in Arabic throughout this passage are; "The names of things;" which commentators take to mean the inner nature and qualities of things, and things here would include feelings. The whole passage is charged with mystic meaning. The particular qualities or feelings which were outside the nature of angels were put by God into the nature of man. Man was thus able to love and understand love, and thus plan and initiate, as becomes the office of vicegerent. The angels acknowledged this. These things they could only know from the outside, but they had faith, or belief in the Unseen. And they knew that God saw all—what others see, what others do not see, what others fall of the conceal, to his own detriment.

We have none, save what Thou Hast taught us: in truth it is Thou Who art perfect in knowledge and wisdom."

approach not this tree. Or ve run into harm and transgression." 51

36. Then did Satan make them slip From the (Garden), and get them out

<sup>49.</sup> The Arabic may also be translated; "They bowed down, except lblis." In that case lblis (Satan) would be one of the angels. But the theory of fallen angels is not usually accepted in Muslim, theology! In xviii, 50, lblis is spoken of as a Jinn. "We shall discuss later the meaning of this word, <sup>50.</sup> Was the Garden of Eden a place on this earth? Obviously not. For, in verse 36 below, it was after the fall that the sentence was pronounced: "On earth will be your dwelling place" Before the Fall, we must suppose Man to be on another plane altogether—of felicity, impocence, trust, a spiritual existence, with the negation of enmity, want of faith, and all evil Perhaps l'ime and Space also did not exist, and the Garden is allegorical as well as the tree. The forbidden tree was not the tree of knowledge, for man was given in that perfect state fuller knowledge than he has now (ii, 31): it was the tree of Evil, which he was forbidden not only to eat of, but even to approach.

<sup>51. &</sup>quot; Lum" in Arabic implies harm, wrong, injustice, or transgression, and may have reference to oneself: when the wrong is done to others it implies tyranny and oppression; the idea of wrong naturally connects itself with darkness, which is another shade of meaning carried with the foot word

Note the appropriateness of the term on each occasion Also, "slipping" from the Garden denotes the idea of Evil gradually tempting man from a higher to a lower state,

The Arabic word for "Repentance" (faulo) means "turning," and the intensive word (tauwah) for God's lorgiveness ("Off-Returning" or "Ever-Returning") is from the same root. For repentance, three things are pecessary : the sinner must acknowledge his wrong ; he must give it up; and he must resolve to eschew if for the future. Man's nature is weak, and he may have to return again and again for mercy. So long as he does it sincerely, God is Oft-Returning, Most Merciful. For His grace helps out the sinner's shortcomings.

56. Note the transition from the plural "We" at the beginning of the verse to the singular "Me" later in the same verse. God speaks of Himself usually in the first person plural "We": it is the plural of respect and honour and is used in human language in Royal proclamations and decrees. But where a so-cial necronal relationship is expressed the singular, "1 or "Me" is used 'C, xxvi 32 etc. In spite of Man's Iali, and in conversence of it, assurance of guidance is given. In case and on sinning against that light, the inevitable consequence must be the spiritual Fire. It is not merely a fortuitous incident. As his rejection was deliberate and definite, so the consequences must be of an abiding character.

<sup>53.</sup> God's decree is the result of man's action. Note the transition in Arabic from the singular number in 1, 33, to the dual in it 35, and the nitiral here, which I have indicated it Entitle by people." <sup>58</sup> The appeal is made to Israel subjectively to terms of their own tradition. You claim to be a favoured nation: have you forgotten aby favours? You claim a special Coverant with Me: I have fulfilled My part of the Coverant by bringing you out of the land of bondage and giving you Canasan, the land "howing with milk and honey": how have you fulfilled your part of the Coverant? It implies (I) patience in the sense of being thorough, not hasty: (2) patient perseverance, constancy, steadfastness, fromess of purpose; (3) systematica sopposed to spasmodic or chance action: (4) a cheerful attitude of resignation and understanding in sorrow, defeat, or suffering. as opposed to murmuring or rebellion, but saved from mere passivity or listlessness, by the element of constancy or steadfastness.

64. The bondage of Egypt was indeed a tremendous trial. Even the Egyptians' wish to spare the lives of travels femiles when the males were slaughtered, added to the bitterness of Israel. Their hatred was cruel, but their "love" was still more cruel. About the hard tasks, see Exod., 14: "They made their lives bitter with hard bondage, in mortar and in brick, and in all manner of service in the field: all their service, wherein they inade them serve, was with ingour." Pharaoh's taskmasters gave no straw, yet ordered the Israelites to make bricks without straw: Exod., 43:19. Pharaoh's decice was: "Every son that is born ye shall cast into the river, and every daughter ye shall save alive": Exod., 51:21. It was in consequence of this decire that Moses was hidden three months after the was born, and when he could be hidden no longer, he was put into an art, or butuishes and cast family: Exod. in 2:10. Cf., xx, 37:40. Thus Moses was brought up by the enemies of his people. He was chosen by God to deliver his people, and God's wisdom made the learning and experience and even cruelties of the Egyptian enemies themselves to contribute to the salvation of his people.

65. When the Israelites at last escaped from Egypt, they were pursued by Pharaoh and his host. By a miracle the Israelites crossed the Red Sea, but the host of Pharaoh was drowned: Exod, xiv, 5-31.

66. This was after the Ten Commandments and the Laws and Ordinances had been given on Mount Sinal: Moses was asked up into the Mount, and he was there forty days and forty nights: Exod. xxiv. 18. But the people got impatient of the delay, made a calf of melted gold, and offered worship and secrifice to it; Exod. xxiv. 1-8.

67. Moses prayed for his people, and God forgave them. This is the language of the Qur-ān. The Old Testament version is rougher: "The Lord repented of the evil which He thought to do unto His people!" Excl., xxxii. 14. In this passage some commentators take the scripture and the Criterion Evragan to be identical. Others take them to be two distinct things: Scripture being the written Book and the Criterion being other Signa. I agree, with the latter view. The word Furdan also occurs in xxi 48 in connection with Moses and Aaron and in the first verse of Signa xxx, as well as in its title, in connection with Muhammad. As Aaron reviewed no Book, Furdan must mean the other Signs. Musifal had both the Book and the other Signs: perhaps here too we take the other Signs as supplementing the Book. Cf. <sup>69.</sup> Moses's speech may be construed literally, as translated, in which case it reproduces Euod, xxxii 27.28 but in a much softened form, for the Old Testament says: "Go-in and out from gate to gate throughoit the camp, and slay every man his bordher, and every man his companion, and every man his neighbour..., and there fell of the people that day 3,000 men." A more spiritualized version would be that the order for slaying was given by way of trails but was withdrawn, for God turned to them in forgiveness. A still more spiritualized way of construing it would be to take "anjusakum" as meaning "souls," not "selves." Then the sense of Moses's peech (abbeviated would be; "By the worship of the call you have wronged your own souls; tepent: mortify (=slay) your souls now; it will be better in the sight of God."

The word here translated Maker [Barr] has also in it a touch of the root-meaning of "liberator,"— an apt word as referring to the Israelines, who had just been liberated from bondage in Egypt.

It usually rotted if left over till next day; it melted in the hot sum; the amount necessary for each man was about an Omer, a Hebrew measure of capacity requal to about 24 quarts. This is the Hebrew account, probably distorted by readtional resaggeration. The actual Manna found to this day in the Similar region is a gummy saccharine secretion found on a species of Tamarisk. It is produced by the puncture of a species of insect like the cochineal, just as lac is produced by the puncture of the lace insect on certain trees in India. As to qualls, large flights of them are driven by winds in the Eastern Mediterranean in certain seasons of the year, as was witnessed during the Great War of 1914-1918 by many Indian officers who campaigned between Egypt and Palestine,

73. Here we have a reference to the tribal organization of the Jews, which played a great part in their forty years' march through the Krablan deserts (Mum. i. and it.) and their subsequent settlement in the land of Cannan (Josh xui and xw.). The twelve tribes were derived from the sons of Jacob, whose name was changed to Israel (soldier of God) after he had wrestled, says Jewish tradition, with God (Genesis xxxii 28). Israel had twelve sons (Gen. xxxv. 12.26), including Levi and Joseph. The decrendants of these twelve sons were the "Children of Israel." Levi's family got the rensus was taken (Num. i 47.5), and therefore from the distribution of Land in Cannan (Josh xv. 3); they were distributed among all the Tribes, and were really a privileged casts and not numbered among the Tribes; Moses and Aaron belonged to the house of Levi. On the other hand Joseph, on account of the high position to which he rose in Egypt as the Pharaoh's minister, was the progenitor of two tribes, one in, the name of each of his two sons Ephraim and Manasseh. Thus fixed stations and watering its aller was cut out and Joseph on generated two cribes. Their having prevented confusion and mutual jealousies and is pointed to as an evidence of the Providence of God acting through His prophet Moses. (Z.) also wil 160.

The gushing of twelve springs from a rock evidently refers to a local tradition well known to Jews and Arabas in Muştaff is time. Near thoreb close to flount Sinai, where the Law was given to Moses, is a huge mass of red grante, twelve feet high and about fifty feet in circumference, where European travellers (a.g., Brevdenbach in the 15th Century after Christ) saw abundant springs of water twelve in number (see Sale's notes on this passage). It existed in Muştaff's time and may still exist to the present day, for anything we know to the contrary. The Jewsh tradition would be based on Exnd xvii 6: "Thou shalt smite the rock, and there shall come water out of it that the people may drink:"

The story is used as a parable, as is clear from the latter part of the verse. In the desolation and among the rocks of this life people grumble. But they will not be left starting or thisty of sprittual life. God's Messenger can provide abundant spiritual sustenance even from such unpromising things as the hard rocks of life. And all the nations can be grouped round it, each different, yet each in grain the start of the surface of the start of the surface of the sur

They were earned in captivity to Assyria. They were earlord under the Persians, but still iremained under the Persian yoke, and they were under the yoke of the Greeks, the Romais, and Arabs. They were excitered all over the earth, and have-been a wandering people evensince, because they rejected faith, slew God's messengers, and went on transgressing.

The slaying of the Prophets begins with the murder of Abel, who was in the ancestry of Israel The elder sons of Jacob attempted the murder of Joseph when they dropped him into the well and if he was afterwards rescued by strangers, their blood-guilt was none the less. In later history they attempted to slay Jesus, inasmuch as they got the Roman Governor to crucify one in his likeness, and they attempted to take the life of Mustafa,

But the moral grees wider than the Children of Israel. It applies to all nations and all individuals. If they are stiff-necked, if they set a greater value on perishable goods than on freedom and eternal salvation, if they break the law of God and resist Hig grace, their portion must be humilation and misery in the spiritual world and probably even on this earth if a long view is taken,

The point of the verse is that Islam does not teach an exclusive doctrine, and is not meant exclusively for one people. 90. This story or parable of the heifer in ii. 67-71 should be read with the parable of the dead man brought to life in ii. 72-73. The stories were accepted in Jewish traditions, which are themselves based on certain sacrificial directions in the 10d Testament. The heifer story of Jewish tradition is based on Num, xiz. 1-10, in which Moses and Aaron ordered the Israelites to sacrifice a red heifer without spot or blemish; her body was to be burnt and the askes were to be kept for the purification of the congregation from sin. The parable of the dead man we shall refer to later.

The lesson of the helier parable is plain. Moses announced the sacrifice to the Israelites, and they treated it as a jest. When Moses continued solemnly to ask for the sacrifice, they put him off on one pretext and another, asking a number of questions which they could have answered themselves if they had listened to Moses's directions. Their questions were carping criticisms rather than the result of a desire for information. It was a mere thin pretence that they were geninely seeking for guidance. When at last they were driven into a corner, they made the sacrifice, but the will was wanting, which would have made the sacrifice effections for purification from sin. The real reason for their prevarications was their guilty conscience, as we see in the parable of the dead made (ii. 24.3).

81. In Dout, xxl. 1-9 it is ordained that if the body of a slain man be found in field and the slayer is not known, a helfer shall be beheaded, and the clders of the city next to the slain man's domicile shall wash their hands over the helfer and say that they neither did the deed nor saw it done, thus clearing themselves from the blood-guilt.

The Jewish story based on this was that in a certain case of this kind, every one tried to clear himself of guilt and lay the blame at the door of others. In the first place they tried to prevaricate and prevent a heifer being slain as in the last parable. When she was slain. God by a miracle disclosed the really guilty person. A portion of the sacrificed heller was ordered to be placed on the corpse, which came to life and disclosed the whole story of the crime.

The lesson of this parable is that men may try to hide their crimes individually or collectively, but Ood will bring them to light in unexpected ways. Applying this further to lewish national history, the argument is developed in the following verses that the Children of Israel played fast and loose with their own rites and traditions, but they could not thus evade the consecuences of their own sin.

For fear of God. And God is Not unmindful of what ye do.

82. The sinner's heart gets hatder and harder. It is even hatder than rocks of which a beautiful poetical allegory is placed before us. In nature we think there is finiting harder than rocks. But the case the rocks from which rivers and springs flow spontaneously, sometimes in shall rickles, sometimes in big volumes. Then there are rocks which have to be split or dug into or blown up with dynamics, and underneath we find abundant waters, as in wells beneath rocky soil. Such are the hearts of a less degree of fineness, which yet melt into tears when some great blow or calamity calls the mind to higher things. And lastly, there are the rocks which slip or sink by geological pressure or in an earthquake, and send forth large spouts of water, as happened, for example, in the Bihar earthquake of 1941: such sinking or quaking thay be poetically ascribed to fear. So there give hearts of repentance. But the hardened somer is worse than all these. His case to prose than that of rocks, for nothing will melt him.

83. The immediate argument applies to the Jews of Medina, but the more general argument applies to the people of Fatth and the people without Faith, as we shall see below. If the Mushing of Medina over entertained the hope that the Jews in their city would as a body welcome Mushammad Mushalf as the Prophet prophesed in their own books, they were mistaken. In Deul. xviii, they read: "I will raise them up a Prophet from among their betteren, this unto thee," (i.e., like they read: "I will raise them up a Prophet from among their betteren, this unto the," (i.e., like tame into Islam. The Arabs are a kindred branch of the Semitic family, and are correctly described in relation to the Jews as "Heisir betther"; and there is no question that there was not another Prophet "like unto Moses" until Mushammad came; in fact the postscript of Deuteropromy, which was written many centures after Moses, says: "There arose not a prophet since in Israel like unto Moses, whord the Lord knew face to face." But the Jews as a body were jealous of Mushammad and played a double part. When the Musham community began to grow stronger they pretended to be of them, but really tried to keep back any knowledge of their own Scriptures from them, lest they should be betaten by their own arguments.

The more general interpretation holds good in all ages. Faith and Unfaith are pitted against each other. Faith has to struggle against power, position, organization, and privilege. When it gains ground, Unfaith comes forward insincerely and claims fellowship. But in its own mind, it is galous of the armonyr of science and knowledge which Faith brings into the service of God. But God knows all, and if the people of Faith will only seek knowledge uncerely wherever they can full the contract of the contract

'84. The argument of i. 76 is continued. The Jews wanted to keep back knowledge, but what knowledge had they? Many of them, even if they could read, were no betfer than illiterates, for they knew not their own true Scriptures, but read into them what they wanted, or at best their own conjectures. They palmed off their own writings for the Message of God. Perhaps it brought them profit for the time being; but it was a miserable profit if they "gained the whole world and lost their own souls" (Matt. xw. 26). "Writing with their own hands" means inventing books themselves, which had no divine authority.

The general argument's smilar, Unfaith erects its own false goods. It attributes things to causes which only exist in its own imagination. Sometimes it even indulgas in actual dishonest traffic in the ignorance of the multitude. It may pay for a time, but the bubble always bursts.

85. The Jews in their arrogance might say: Whatever the terror of Hell may be for other people, our rias will be forgiven, because we are the children of Abraham: at worst, we shall suffer a short definite punishment and then be restored to the "bosom of Abraham." This bubble is pricked here. Read this verse with it, 81-82.

The general application's also clear. If Unfaith claims some special prerogative, such as race, "civilization," political power, historical expenence, and so on, these will not avail in God's sight. His promise is sure, but His promise is for those who seek God in Faith, and show it in their conduct.

86. This is many degrees worse than merely falling into evil: it is going out to "earn evil," as the Arabic text has it, i.e., to seek gain in evil. Such a pervene attitude means that the moral and spiritual fortress erected around us by the Grace of God is voluntarily surreadered by us and demoliabed by Evil, which erects its own fortress, so that access to Good may be more and more difficult.

They are Companions of the Garden:
Therein shall they abide (For ever).

And remember We took A Covenant from the Children Of Israel (to this effect): Worship none but God; Treat with kindness Your parents and kindred, And orphans and those in need; Speak fair to the people; Be steadfast in prayer; And practise regular charity. 88. Verse 83 selerred to the universal moral law. This verse 84 refers to its application under a special Covenant entered into with the Jesus of Medina by the new-boom Muslim Commonwealth under its Guide and teacher Muhammad. This Covenant is green in Inn Hisham's Steatur-Resal, and comments on it will be found in Ameer "Alts Selvis" of Islam (London, 1922), pp. 37-61. It was entered into in the second year of the Hijra, and was treacherously broken by the Jews almost immediately afterwards.

<sup>87.</sup> So far from the Covenant being of the kind you suggest in ii. 80, the real Covenant is about the moral law, which is set out in ii. 83. This motal law is universal, and if you break it, no privileges will lighten your punishment or help you in any way (ii. 86). "Speak fair to the people" not only means outward courtesy from the leaders to the meanest among the people, but the protection of the people from being exploited, deceived, defrauded, or doped with things to lull their intelligence.

86. These are the people who buy The life of this world at the price Of the Hereafter: their penalty Shall not be lightened Nor shall they be helped.

C. 47.-The people of Moses and the people of Jesus (ii 87-121.) Were given revelations, but alas! They played talse with their own lights, And, in their selfishness, made narrow God's universal message. To them It seemed incredible that His light Should illumine Arabia and reform The world. But His ways are wondrous, And they are clear to those who have Faith.

89-A. The word "apostle" is used here and throughout the Translation in the literal sense of "One Sent," and rott in a specialized sense. One "One Sent," and rott in a specialized sense. Why is he called the "Son of Mary"? What are his "clear signes? What is he' holy spirit" by which he was strengthened? We reserve to a later stage a discussion of the Quranic teaching on these questions. See it 62 n. 401.

91. Notice the sudden transition from the past tense in "Some ye called impostors" to the present tense in "others ye slay". There is a double significance. First, revewing the long course of Jewish history, we have come to the time of Jewish the strength of the life of the life of the year. Secondary of the time were now they are trying to Safe, "Sense Secondary the strength of the life of that holy Annatie. This would be literally true at the time the words were promulgated to the proofs. And this transition leads on naturally to the next verse, which refers to the actual conditions before Muhammad in Medina in the second vear of the High. the second year of the Hijrs.

Sections 11-13 (ii. 87-121) refer to the People of the Book generally, Jews and Christians. Even where Moses and the Law of Sinai are referred to, those traditions are common to both Jews and Christians. The argument is about the people who ought to have learnt from previous Revelations and welcomed Muhammad's teaching, and yet they both took up an attitude of arrogant rejection

92. The Jews in their arrogance claimed that all wisdom and all knowledge of God were enclosed in their hearts. But there were more things in heaven and earth than were dreamt of in their philosophy. Their claim was not only arrogance but biasphemy. In reality they were men without Faith, (I take Quifan here to be the plural of Qifa/un the wrapping or cover of a book, in which the book is preserved.)

As usual, there is a much wider meaning. How many people at all times and among all nations close their hearts to any extension of knowledge or spiritual influence because of some little fragment which they have got and which they think is the whole of God's Truth 5 such an attitude shows really want of faith and is a biasphamous limitation of God's unlimited spiritual gifts to His creatures.

93. The root hafara has many shades of meaning: (1) to denv God's goodness, to be ungrateful, to reject Fatth, deny His revelation, (3) to blaspheme, to ascribe some himitation or attribute to God which is derogatory to His nature. In a translation, one shade or another must be put forward according to the context, but all are implied.

94. The Jews, who pretended to be so superior to the people without Faith—the Gentules—should have been the first to recognize the new Truth—of the Truth renewed—which it was Muhammad's mission to bring because it was so similar in form and language to what they had already recrived. But they had more arrogance than faith. It is this want of faith that brings on the curse, i.e., deprives us (if we adont such an attitude) of the blessians of God.

Again the lesson spuller to a much wider circle than the Jews. We are all apt, in our perverseness, to reject an appeal from our brother ever finore summarily than one from an outsider. If we have a glummering of the truth, we are apt to make ourselves impervious to further truth, and thus lose the benefit of God's Grant.

95. Racial arrogance made the Jawa averate to the reception of Truth when it came through a servant of God, not of their own race. Again the lesson is wider. I shat a warseness unknown in our own times, and among other races? Yet how can a race or a people set bounds to God's choice? God is the Creator and Cherisher of all races and all worth.

Thus have they drawn On themselves Wrath upon Wrath. And humiliating is the punishment Of those who reject Faith.

91. When it is said to them,
"Believe in what God Hath sent down," they say,
"We believe in what was sent

To us": yet they reject' All besides, even if it be Truth-Confirming what is with them. Say: "Why then have ye slain The prophets of God in times Gone by, if ye did indeed Believe?"

rusions or inclinations

77. Cf. the introductory words of ii. 63. which are the same as the introductory words here, but the argument is developed in a different direction in the two places. In ii, 63, after they are reminded of the solema Covenant under the towering height of Mount Sinai they are told how they broke the Covenant in after ages. Here, after they are reminded of the same solemn Covenant, they are told that even then they never meant to observe it. Their thought is expressed in bring words of saccasm.
They said in words: "All that the Lord bath spoken, we will do." But they said in their hearts:
"We shall disober."

<sup>98,</sup> What they should have said was: "We hear and we obey"; this is the attitude of the true men of Faith (ii. 285).

After the Commandments and the Law had been given at Mount Sinai, and the people had solemnly grown their Coverant, Moses went up to the Mount, and in his absence, the people made the golden calf. When Moses returned, his anger waxed hot, "He look the Calf which they had made, and burnt it in the fire, and ground it to powder, and styresed it upon the water, and made its children of Israel drink of it." [Exod. xxxii 20]. This incident is interpreted in the Qur-ha allegorically. The Calf is the symbol of disobedience, rebellon, want of faith. It was like a taint of poison. Their punishment was to swallow the taint of poison which they had themselves produced. They swallowed it not into their stomachs, but into their hearts, their very being. They had to mortify and humble themselves in the sight of God, as was shown in another allegory based on the Jewish narrative (see it, 34 and note, above).

  SECTION 12.

97. Say: Whoever is an enemy in To Gabriel—for he brings down

@ قُوْا مَرْ كَانَ عَدُوَكِلِيْدِ مِلْ فَانْهُ

<sup>100.</sup> The phrase "What their hands have sent on before them "frequently occurs in the Qur-ân. Here, and in many places, it refers to sins. In such passages as laxvii, 40, or laxxi 14, it is implied that both good and bad deeds go before 18, to the judgment-sear of God before we do ourselves. In it, 110, it is the good that goes before us. Our deeds are personnied. They are writensees for or against us, and they always go before us. Their good or bad influence begins to operate before we even know it. This is more general than the New Testament it deal in the First Episte of St. Paul to Timothy, v. 20. "Some, mon's sins are open beforehand, going before to judgment; and some men they follow after."

<sup>10].</sup> A party of the Jews in the time of Muhammad ridiculed the Muslim belief that Gabriel brought down revelations to Muhammad Mujafa. Michael was called in their books "the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people"; (Daniel, xii, 1). The vision of Gabriel inspired was merely a manifestation of their unbelief that Michael was their fliend and Gabriel their enemy—was merely a manifestation of their unbelief that Michael was their fliend and Gabriel their enemy—was merely a manifestation of their unbelief that was distinguished, and the substitute of the substitute

The (revelation) to thy heart By God's will, a confirmation Of what went before, And guidance and glad tidings For those who believe,—

- 102. They followed what the evil

Gave out (falsely)

The evil ones, teaching men

102. I think that by "the Book of God" here is meant, not the Quran, but the Book which the People of the Book had been given, viz., the previous Revelations. The argument is that Muhammad's Message was similar to Revelations which they had a leady everyed, and if they had looked into their own Books honestly and sincerely, they would have found proofs in them to show that the new Message was true and from God. But they ignored their own Books or twiste or distorted them according to their own fancies. Wrisse, they followed samething which was actually false and mischievous and inspired by the evil one. Such was the belief in magic and sorpery. These are described in the next verse in terms referring to the beliefs and practices of the "People of the Book."

<sup>103.</sup> This is a continuation of the orgument in ii. 101. The People of the Book, instead of sticking to the plant Books of Revelations, and seeking to do the will of God, ran after all sorts of occult knowledge, most of which was false and evel. Many wonderful tales of occult power attributed the power of Solomon to magic. But Solomon dealt in no arts of evil. It was the powers of evil that pretended to force the laws of nature and the will of God; such a pretence is plantly blasphemy

Magic, and such things As came down at Babylon To the angels Harut and

But neither of these taught anyone (Such things) without saying : "We are only for trial; So do not blaspheme." They learned from them 100 The means to sow discord Between man and wife. But they could not thus Harm anyone except By God's permission. And they learned what harmed them. Not what profited them. And they knew that the buyers Of (magic) would have No share in the happiness Of the Hereaster. And vile Was the price for which They did sell their souls, If they but knew!

103. If they had kept their Faith And guarded themselves from evil.

104. This were has been interpreted variously. Who were Haffl and Masti: What did they teach? Why did they teach is? The view which commends uself to me as that of the Tafsix Haggies, foilowing Baldhawt and the Tafsix Kabix. The word "angels" as applied to Haffl and Marint is figurative. It means "good men of knowledge, science for wasdom, and power." In modern languages the word "angel" is applied to a good and beautiful woman. The earlier tradition made angels masculine, and applied to them the attinutues which I have mentioned, along tradition made angels masculine, and applied to them the attributes which I have mentioned, along with the attribute of beauty, which was implied in goodness, knowledge, wildom, and power. Harit and Märdt lived in Babylon, a very ancient seat of science, especially the science of astronomy. The period may be supposed to be anywhere about the time when the ancient Eastern Monarchies were strong and enlightened; probably even earlier, as Mä-10-tu or Marduk was a delied hero afterwards worshipped as a good of magic in Babylon. Being good men, Harit and Märdt of course dabbled in nothing evil, and their hands were certainly clean of fraud. But knowledge and the arts, if learned by evil men, can be applied to evil uses. The evil ones, besides their fraudulent magic, also learnt a little of this true science and applied it to evil uses. Harit and Sharti ofd not withhold knowledge, yet sever taught anyone without plainly warning them of the trial and temptation of knowledge in the hands of evil men. Being men of inight, they also saw the blasphemy that might rise to the lips of the evil ones pushed up with science and warned them against it. Knowledge is indeed a trial or temptation; if we are warned, we know its dangers: it God has endowed us with free will, we must be free to choose between the benefit and the danger.

Among the Jewish traditions in the Midrash (Jewish Tafsirs) was a story of two angels who asked God's permission to come down to earth but succunibed to temptation, and were living up by assed out pleinission to come down to earth our succombed to temptation, and we'r roun, dip of their feet at Babylon for punishment. Such stories about sinning angels who were cast, down to punishment were believed in by the early Christians also. (See the Second Episile of Peter, ii. 4, and the Episile of Jude, verse 6). There may be an allusion to such legends here, but much spiritualized and we are expressly warned against dabbling in magic or believing that anything can hurt us except by God's will, and God is just and righteous.

105. What the evil ones learnt from Hartit and Martit (see last note) they turned to evil. When mixed with fraud and deception, it appeared as charms and spells and love potions. They did nothing but cause discord between the sexes. But of course their power was limited to the extent to which God permitted the evil to work, for His grace protected all who sought His guidance and repented and returned to Him. But a part from the harm that these false pretenders might do others, the chief harm, which they did was to their own souls. They sold themselves into slavery to the Evil One, as is shown in the allegory of Goethe's Fasat. That allegory dealt with the individual soul. Here the tragedy is shown to occur not only to individuals but to whole groups of people, for example, the People of the Book. Indeed the story might be extended indefinitely.

Not only must we be plain and honest in our words. We must respectfully hearigen to the words of a Teacher whom we have addressed. Thoughtless people use vain words or put foolish questions, and straight way turn their minds to something else.

people use vain words or put foolish questions, and straightway turn their minds to something else.

107. The word which I have translated by the word "revalations" is hyalt. See C. 41 and n. 15. It is not only used for verses of the Qursan, but in a general sense for God's revelations, as in i. 39 and for other Signs of God in history or nature, or miracles, as in ii. 61. It has even been used for huma signs and tokens of wonder, as, for example, monuments or landmarks built by the ancient people of 'Ad (xxvi, 128). What is the meaning here? If we take it in: a general sense, it means that God's Message from age to age is always the same, but that its form may differ according to the needs and estigated to the time. That form was different as given to Moses and then to gesus and then to design the same of the size of the shapes not only in the material world but in the world of man's thought and expression.

<sup>109 &</sup>quot;Even way": the Arabic word sessed signifies smoothness as opposed to roughness: symmetry as opposed to want of plan; equality or proportion as opposed to want of design; recitude as opposed to roughliness; a mean as opposed to extremes; and fitness for the object held in view as opposed to faultiness.

<sup>110.</sup> There words are used in the Qurán, with a meaning skin to "forgive", but each with a different shade of meaning, "Affa there translated "forgive". I means to forget, to oblitate the from one's mind. Safaba there translated "overlook" means to turn away from, to ignore, to treat a matter as if it did not affect one. Gafara (which does not occur in this verse) means to cover up to something, as God does to our sins with His grace; this word is particularly appropriate in God's attribute of $\int_{\infty}^{\infty} = \int_{\infty}^{\infty}

<sup>112.</sup> Note how this phrase, seemingly repeated from it. 106, and occurring in many other places, has appropriate signification in each place. In ii. 106 we were told about progressive revelation, how the same thing may take different forms, and seeming human infamity contribute in the fulfill ment of God's design, for God's power is unlimited. Here we are told to be patient and forgiving against enzy and injustice: this too may be fulfilling Cod's purpose, for His power is infinite.

<sup>114.</sup> The word translated "self" is Weji, a comprehensive Arabic word. It means (I) literally "face"; but it may imply (2) countenance or favour, as in xcii, 20; (3) honour, glory, Presence as applied to God, as in ii. 115, and perhaps also in Iv. 27; (4) cause, sake ("for the sake of") as in Ixavi 8; (3) the first part, the beginning, as in iii. 71; (6) nature, more being, essence, self, as in v, 111, xxviii. 86, and perhaps also in Iv. 27. Here I understand meaning 6; the face expresses the personality or the whole inner self of man.

<sup>116.</sup> It is a sure sign of ignorance and prejudice when you study the same book as another or a similar one and yet are absolutely intolerant of the meaning which the other draws from it. You should know better, but you speak like the ignorant. In this case the primary reference in the word "ignorant" may be to the Pagan Arabs.

117. There were actually Pagans in Mecca who tried to shut out the Muslim Arabi from the Ka'ba, the univertal place of Arab worship. The Pagans themselves called it the House of God. With what face could they exclude the Muslims, who wanted to worship the true God instead of worshipping idols? If these Pagans had succeeded, they would only have caused violent divisions among the Arabs and destroyed the sanctity and the very existence of the Ka'ba.

This verse, taken in a general sense, establishes the principle of freedom of worship in a public mosque or place dedicated to the worship of Ood. This is recognized in Muslim law. There may be differences of opinion between one individual and another, or between one group and another as to the nature of God or the proper mode of worship, but no tests can be laid down, nor can one individual or sect exclude another. So long a a person enters reverently and does nothing outwardly to cause offence to the other worshippers, he bas a right to go and worship in a public place set apart for God's worship.

118. The word translated "Presence" is Wajh, literally "face.» See note to ii. 112 above.

119. It is a derogation from the glory of God—in fact it is blasphemy—to say that God begets sons, like a man or an animal. The Christian doctrine is here emphatically repudiated. If words have any meaning, it would mean an attribution to God of a material nature, and of the lower animal functions of sex. In a spiritual sense, we are all children of God. And all Creation celebrates His glory. Verse 117 should be read with this to complete the argument.

110. The previous verse told us that everythine in house a not earth celebrates the glory of God. Lest anyone should think that the heavens and the earth were thinselves promeial and eigenal, we are now told that they themselves are creatures of God's will and design. Cf. vi. 102 where the word boda's as used as herge for the creation of the heavens and the earth, and whal again used for the creation of all things. Bada's goes back to the very primal beginning, as far as we can conceive it. The materialists might say that primeval matter was eternal; other things, i.e., the forms and shapes as we see them now, were called into being at some time or other, and will pensh. When they pensh, the conceived it is the conceived of the creation of the conceived that the pensh. When they pensh has so of existence, the Cause of all Causes. If this is conceiled, we proceed to argue that the process of Creations is not then completed. "All things in the heavens and on the earth "are created by gradual processes. In "things" we include abstract as well as material things. We see the abstract things and delies actually growing before us. But that also is God's creation, to which we can apply the word Waldada. In me it is involved the idea of incavaring, fitting it into a scheme of On the other hand, the "own" "Command, Direction. 121. The argument now proceeds on another line. Ye People of the Book who go back to Abraham! not only is your claim to exclusive knowledge of God false and deroyatory to the Lord of All the Worlds. If you must appeal to Abraham, he was also the progenitur of the Arab race through limit! Indeed Abraham and Isma'll together built the House of God in Merco (long before the Temple of Jerusalem was built). They purified it and laid the Joundations of the universal religion, which is summed up in the word Islam, or complete submission to the Vull of God. Abraham and Isma'il were thus true Muslims. Whence then your rancour against Islam?

Historically the Temple at Mecca must have been a far more ancient place of worship than the Arab tradition connects various places in and around Slecca with the fiame of Abraham and identifies the well of Zam-zam with the well in the story of the child Isma'll. 122. Verses 122-123 repeat verses 47-48 (except 1: a slight verbal variation in ii. 123, which does not affect the sense). The argument about the favours to Israel is thus beautifully rounded off, and we now proceed to the argument in favour of the Arabs as succeeding to the spiritual inheritance of Abraham.

Sorainan Malinal: hterally "words": here used in the mystic sense of God's Will ne Decree or Purpose. This werse may be taken to be the sum of the words following. In averything Abraham fulfilled God's wish: he purified God's house; he built the sacred refuge of the Katha; he submitted his will to God's, and thus became the type of Islam. He was promised the leadershin of the world; he pleaded for his progeny, and his prayer was granted, with the limitation that if his progeny was false to God, God's promise did not reach the people who proved themselves false.

<sup>124.</sup> Imisw: the primary sense is that of being foremost; hence it may mean: (1) leader in religion: (2) leader in congregational prayer; (3) model, pattern, examinle; (4) a book of guidance and instruction (xi 17); (3) a book of evidence or record (xxxvi), (2). Here, meanings 1 and 3 are implied. In ix. 12 the word is applied to leaders of Unbelief or Blaspheniy,

<sup>125.</sup> The Karba, the House of God. Its foundation goes back by Arab tradition to Abraham. Its fourfold character is here referred to (1) It was the centre to which all the Arab tribes resorted for trade, for poetic contests, and for worship (2) It was Accred territory, and was respected by frend and foe alike. At certain seasons, all fighting was and is forbidden within its limits, and even arms are not allowed to be carried, and no game or other thing is allowed to be killed. Like the Cities of Refuge under the Mosaic Dispensation, to which manulayers could fee (Num. xxxv. 6), or the Sanctuaries in Medieval Europe, to which criminals could not be pursued. Mecca was recognized by Sanctuaries in Medieval currope, to which criminals could not be pursued, Mecca was recognized to Arab custom as involable for the pursuit of revenge or violence. (3) It was a place of prayer even today there is a Station of Abraham within the enclosure, where Abraham was supposed to have prayed. (4) It must be held pure and sacref for all ourposes.

Though the verse as a whole is expressed in the First Person Plural, the House is called "My creaminess and purity is required for the sake of the dryoftes who underfake these rites, 127. The root salam is in the word Islam injuities (among other ideas) the idea of Peace, and therefore when Mecca is the city of Islam, it is also the City of Peace. The same root occurs in the latter part of the name Jerusalem, the Jewish City of Peace. When the day of Jerusalem passed (see verse 134 or 141 below), Mecca became the "New Jerusalem"—or rather the old and original "City of

128. The territory of Mecca is barren and rocky, compared with, say, Taif, a city 70-75 miles east of Mecca. A prayer for the prosperity of Mecca therefore includes a prayer for the good things of material life. This is the titral meaning. But note that the opposition in this verse is between the fruits of the Garden for the righteous and the torments of the Fire for the evil ones—a spiritual allegory of great force and aptness.

These are mentioned in three groups; (1) Abraham, Innut'll, Isaac, Jacob, and the Tribes; of these Abraham had apparently a Book (laxwin, 19) and the others followed his tradition; (2) Moses and Jesus, who each left a scripture; these scripture are sull extrait, though not in their pristine form; and (3) other scriptures, Prophets, or Messengers of God, not specifically mentioned in the Quran (3). I have made a free paraphrase of what would read literally: "Ye shall not be asked about what they used to do," On the Day of judgment each soul would have to answer for its own deeds; it cannot claim merit from others, nor be answerable for the crimes or sins of others. Here the it cannot claim merit from others, nor be answerable for the crimes or sins of others. Here the argument is: It the Jews or Chinatians claim the merits of Father Abrahamand the Patriatrichs or of Jesus, we cannot follow them Because there were righteous men in the past, it cannot help us unless we are ourselvest righteous. The doctrine of personal responsibility is a carridgal feature of Islam.

If others narrow it or corrupt it, it is they who have left the laith and created a division or schism. But God sees and knows all. And He will protect His own, and His Loo. wherever curvetees. The accusative case of Sibrat puts it in apposition to millat ("religion") in it 135.

The accusative is with the question in the last verse. Do you dispute with us although we 138. The alternative is with the question in the last verse. Do you dispute with us although we can be a considered to the same religion as that of your spacestors? The atternative is with the question in the last verse. Do you dispute with this same fold as you and claim that ours is the same religion as that of your ancestors? Or do you really assert that Abraham and his son and his sons sons, who founded the Tribes long before Moses, followed your fewish religion as you know it? History of course proves that claim shourd. The reference here is to the idolaters, the Hypocrites, and 'the party of Jews who were constantly seeking to "entangle in their talk" "Mustafa and his disciples in Medina even as the Pharisees and the Sadduces of Jesus's day tried to entangle Jesus (Mall. xxii, 15, 2).

But the Arable word (rease) also implies a touch of the literal meaning, of Intermediarey. Geographically Arabia is in an intermediate position in the Old World, as was proved in history by the rapid expansion of [slam, north, south, west and east, <sup>141.</sup> Gible=the direction to which Muslims turn in prayer, Islam lays great stress on social prayer in order to emphasis our universal Brotherhood and mutual enoperation. For such prayer, order, punctuality, precision, symbolical postures, and a common direction are essential, so that the Imâm (leader) and all his congregation may face one way and offer their supplications to God. In the early days, before they were organised as a people, they followed as a symbol further Obla the sacred driv of fertisalem, ancred both to the flews and the Christians, the people of the Book. This symbolised their allegiance to the continuity of God's revelation. When, despised and persecuted, they were turned out of Merca and arrived in Medica. Musquai under driving direction began to spatish the people as an framer, in independing the continuity of the properties of the carried to the spirit of Arabia. The change took place about 16 months after Hijrak.

And the Apostle a witness Over yourselves : And We appointed the Oibla To which thou wast used, Only to test those who followed The Apostle from those Who would turn on their heels 145 (From the Faith). Indeed it was (A change) momentous, except To those guided by God, And never would God Make your faith of no effect.146 For God is to all people Most surely full of kindness. Most Merciful.

144. We see the turning Of thy face (for guidance) To the heavens: 107 now Shall We turn thee To a Oibla that shall Please thee. Turn then Thy face in the direction Of the sacred Mosque: 100 Wherever ve are, turn Your faces in that direction.

145. The Qibla of Jerusalem might itself have seemed strange to the Arabs, and the change from 143. The Gibla of Jasusalem imphi itself have seemed strange to the arabs, and the enange from it to the Kala might have seemed strange after they had become used to the other. It areality one direction or another, or east or west, in itself did not matter, as God is in all places, and is independent of Time and Place. With mattered was the sense of discipline, on which Islam Lays so much. stress; which of us is willing to follow the directions of the chosen Apostle of God? Mere quibblers about non-essential matters are tested by this.

146. What became of prayer with the Jerusalem Qibla? It was equally efficacious before the medianed God regulds our faith; every act of true and genifine faith is efficacious with Him, even if formalists pick holes in such act;

147. This shows the sincere desire of Musiafā to seek light from above in the matter of the Obla; Until the organization of his own People into a well-kint community, with its distinctive laws and ordinances, he followed a practice based on the fact that the Jews and Christians looked upon Jerusalem as a sacred city. But there was no universal Obbla among them. Some Jews turned towards Jerusalem, especially during the Capitory, as we shall see Jater. At the time of our Prophet, Jerusalem Jerusalem, especially during the Captiviti, as we shall see later. At the time of our Prophet, Jerusalem was in the hands of the Byzantine Empire, which was Christian. But the Christians oriented their churches to the Last there the word "orientation" which is a point of the compass, and not the shipper has he face to the east. For according at least to modern practice the seats in a church are so placed that different worshippers may face in different directions. The Preacher of Unity naturally wanted, in this as in other matters, a symbol of compiler unity, and his heart was naturally delighted when the Qibla towards the Ka'ba was settled. Its connection with Abraham gave it great antiquity: its character of being an Arabo, and was preached through the union of the Arabs; at the time it was adopted, the little Muslim community was shut out of it, being exiles in Medina, but it became a symbol of hope and eventual triumph, of which Muhammad lived to see the fulfilment; and it also became the centre and gathering ground of all peoples in the universal pilgrimage, which was instituted with it.

The Jews and Christians had a glimmenng of the Qibla idea, but in their attitude of self-sufficiency they were not likely to welcome the Qibla idea as perfected in Islam. A very ciear gisinpite of the old Jewish practice in the matter of the Qibla and the importance attached to it is found in the hook of Daniel, vi. 10. Daniel was a righteous man of princely lineage and inved about 600-538 BC. He was carried off to Babylon by Nebuchadoeszar, the Assyrian, but was still living when Assyria was overthrown by the Medes and Persians. - 151. The People of the Book should have known all this as well as "they knew their own sons", as their past traditions and teaching should have made them receptive of the new Message. Some commentators construe the demonstrative pronoun "this" to refer to the Apostic. <sup>153.</sup> The question is how we are to construe the pronoun knice in the original. The alternative translation would be: "To each is a goal to which he turns."

The simile of hife being a race in which we all zealously run forward to the one goal, viz, the goal of good, may be applied individually and nationally. This supplies another argument of the Kaba Qibla, viz, the unity of goal, with diversity of races, traditions and temperaments.

157. See ii. 45 and n. An additional meahing timplied in sobr is self-restraint. Baqqāni defines it in his Tafsir as following Reason and restraining Fear, Anger, and Desire. What can be a higher reward for patience, perseverance, self-restraint and constancy than that God should be with, us? For this promise opens the door to every kind of spiritual well-being.

158. The "natural perseverance and orayer" mentioned in the last verse is not sheep passivity. It is active striving in the way of Truth, which is the way of God. Such striving is the spending of one's self in God's way, either through our property or through our own lives, or the lives of those nearest and dearest to us, or it may be the loss of all the fruits of a littleme's labour not only in material goods but in some intellectual or moral gain, some position which seemed in our eyes to be eminently destrable in itself, but which we must cheerfully sarrified in exercay for the Gouse. With such sacrifice, our apparent loss may be our real gain; he that loses his life may really gain it; and the rewards or "fruit" that seem lost were mere impediments on our path to real invard progress.

These extreme sacrificer must be made under the orders and instructions of a righteous Imam, who can see the whole field of sprittual and physical warfare and judge justly of their necessity. Otherwise there is no inherent virtue in mere sacrifice as such or when exercised at the whim of an individual. Courage (the resistance to the test of Fearl and Self-denial (the resistance to the test of Hunger or Dasire), are also, if they are to be virtues, subject to similar conditions.

<sup>160</sup> The virtue of patient perseverance in faith leads to the mention of two symbolic monuments of that virtue. These are the two little hills of Safa and Marwa now absorbed in the city of Mecca, and close to the well of Zam-zam. Here, according to tradition, the ladd Hajai, motiver of-the inflant isnally copied for water in the parched desert, and in her eager quest round these hills, she found her have a several and saw the Zam-zam spring. Unfortunately the Pagan Arabs had placed a male and the most office of the control of the several control of the carly Muslims. They fell some heattien in going round these places during the Pligrimage. As a matter of fact they should have known that the Ka'ba (the House of God) had been itself defiled with idols, and was sanctified again by the purity of Mulpamma's life and teaching. The lesson is that the most sacred things may be turned to the basest uses; that we are not therefore necessarily to ban a thing missised; that if our intentions and life are oure, God will recognise them even if the world cast stones at usbecause of some intentions and life are pure, God will recognise them even if the world cast stones at us because of some evil associations which they join with what we do, or with the people we associate with, or with the places which claim our reverence.

165. Where the terrible consequences of Evil, i.e., the rejection of God, are mentioned, there is always stress laid on God's attributes of Grace and Mercy. In this case bully is also stressed, because we have just been told about the Qibla symbol of unity and are about to pass the theme of unity in diversity; in Natūre and in the social laws of human society.

166. This magnificent Nature passage stands out like a hill in a landscape, enhancing the beauty of our view, and preparing us for the every-day laws and ordinances which follow,

Note its literary architecture. God is one: and among His wondrous. Signs is the unity of design in the widest diversity of Nature. The Signs are laken from the features of beauty, power, and utility to man himself, and lead up to an appeal to Man's own intelligence and wisdom. We begin with the glory of the heavens and the earth, the wide spaces covered by man's imagination, remote and yet so near to his own life. The most striking every-day phenomenon resulting from the interrelations of the beavens and the earth is the alternation of day and might, regular and the day for work; and we can think of the work in terms of nature's beauty; the stately ships "flowing" (as the original text has it) across the seas, for communications and merchandise as between men and men. The seast thus serve us no less than land, and the give-and-take as between we are reminded of the contrast between the Winter's death of Nature and their and all kinds of living creatures. The word translated "beats" has a wide meaning, including craving creatures, insertis, etc.—all contributing to the round of Nature's operations. This leads us on to the wonderful winds, the region of the air, which man is just beginning to explore and navigate. The personated winds drive the clouds in the sky like "slaves". Here is another aspect of clouds besides that of giving rain. The fleery clouds are thinged of sunest beauty; at mid-aly they tenty. So we come back to the sky, rounding off the argument, and correlating our human tife with the Will and Power of God, if we had the wisdom to se!

Perhaps they even do lip service to God: but their heart is in their feish,—unlike the heart of the righteous, who are whollt develored, and absorbed in the love of God. If only the unrighteous could see the consequences, they would see the terrible Penatty, and that all Powers is in God's hands, not in that of any one clss. Who are the terrible Penatty, and that all Powers is in God's hands, not in that of any one clss. 170. If you reject all faith, the highest wisdom and the most salutary regulations are lost on you, you are like "dumb driven cartle" who can merely hear calls, but cannot distinguish intelligently between shades of meaning or subtle differences of values.

<sup>171.</sup> Cf ii. 18, where we are told that the rejectors of faith are "deaf, dumb and blind; they will not using their senses is that they have no wisdom. In each context there is just the appropriate deduction.

<sup>173.</sup> Dead meat: mailat: carrion; animal that dies of liself: the original Arabic has a slightly when the maning given to it in Flack (Religious Law); anything that dies of liself and is not expressly killed for food with the Takky duly pronounced on it. But there are exceptions, e.g., sha not locusts are lawful, though they have not been made specially halfal with the Takky. But even fish or locusts as carrior would be obviously ruled out.

Any other name hath been invoked Besides that of God. 1st But if one is forced by necessity, Without wilful disobedience, Nor transgressing due limits,—Then is he guiltiess.

<sup>174.</sup> For prohibited foods, of, also Q, v. 4-5; vi. 121, 138-186, etc. The teachers of Figus Religious Lawy work out the details with great elaboration. My purpose is to present general principles, not technical details. Carrion or dead meat and blood as articles of food would obvious, by cause disgust to any retned person. So would swine; flesh where the swine live on offal. Where swine are fed artificially on clean food, the objections remain: (1) that they are fifthy animals in other respects, and the flesh of fifthy animals taken as food affects the earter; (2) that swine's flesh meat; e.g., irichinous, characterised by hali-like worms in the nuscular tissue. As to food dedicated to idols of false gods, it is obviously unseemly for the Children of Unity to partiale of it.

to toto to rates gods, it is obviously unseemly for the Children of Unity to pairake of it.

175. "They eat nothing but fire into their bellier" is a literal translation that produces an effect of rude inelegance which is not in the Arabic words. Even in the matter of food and drinks, the mission of Islam is to avoid the extremes of lawisensess on the one hand and extreme formalism on the other. It has said down a few simple and verty reasonable rules. Their infraction causes loss of health or physical powers in any case. But if there is further a spirit of subjective rebellion consequences become also moral and spiritual. Then it becomes a sin against Faith and Spirit. Continuing the physical islaid, we actually awallow fire into ourselves. Imagine the torrients which we should have if we awallowed fire into our physical body! They would be infinitely worse in our spirituals state, and they would go on at the Day of Redurection, when we shall be degited even of the words which the Judge speaks to a reasonable culprit, and we shall certainly and win file Graces and Mercy.

Are in a schism he far (from the purpose).

 وَالْمُونِينَ إِمْمُ فِي مِنْ إِنَا عَلَيْنَ وَقَ الْمَسْدِينِ

<sup>176.</sup> From the mere physical regulation we are at once lifted up into the sphere of morals and faith. For the one acts and reacts on the other. If we are constantly carping at wholesome regulations, we shall do nothing but cause division and schisms among the people, and ordered society would tend to break up.

<sup>177.</sup> As if to emphasise again a warning against deadening formalism, we are given a beautiful description of the righteous and God-fearing man. He should obey salutary regulations, but he should fix his gare on the love of God and the love of his fellow-men. We are given four heads: (I) our faith should be true and sincere; (2) we must be prepared to show it in deeds of chatity to our fellow-men; (3) we must be good citizens, supporting social organisation; and (4) our own individual soul must be firm and unshaken in all circumstances. They are interconnected, and yet can be viewed separately.

<sup>178.</sup> Faith is not merely a matter of words. We must realise the presence and goodness of God, when we do so, the scales fall from our eyes; all the falsities and fleeting nature of the Present cease to enslave us, for we see the Last Day as if it were to-day. We also see God's working in His world and in us: His Powers (angels), His Messengers and His Message are no longer remote from us, but come within our experience.

<sup>179.</sup> Practical deeds of charity are of value when they proceed from love, and from no other motive. In this respect, also, our duties take various forms, which are shown in reasonable gradation: our kith and kin; or ophans (including any persons who are without support or help)) people who are in real need but who never ask it is our duty to find them out, and they come before those who ask); the stranger, who is entitled to laws of hospitality; the people who ask and are entitled to ask, i.e., not merely lazy beggars, but those who seek our assistance in some form or another (it is our duty to respond to them); and the slaves (we must do all we can to give or buy their freedom). Slavery has many insidious forms, and all are included.

<sup>180.</sup> Charity and piety in individual cases do not complate our duties. In prayer and charity, we must also look to our organised efforts: where there is a Muslim State, these are made through the State, in facilities for public prayer, and public assistance, and for the maintenance of contracts and fair dealing in all matters.

And to be firm and patient, in pain (or suffering)
And adversity,
And throughout
All periods of panic,
Such are the people
Of truth, the God-fearing.

178. ye who believe!

The law of equality <sup>182</sup>

In cases of murder; <sup>183</sup>

The slave for the slave,
The woman for the woman.
But if any remission
Is made by the brother <sup>184</sup>
Of the slain, then grant
Any reasonable demand, <sup>185</sup>
And compensate him

وَالفَّسَيْنِينَ فِي الْبَأْسَآءِ وَالفَّسَنَّةَ وَيَعِينَ الْبَتَأَيِّنَّ الْذِي مَسَدُّقُرَّ وَالْفَيْلَ الْمَيْنِ الْمَيْنَ الْمَيْزِ وَالْفَيْلَ الْمِيْنَ الْمَيْزِ الْمَيْزِ الْمَيْزِ الْمَيْزِ الْمَيْزِ الْمَيْزِ الْمَيْزِ الْمَيْزِ الْمَيْزِ وَالْمُنْقَ الْمُلْفَقَ الْمِلْمُ الْمَيْزِ الْمَيْزِ الْمَيْزِ الْمَيْزِ الْمَيْزِ اللّهِ اللّهِ اللّهِ اللّهُ الللّهُ اللّهُ الللّهُ اللّهُ الللّهُ الللّهُ الللّهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ الللّهُ اللّهُ الللّهُ الللّهُ الللّهُ الللللللّهُ الللّهُ الللللللللّهُ اللّهُ الللّهُ الللللّهُ الللللّهُ الللّهُ الللللّ

181. Then come the Muslim virtues of firmness and patience. They are to "preserve the dignity of man, with soul erect," (Burns). Three sets of circumstances are specially mentioned for the exercise of this virtue: (1) bodily pain or suffering, (2) adversives or injuries of all kinds, deserved and underserved, and (3) periods of public panic, such as war, violence, pestilence, etc.

182. Note first that this verse and the next make it clear that Islam has much mitigated the horrors of the pre-islamic custom of retailation. In order to meet the strict claims of justice, equality is of restailation, it is the strict claims of justice, equality is of restailation, it. I bright never the pre-islamic custom of the strict of the stric

Our law of equality only takes account of three conditions in civil society; free for free, slave for state, woman for woman. Among free men or women, all are rightly you cannot ask that because a wealthy, or high-horn, or influential man is killed, his life is equal to two or three lives among the poor or the lowly. Nor, in crasse of juridar, can you go into the value or abilities of a slave. A woman is mentioned separately because her position as a mother or an economic worker is different. She does not form a third class, but it division in the other two classes. One life having been lost, do not we say the sin retaliation at most, let the Law take one life under strictly prescribed conditions, and shut the door to private vengeance of tribal retaliation. But if the aggreed party consents (and this condition of consent is laid down to prevent worse evils), forgiveness and brotherly love is better, and the door of blerry is keep topen. In Western law, no fellony carf be compounded.

183. The jurists have carefully laid down that the law of  $qig\bar{g}_{\bar{g}}$  refers to murder only.  $Qig\bar{g}_{\bar{g}}$  is applicable to manslaughter, due to a mistake or an accident. There, there would be no capital punishment.

184, The brother: the term is perfectly general; all men are brothers in Islam. In this, and in all questions of inheritainer, females have similar rights to males, and therefore the masculine gender imports both sexes. Here we are considering the rights of the heirs in the light of the larger brotherhoot?, In it, 178-79 we have the rights of the heirs to life (as it were): in it, 180-82 we proceed to the heirs to properly.

185. The demand should be such as can be met by the party concerned, e.g., within his means, and reasonable according to justice and good conscience. Fix exemple, a demand rould not be made affecting the honour of a woman or a man. The whole penalty can be remitted if the aggressed not yet green, out of brotherly low. In meeting that demand the culprit on his friends should equally be generous and recognise the good-will of the other side. There should be no subterfuges, no bribes no unseemly beyelpay; otherwise the whole intention of mercy and peace is lost."

With handsome gratitude. This is a concession And a Mercy From your Lord. After this whoever Exceeds the limits Shall be in grave penalty.

179. In the Law of Equality
There is (saving of) Life
To you, O ye men of understanding;

That ye may Restrain yourselves.

180. It is prescribed,

When death approaches
Any of you, if he leave

This is due

181. If anyone changes the bequest After hearing it, The guilt shall be on those Who make the change. For God hears and knows (All things).

182. But if anyone fears

186. There are rules of course for the disposal of intestate property. But it is a good thing that a dying man or woman should, of his own free-will, think of his phrents and his next of kin, not in a spirit of injustice to others, but in a spirit of love and reverence for those who have cherished him. He must, however, do it "according to reasonable usage": the limitations will be seen further on.

187. A verbal will is allowed, but it is expected that the testator will be just to his heirs and not depart from what is considered equitable. For this reason definite shares were laid down for heirs later (see Qiv. 1), it.; it.; These define or limit the testatoring power, but do not alwayate it. For example, amongst kin their are persons to g, an orphau grandson in the presence of surtiving soils) who would not inhere in under the intestate scheme, and the testator ingulit like to provide for them. Again, there may be outside's for whom he may wish to provide, and piritis have held that he has powers of another, or alternative to the provide and piritis have the data that he has powers of another, or alternative to the provide and piritis have been that he has powers of oral disposition may interfere in two ways. One way would be in persuade the testator to change his bequest before he dies. In other way would be, after death, to get the unterse, of patients under the disk the most provide and there is no fraud. They are doing nothing wrong, Islam approves of every favilit devire for keeping brethren at peace, without highest on advarrels. Except for this, the changing of the provisions of a Will is a crime, as it is under all Law.

188. As it was prescribed; this does not mean that the Muslim fast is like the other fasts previously observed, in the number of days, in the time or manner of the fast, or in other incidents; it only means that the principle of self-femul by fasting is not a new one.

189. This verse should be read with the following verses, 185-86, in order that the incidents of the physical fast may be fully understood with reference to its spiritual meaning.

The Muslim fast is not meant for self-torture. Although it is stricter than other fasts, it also provides alleviations for special circumstances. If it were merely a temporary abstention from food and drink, it would be salutary to many people, who habitually reat and druk to excess. The instincts for food, druk, and sex are strong in the animal nature, and temporary restraint from all these enables the attention to be directed to higher things. This is necessary through prayer, coalemplation and acts of charity, not of the showy kind, but by seeking out those really in need. Certain standards are prescribed, but much higher standards are recommended.

. 190 Illness and journey must not be interpreted in an elastic sense: they must be such as to cause real pain or soffering if the last were observed. For journeys, a minimum standard of three marches is prescribed by some Content of the properties of the properti

101 Those who can do it with hardship: such as aged people, or persons specially circumstanced. The Shaft's would include a woman expecting a child, or one who is nursing a cloby, but on this point opinion is not unanimous, some holding that they cought to put in the fasts later, when they can.

185, Ramadhan is the (month) In which was sent down The Our-an, as a guide To mankind, also clear (Signs) For guidance and judgment 194 (Between right and wrong). So every one of you Who is present (at his home) During that month Should spend it in fasting. But if any one is ill. Or on a journey, The prescribed period (Should be made up) By days later. God intends every facility For you; He does not want To put you to difficulties. (He wants you) to complete ... The prescribed period, And to glorify Him 193 In that He has guided you; And perchance ve shall be grateful.

<sup>193.</sup> The regulations are again and again coupled with an insistence on two things; (4) the facilities and encressions given, and (b) the spiritual significance of the facility without a kernel. If we realise this: we shall look upon [Ramadhan, not as a burden, but as a blessing, and shall be duly grateful for the lead given to us in this matter.

<sup>194.</sup> These verses 186 and 188 are not foreign to the subject of Ramadhan, but emphasise its spiritual aspect. Here we are told of Prayer and the nearness of God, and in 188 we are asked not to "eat up" other people's substance,

And ye are their garments. 105

<sup>195.</sup> Men and women are each other's garments: *e., they are for mutual support, mutual comfort, and mutual protection, fitting into ench other as a garment fits the budy. A garment also is both for show and concealingst. The question of sex is always delicate to handle: here we are told that even is such matters a clear, open, and honest course is better than fraud or self-deception. The sex insight is classed with eating and drinking, as ammal thing to be restrained, but not to be ashamed of. The three things are prohibited during the fast by day, but permitted after the last is broken at night till the next fast commences.

<sup>196</sup> There is difference of opinion as to the exact meaning of this 1 would connect this as a parallel clause with the clause "eat and drink", which follows, all three being governed by "until the white thread", etc. That is, all three things must stop when the fast begins orgain in the early morning. Or it may mean: What is permitted is well enough, but seek the higher things ordained for you.

<sup>199.</sup> Retreat to the Mosques by night after the fast is broken is specially recommanded towards the end of Ramadhan, so that all carnal temptations may be avoided.

201. Besides the three primal physical needs of man, which are apt to make him greedy, there is a fourth gread in society the greed of wealth and property. The purpose of fasts is not complied until this fourth greed is also restrained. Ordinarily honest men are content if they refran from robbery, their, orembezelment. Two more subtle forms of the greed are mentioned here. One is where one uses one's own property for corrupting others—judges or those in authority—so as to obtain some material gain even under the cover and protection of the law. The words translated "other peoples" property "may also mean "public property". A still more subtle form is where we use our own property or property under our own control—"among vourselves" in the Text—for varin of fiviolous uses. Under the Islamic standard this is also greed. Property carries with it its own responsibilities. If we, fail to undestrated or fulld them, we have not learnt the full lesson of self-idental by fasts.

202. There were many superstitions connected with the New Moon, as there are to the present day. We are told to disregard such superstitions. As a measure of time, where the funar calendar is used, the New Moon is one great sign, for which people watch with eagerines. Muslim festivals, including the Pilgrimage, are fixed by the appearance of the New Moon. The Araba, among other superstitions, had one which made them enter their houses by the back door during or after the Pilgrimage. This is disapproved, for there is no virtue in any such artificial restrictions. All virtue proceeds from the love and fear of God.

203. This is a Muslim proverb now, and much might be written about its manufold meanings. A few may be noted bere, (b) I you want to achieve an object homourably, go about it openly and not "by a backdoor". (3) Do not best about the biash. (4) I you wish uscess in an undertaking, provide all the necessary instruments for it.

The subject of the New Moon neovides a good transition between the Ramadhin tast, which begins and ends with the New Moon, the Pilgrimage, whose tried any commence with the New Moon, and the Wars which Islam had to wage in self-defence against the Pilgrans, who wanted to exclude them from the Pilgrimage after they had driven them out of house and home.

204. War is only permissible in self-defence, and under well-defined limits. When undertaken, it may be pushed with vigoor, but not relentiessly, but only to restore peace and freedom for the worship of God. In any case strict limits must not be transgressest; women, children, old and infrom men should not be molested, nor trees and crops cut down, nor peace withheld when the enemy comes to terms.

203. This passage is illustrated by the events that happened at Budolbig in the sixth year of the Hijnt, hough it is not clear that it was revealed on that occasion. The blustims were by this time a strong and influential community. Many of them were exiles from Mecca, where the Pagans had established an intolerant autocracy, presecuting Musims, preventing them from visting their, homes, and even keeping them out by force from performing the Pilgranage during the universally recognised period of time. This was unforcated, opened of time. In general, it may be said that Islam is the religion of peace, goodwill, mutual understanding, and good faith. But it will not acquisee in wrong-doing, and its men will hold their lives cheap in defence of honour, justice, and the religion which they hold sacreed. Their ideal is that of here in defence of honour, but it is that of here in the property of th

210. At the same time the Muslims are commanded to exercice self-restraint as much as possible, Force is a dangerous weapon. It may have to be used for self-defence or self-preservation, but we must always remember that self-restraint is pleasing in the eyes of God. Even when we are fighting, it should be for a principle, not out of passion.

311. Every fight requires the wherevithals for the fight, the "sinews of war." If the war is just and in the cause of God, all who have wealth must spend if frely. That may be that contribution to the Cause, in addition to their personal effort, or if for any reason they are unable to fight. If they want to be suffered to the contribution of the cause of God, but in something which pleases their fancy, it may be that the advantage goes to the enemy, and they are by their action helping their own hards at things, their standard should be, not selfshness, but the good of their brethren, for such good is pleasing to God."

-212. See it. 150, n. 161. The Haji is the complete pilgrimage, of which the chief rites are during the first ned says of the month of $2 + 24 + 25$. The barse is a less formal pilgrimage at any time of the years are the pilgrimage and the pilgrimage and the pilgrimage is any time of the years are the intending pilgrim commences by putting on a simple garmen of uneven the years two pieces when he is some distance yet from Mecca. The putting on of the pilgrimage is symbolical of his renouncing the vanities of the world. After this and until the end of the pilgrimage is symbolical of his renouncing the vanities of the world. After this hair, use perfitmes, hunt, or do other probabited acts. The completion of the pilgrimage is symbolised by the shaving of the head for men, the resumption of the ordinary dress.

Here we are told; (1) that having once undertaken the bilgrimage, we must complete it; (2) that we must do it not for worldly ends but as a symbol of our service and worship to God; (1) that if we are prevented, for any reason, from completing the rites, a symbolical completion can be made by sending and oftening for sacrifice; sacrifice would have been olfered if we had been present personally; here we would send the sacrifice vicariously, and when it is likely to reach the place of sacrifice, we could then shave our heads and resume our ordinary dress and avocation.

In the service of God. But if we are prevented (From completing it), Send an offering For sacrifice. Such as ve may find. And do not shave your heads Until the offering reaches The place of sacrifice. And if any of you is ill. He must make an offering. Such as he can afford. But if he cannot afford it. He should fast Three days during the haii And seven days on his return, Making ten days in all. This is for those Whose household Is not in (the precincts 213 Of) the Sacred Mosque. And fear God. And know that God. Is strict in punishment.

<sup>213.</sup> If any one is taken ill after putting on the $\frac{1}{2}\tilde{m}$, so that he has to put on other clothes, or if he has trouble or skin disease in his head or insects in his har, and he has to shave his head before completion, he should fast (three days, asy the Commentators), of feed the poor, or ofter sacrifice.

<sup>214.</sup> When this was revealed, the city of Mecca was in the hands of the enemies of Islam, and the regulations about the fighting and the pilgrimage came together and were interconnected. But the revelation provides, as always for the particular occasion, and also for normal conditions. Mecca soon passed out of the hands of the enemies of Islam. People sometimes came long distances to Mecca before the Pulgrimage season began. Having performed the 'mara, they stayed on for the formal Bajj. In case the pilgrim had spend his money, he is shown what he can do, rich or poor, and yet hold his head high among his fellows, as having performed all rives as prescribed.

<sup>215.</sup> For residents in Mecca the question does not arise. They are there every day, and there is no question of 'amra for them.

<sup>216.</sup> This closes the section about the duties of fighting and introduces the connected question of pilgrimage in a sort of transition. Fighting is connected with fear, and while it is meritorious to obey God, we are warned that we must not allow our relish passions to carr us away, because it is in sott times of stress that our spirit is tested. Verse 195 ended with a benetiction for those who do good. This verse node with a warning to those who take advantage of God's cause to transgress the limits, for the punishment is equally sure. The next verse shows us the pitfalls we must avoid in a large concourse of people.

220 About midway between 'Arafat and Mina (see n. 217 to ii. 407) is a place-called Muzdalifa where the Holy Apostle offered up a long prayer. It has thus become a Sacred Minument and pilgrims are directed to follow that example on their return. A special reason for this is given in the note following.

And celebrate His praises As He has directed you. Even though, before this. Ye went astrav. 111

222 See the last note. Towards the end of the Pilgrimage the crowd is very great, and if any people loitered after Arafat, it would cause great confusion and inconvenience. The pace has therefore to be quick for every one, a very salutary regulation. Every member of the crowd must think of the comfort and convenience of the whole mass.

223. After the Pilgrimage, in Pagan times, the pilgrims used to gather in assemblies in which the praises of ancestors were sung. As the whole of the pilgrimage rites were spiritualised in Islam, so this aftermath of the Pilgrimage was also spiritualised. It was recommended for pilgrims to stay on two or three days after the pilgrimage, but they must use them in prayer and praise to God. See ii. 203 below.

224, If you hasten to get all the good things of the world, and only think of them and pray for them, you would lose the higher things of the future. The proper Muslim attitude is neither to renounce this world not to be so engrossed in it as to forget the spiritual future.

<sup>235.</sup> Three questions arise in charity: (1) What shall we give? (2) to whom shall we give? And (3) how shall we give? The answer is here. Give anything that is good, useful, helpful, valuable be properly or many; it may be a holing hand, may be advice; it may be a kind, word, "whatever charity in it. Of if you give something with a harmful intent, e.g., a sword to shall we did not of a drug or sweets or even money to some one whom you want to entrap of corrupt, it is no charity but a gift of damination. To whom should you give? It may be tempting to earn the world's praise by a gift that will be talked about; but are you meeting the needs of those who have the hirst claim on you? If you are not, you are like a nerson who defrauds creditors: it is no charity but a judged, by its unselfsh character: the degree of need of chain is refactor which you should consider; it you disregard it, there is something selfish behind it. How she ld it be given? As in the sight of God; this shust out all pretence, show, and insincerity.

<sup>236</sup> To fight in the cause of Truth is one of the highest forms of charity. What can you offer that is more precious than your own life? But here again the limitations come in. If you are a mere brawler, or a selfish aggressive person, or a vanigorious builty, you deserve the highest censure. If you offer your life to the righteous limam, who is only guided by God, you are an unselfish hero. God knows the value of things better than you do.

There may possibly be some benefit in it, but the harm is greater than the benefit, especially if we look at it from a tocial as well as an individual point of view.

241. Cambling: maisi: : literally, a means of getting something too easily, getting a profit without working for it; hence gambling. That is the principle on which gambling is prohibited. The form most familiar to the Arabs was gambling by casting lots by means of arrows, on the principle of a lottery: the arrows were marked and served the same purpose as a modern lottery ticket. Sometting, a,y, the carcase of a slaughtered animal, was divided into unequal parts. The marked arrows were drawn from a bag. Some were blank and those who drew them got nothing. Others indicated prizes which were big or small. Whether you got a big share or a small share, or nothing, depended on pure luck, unless there was fraud also on the part of some persons concerned. The principle on which the objection is based is; that, even if there is no fraul, you gain what you have not earmed, or lose on a mere chance. Dice and wagering are infairly held to be putted. Here the basis for calculations status on a lage scale. If you would be a support the proportion to risks, exactly and statistically calculated. The insurers themselves pay premia in proportion to risks, exactly and statistically calculated.

2.3 Gambling and intemperance are social as well as individual sins. They hay ruin us in our ordinary every-day worldly like, as well an our spiritual future. In case it is suggested that there is no harm in a little indulgence, we are asked to think over all its aspects, social and individual,—worldly and spiritual.

244. For orphans the best rule is to keep their property, household, and accounts separate, lest there should be any temptiation to get a perspan advantage to their guardian by miking them with the guardian's princery, household or accounts—also to keep clear of any ideas of marriage, where this influency relation exists. Q vi. 152 may hossibly suggest complete separation. But it may be an economy and an advantage to the orphan to have his property and accounts administered with the guardian's property and accounts and accounts and to have him live in the guardian's household, or to marry into the guardian's high specially where the orphan's property is small and he or she has no other friend. The test is: what is best in the orphan's interests? If the guardian' and best all into templation, even if human law does not detect him, he is told be is sinning in God's sight and that should keep him straight.

248. Hailhu: A comprehensive word referring to manner, time, or place. The most delicate matters are here referred to in the most discreet and yet helpful terms. In sex morality, manner, time, and place are all important: and the highest standards are set by social laws, by our own refined instinct of mutual consideration, and above all, by the light shed by the highest Teachers from the wisdom which they receive from our Maker, Who loves purity and cleanliness in all things.

249. Sex is not a thing to be ashamed of, or to be treated lightly, or to be indulged to excess. It is as solemn a fact as any in life. It is compared to a husbandman's tilth: it is a serious aftain to him; he sows the seed in order to reap the harvest. But he chloroses his own line- and mode of cultivation. He does not sow out of season nor cultivate in a manner which will injure or exhaust the soil. He is wise and considerate and does not run not. Coming from the simile to human beings, every kind of mutual consideration is required, but above all, we must remember that even in these matters there is a spiritual aspect. We must never forget our souls, and that we are responsible to Goud.

It was carnal-minded men who invented the doctrine of original sin; "Behold, "says the Psalmist," I, was shapen in niquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me" (Psalms II, 5). This is entirely repudiated by Islam, in which the office of father and mother is held in the highest veneration Every child of pure love is born pure. Celibacy is not necessarily a virtue, and may be a vice.

250. Our highest spiritual ambition should be the hope of meeting God. To uphold such a hope is to give gaid stings to people of faith. It would only be unrepentant sunters who would far at the meeting. Note how the most sensous matters are discussed frankly, and immediately taken up into the lofutest regions of spiritual uplifitment.

<sup>251.</sup> The Arabs had many special kinds of oaths, for each of which they had a special name in their language. Some of them related to sex matters, and caused misunderstanding, alteration, division, or separation between husband and wife. This and the following three verses refer to them, Init. 22 we are first of all told in perfectly general terms that, we are not to make an oath in the name of God an excuse for not doing the right thing when it is pronted out to us, or for refraining from doing something which will bring people together. If we were swayed by anger or passion or mete caprice, God knows our immost hearts, and right conduct and not obstinacy or quibbling is what He demands from us.

<sup>252.</sup> It has been held that thoughtless oaths, if there is no intention behind them, can be expiated by an act of charity.

The Pagan Arabs had a custom very unfair to women in wedlock, and this was suppressed by Islam. Sometimes, in a fit of anger or caprice, a husband would take an oath by God not to approach his wife. This deprived her of conjugal rights, but at the same time kept her tiod to him indefinitely, so that she could not marry again. If the husband was remonstrated with, he would say that his oath by God bound him. Islam in the first place disapproved of thoughless oath, but insisted on proper solemn intentional oaths being scrupulously observed. In a serious matter like that affecting a wife, if the oath was put forward as an excuse, the man is told that it is no excuse at all. God and the continuation is recommended, but if they are really determined against reconciliation, it is unifer kecomicalism is serious measurements. But if is they are really determined against reconciliation, it is unifer kecomicalism is recommended. But if is the only fair and equitable course, though, as the Aposite has declared, of all things permitted, divorce as it ment hat the sight of God. In the circumstance, took will forgive, for He knows the real grievances of each of the parties, and will hear the cry of all who suffer,

For three monthly periods. Nor is it lawful for them To hide what God Hath created in their wombs. If they have faith In God and the Last Day And their husbands Have the better right To take them back In that period, if They wish for reconciliation, 254 And women shall have rights Similar to the rights Against them, according To what is equitable: But men have a degree (Of advantage) over them. *** And God is Exalted in Power. 254, Islam tries to maintain the married state as far as possible, especially where children are concerned, but it is against the restriction of the hebry of men and women in such vitally importast matters as love and family life. It will check hasty action as far as possible, and lrave the door to reconciliation in shares. Even after divorce a suggestion of reconciliation is made, subject to certain precautions (mentioned in the following verses) against thoughtless action. A period of waiting l'ideal for three monthly courses is prescribed, in order to see if he marriage conditionally dissolved is likely to result in issue. But this is not necessary where the divorced woman is a virgin: Q.xxxii...49. It is definitely declared that women and men shall have similar rights against each other.

255. The difference in economic position between the sexes makes the man's right and fiabilities a little greater than the woman's. Qiv. 34 refers to the duly of the man to maintain the woman, and to a certain difference in nature between the sexes. Subject to this, the sexes are on terms of equality in law, and in certain matters the weaker sex is entitled to special protection.

256. Where divorte for mutual incompatibility is allowed, there is danger that the parties might have reperal, and again wish to separate. For prevent such connicious action repeatedly, a most expensive properties of the parties mutual definitely make up there munds, either of dissolve their union permanently, or to tive honourable lives together in mutual love and forbearance—to "hold together on equitable terms," neither party worrying the other nor groundling nor evading the duties and responsibilities of marriage.

257. If a separation is inevitable, the parties should not throw mud at each other, but recognise which is right and honourable on a consideration of all the circumstances. In any case a man is not allowed to ask back for any gifts or property he may have given to the wife. This is for the protection of the economically weaker sex. Lest that protective provision itself work agitainst the woman's freedom, an exception is made in the sext clause.

In that case there is No blame on either of them If they re-unite, provided They feel that they Can keep the limits Ordained by God. Such are the limits Ordained by God. 238. All the prohibitions and limits prescribed here are in the interests of good and honourable lives for both sides, and in the interests of a clean and honourable social file, without public or private scandials. If there is any fear that in safeguarding the economic rights, her very freedom of person may suffer, the hisband refusing the disvolution of marriage, and perhaps treating her with cruelly, then, is such exceptional cases, it is permissible to give some material consideration to the husband, but the need and equity of this should be submitted to the judgment of impartial judges, i.e., properly constituted courts. A divorce of this kind is called half.

259. Wrong (themselves as well as others); galimun; for the root meaning of sulm see n. 51. ii. 35.

260 This is in continuation of the first sentence of it. 229. Two divorces followed by re-union are permissible: the third time the divorce becomes irrevorable, until the woman marries some other man and he divorces her. This is to set an almost impossible condition. The lesson is, if a man love a woman he should not allow a sunden gust of temper or anger to induce him to take hasty action. What happens after two divorces, if he map takes her back? See n. 261 to it. 231.

As, however, the wording is perfectly general it has been held that the principle applies equally to the father and mother in wedlock: each must fulfil his or her part in the fostering of the child. On the other hand, it is provided that the child shall into be used as an excuse for driving a hard hargain on either side. By mutual consent they can agree is some course that is reasonable and equitable, both as regards the period before wearing (the maximim being two years) and the engagement of a wet-nurse, or toly analogy for attricula feeding. But the mother's privileges must not be curtisided simply because by mutual cousent site does not nurse the baby. <sup>267.</sup> The 'Iddat of widowhood (four months and ten days) is longer than the 'Iddat of divorce (three monthly courses, ii 228). In the latter the only consideration is to ascertain if there is any unbron issue of the marriage dissolved. This sicker from Axxis, 40, where it is find down that there is no 'Iddat for virgin divorces. In the former there is in addition the consideration of mounting and respect for the deceased husband. In either case, if it is proved that there is unbron issue, there is of course no question of remarriage for the woman until it is born and for a reasonable time afterwards. Meanwhile ber maintenance on a reasonable scale is chargeable to the late husband or life sextate.

<sup>269.</sup> A definite contract of remarriage for the woman during ber period of 14dat of widowhood, is forbidden as obviously unsermly, as any server in such matters. 270. Him in whose hands is the marriage tie: According to Ranaft doctrine this is the husband himself, who can ordinarily by his act dissolve the marriage. It therefore behoves him to be all the more liberal to the woman and pay her the full dower even if the marriage was not consummated.

C. 51 .- Fighting in defence of Truth and Right (ii. 243-253.) Is not to be undertaken light-heartedly, Nor to be evaded as a duty. Life and Death are in the hands of God. Not all can be chosen to fight For God. It requires constancy, " Firmness, and faith. Given these, Large armies can be routed By those who battle for God, As shown by the courage of David, Whose prowess single-handed Disposed of the Philistines. The mission of some of the apostles,. His rule larged for 25 versa, after which there was a period of 320 versa when the Israelities had a chequered history. They were not unuted among themselves, and suffered many reverses at the hands of the Midmintes, Amalektes, and other tribes of Palestine. The last of their line was Samuel, who, marks the transition towards the line of Kings on the one hand and of the later Prophets on the other. He may be dated approximately about the 11th century B.C.

They said to a Prophet " (That was) among them: 'Appoint for us a King; that we May fight in the cause of God." The people's fickleness appeared immediately he was named. They raised all sorts of petty objections to him. The chief consideration in their minds was selfainess; each one wanted to be leader and king himself, instead of desiring sincerely the good, of the people as a whole, or a teader should do.

'286 Note how the whole story is compressed into a few words as regards narration, but its spiritual lessons are dwelt upon from mahy points of view. The Old Testament is mainly interested in the narrative, which is full of detail, but says histel about the universal truths of which every true story is a parable. The Quir-an assumes the story, but tells the parable. David was raw youth, with no arms or armour. He was not known even in the Israelite camp, and the giant Golsath mocked him. Even David's own elder brother chief him for deserting his sheep, for he was a poor shepherd lad to, outward appearance, but he faith had made him more than a match for the Philistine hosts. When Saul offered his own armour and arms to David, they young hero declined, as he had not tried them, while his shepherd's slings and stiff were his well-tired timplements. He picked up the smooth pebbles on the spot from the stream of the well-tired timplements. He had not shown that the stream of the word in slay him. There was effect that he knocked down Golsah. He there was defended and were pursued and cut to pures. Apart from the main lesson that if we would preserve our national existence and our faith it is quir duly to fight with course and firmness, there are other lessons in David's story; (1) numbers, the result of the proper in David's story; (1) numbers, the result of the proper in David's story; (1) numbers, the result of the proper in David's story; (1) numbers, the result of the proper in David's story; (1) numbers, the result of the proper in David's story; (1) numbers, the result of the proper in David's story; (1) numbers, the result of the proper in David's story; (1) numbers, the result of the proper in David's story; (1) numbers, the result of the proper in David's story; (1) numbers, the result of the proper in David's story; (1) numbers, the result of the proper in David's story; (1) numbers, the result of the proper in David's story; (1) numbers, the result of the proper in David's story; (1) numbers, the result

The attributes of God are so different from anything we know in our present world that we have to be content with understanding that the only fit word by which we can name Him is "He"—the pronous standing for His name. His name—God or Allah—is sometimes misused and applied to other beings or things; and we must emphatically repudate any idea or suggestion that there can be any correct depend upon other beings and is not limited to time and space. Perhaps the attribute of Galyaka includes not only the idea of "Self-subsisting" but also the idea of "Keeping up and maintaining all life. 297. After we realise that His Life is absolute Life, His Being is absolute Being, while others are contingent and evanescent, our ideas of heaven and earth vanish like shadows. What is behind that shadow is He. Such reality as our heavens and our earth possess is a reflection of His absolute Reality. The pantheist places the wrong accent when he says that everything is He. The truth is better expressed when we say that everything is His. How then can any creatures stand before Him as of right, and claim to intercede for a fellow-creature? In the first plare both are His, and He cares as much for one as for the other. In the second place, they are both dependent on His will and command. But He in His Wisdom and Plan may grade his creatures and give one superiority over another. Then by His will and permission such a one may intercede or help according to the laws and duties laid on him. God's knowledge is absolute, and is not conditioned by Time or Space. To us, His creatures, these conditions always apply. His knowledge and our knowledge are therefore in different categories, and our knowledge only gets some reflection of Reality when it accords with His Will and Plan.

208. Three: seat, ower, knowledge, symbol of authority. In our thoughts we enhaust everything when we say the heavens and the earli. 200. A life of activity that is imported or relative would not only need rest for cartying on its own activities, but would be in reset of double rest when it has to look after and guard, or cherish, or help other activities. In contrast with this is the Absolute Life, which is free from any such need or contingency. For it is supreme above anything that we can conceive.

300. Compulsion is incompatible with religion; because (1) religion depends upon faith and will, and these would be meaningless if induced by force; (2) Truth and Error have been so clearly shown up by the mercy of God that there should be no doubt in the minds of any persons of goodwill as to the fundamentals of faith; (3) God's protection is continuous, and His Plan is always to lead us from the depths of drainess into the clearest light.

301. Hand-hold; something which the hands can grasp for safety in a moment of danger. It may be a loop or a handle, or anchor. If it is without flaw, so that there is no danger of breaking our safety is absolutely assured so long as we hold fast to it. Our safety then depends on our own will and faith: God's help and protection will always be unfailing if we hold firmly to God and frust it. Him.

From the depths of darkness He will lead them forth Into light. Of those Who reject faith the patrons Are the Evil Ones: from light They will lead them forth Into the depths of darkness. They will be Companions Of the fire, to dwell therein (For ever).

307. The three verses 358-360 have been the subject of much controverty as to the exact meaning to be attached to the incidents and the precise persons alluded to, whose names are, not mentioned, M. M. As fearned notes give some indication of the points at issue. In such matters, where the Quirah has given no names and the Holy Apostle has himself given no indication, it seems to me useless to speculate, and still worse to put forward positive opinions. In questions of learning, speculations are often interesting. But it seems to me that the meaning of the Quirah is so wide and universal that we are in danger of missing the real and eternal meaning if we go on disputing about minor points. All three incidents are such as may happen again and again in any propilet's life-time, and be seen in impersonal vision at any time. Here they are connected with Muqtafa's vision as shown by the opening words of verse 258.

<sup>303.</sup> The first point illustrated is the pride of power, and the impotence of human power as against God's power. The person who disputed with Abraham may have been Nimrod or some rulet in Babylona, or indeed elsewhere. I name Babylona as it was the original home of Abraham (Ur of the Chaldees), and Babylon prided herself on her arts and sciences in the ancient world. Science can do many wonderful hings: it could then; it can one, But the mystery of Life baffled science then, as it continues to baffle science now, after many centuries of progress. Abraham had faith, have the power of life and feath." Different kinds of powers in the hards of kings and men of knowledge. The claim in both cases is true in a very limited sense. But Abraham had cold in the first of the claim in both cases is true in a very limited sense. But Abraham canolined the claimer by going back to fundamentals. "If you had the illimate power, why could you not make the sun rise from the West?"

By a hamlet, all in ruins 104 To its roofs. He said: "Oh! how shall God Bring it (ever) to life. After (this) its death?" But God caused him To die for a hundred years. Then raised him up (again). He said: " How long Didst thou tarry (thus)?" He said: "(Perhaps) a day Or part of a day." He said: "Nay, thou hast tarried Thus a hundred years: But look at thy food And thy drink; they show No signs of age: and look At thy donkey; and that We may make of thee A Sign unto the people. Look further at the bones. How We bring them together And clothe them with flesh." 304 When this was shown clearly To him, he said: "I know That God hath power Over all things.

<sup>304.</sup> This incident is referred variously (1) to Ezekiel's vision of dry bones (Ezekiel, xxxvii. I-10); (2) to Nehemiah's visit to Jerusalem in ruins after the Capivity, and to its re-building (Nehemiah, 1, 12:0); and (3) to Uzair, or Ezra. or Exidant. the scribe, priest, and reformer, who was sent by the Persian King after the Capivity to Jerusalem. and about whom there are many Jewish legends. -As to (1), there are only four words in this verse about bones. As to (2) and (3), there is nothing specific to connect this verse with either. The wording is perfectly general, and we must understand it as general. I hink it does refer not only to individual, but to national, death and resurrection.

<sup>305.</sup> A man is in despair when he sees the destruction of a whole people, city, or civilisation. But God can cause resurrection. as He has done many times in history, and as He will do at the final Resurrection. Time is nothing before God. The doubter thinks that he has been dead or "tarried thus" a day or less when the period has been a century. On the other hand, the food and drink which left behind is inact, and as fresh as it was when he left it. But the donkey is not only dead, but nothing but bones is left of it. And before the man's eyes, the bones are reunited, clothed with flesh and blood, and restored to life. Moral: (1) Time is nothing to God; (2) It affects different things in different ways; (3) The keys of life and death are in God's hands; (4) Man's power is nothing; his falth should be in God.

<sup>306.</sup> Verse 238, we saw, illustrated God's power over Life and Death, contrasted with man's wise boasts or imaginings. Verse 259 illustrated how Time is immaterial to God's working; things, individuals and nations are subject to laws of life and death of the control of the con

<sup>309.</sup> A very high *standard is set for charity. (1) It must be in the way of God. (2) It must expect no reward in this world. (3) It must not be followed by references or reminders to the act of charity. (4) Still less should any annoyance or injury be caused to the recipient. e.g., by boasting that the giver relieved the person in the hour of need. Indeed, the kindness and the spirit which turns a blind eye to other people's faults or short-comings is the essence of charity: these things are better expected, there is abundant reward from God—material, moral, and spiritual—ecoroting to. His corn good pleasure and plan. If we spend in the way of God, it is not as if God was in need of our charity. On the contrary our short-comings are so great that we require His utmost forbearance before any good that we can do can merit His praise or reward. Our motives are so mixed that our best may really be very poor if Judged by a very strict istandard.

Are better than charity Followed by injury. God is Free of all wants, And He is most Forbearing.

264. O ye who believe! Cancel not your charity By reminders of your generosity Or by injury,—like those Who spend their substance To be seen of men. <sup>310.</sup> False charity, "to be seen of men," is really no charity. If is worse, for it betokens a disbelief in faron and the Hereafter. "God seeth well whatever ye do" (il. 265). It is compared to a hard stern rock on which by chance has falter a little soil. Good rain, which renders fertile soil more fruitful, washes away the little soil, which this rock had, and exposes its nakedness. What good can hypocrites derive even from the little wealth they may have amassed?

<sup>312.</sup> The truly spiritual nature of chairly having been explained in three parables (ii. 25), 263, 263 a fourth parable is now added, explaining its bearing on the whole of our life. Suppose we had a beautiful garden well-watered and fertile, with delightful views of streams, and a haven of rest for mind and body, suppose old age were creeping in on us, and our children were either too young to look after themselves or too feeble in health; how should we feel if a sudden whitwind came with lightning of her in its train, and burnji t up into blasting the whole of our hopes for the present and ourselves a probation. We may work hard, we may save, we may have good luck. 'We may make ourselves a goodly pleasance, and have ample means of support for ourselves and our children. A great whirlwind charged with lightning and hir comes and burns up the whole show. We are too old to begin again; our children are too young of feeble to help us to repair the mischief. Our chance is loss, because we did not provide against such a contingency. The whirlwind is the "weath to come": the provision against it is a life of true charity and righteoursness, which is the most his come.' It has provision against it is a life of true charity and righteoursness, which is the most high the suncertain life. We may even spoil our so-called "charity" by insisting on the obligation which others owne to us or by doing some harm, because our motives are not pure.

<sup>314.</sup> According to the English provesh "Charity covers a multitude of sins." Such a sentiment is strongly disapproved in Islam. Charity has value only if (1) something good and valuable is given; (2) which has been honourably earned or acquired by the giver, or (3) which is produced in nature and can be referred to as a bounty of God (1) may include such things as are of use and value to others though they may be of less use to us or superfluois to us on account of our having acquired something more suitable for our statution in life; for example, discarded clottles, of an old horse or a used motor effect is worse than useless; it is positively harmful, and the giver is a wrong doer. (2) applies to fraudulent company-promoters, who earn great credit by giving awar in charity some of their til-gotten gains, or to robbers (even if they call themselves by high-sounding names) who "too Peter to pay Paul." I slam will have nothing to do with tainted property. Its economic code requires that every gain should be honest and honourable. Even "charity" would not cover or destroy the taint. (3) lays down at about or agriculture can be so referred to. In modern commerce and speculation here is much of quite the contrary character, and charity will not cover the taint. Some kind of art, skill, or talent are God-given; it is the highest kind of charity to teach them or share their product. Others are the contrary: they are bad or tainted. In the same way some professions or services may be tainted, if these tend to moral harm.

<sup>319.</sup> It is better to seek no publicity in charity. But if it is known there is no barm. If it is for fault. The harm of publicity he known, and a pedantic show of concealment may itself be a fault. The harm of publicity hes in motives of ostentation. We can better reach the really deserving poor by quietly seeking for them. The spiritual benefit enures to our own souls, provided our motives are pure, and we are really seeking they good pleasure of God.

<sup>320.</sup> In connection with charity this means that we must relieve those really in need, whether they are good or bad, on the right path or not, Muslims or otherwise. It is not for us to judge in these matters. God will give light according to His wisdom. Incidentally it adds a further meaning to the command, "Let there be no compulsion in religion" (il. 256). For compulsion may not only bely force, but by economic necessity. In matters of religion we must not even compel by a bribe of charity. The chief motive in charity should be God's pleasure and our own spiritual gopd. This was addressed in the first instance to Muşafa'a in Medias, but it is do universal application.

<sup>322</sup> Indiscriminate acts of so-called charity are condemned as they may do more harm than good (see it 160). The real beneficiaties of charity are here indicated. They must be in want. And the same such as teaching, or acquiring knowledge or skill, or be in exile for their failure in the same acts as teaching, or acquiring knowledge or skill, or be in exile for their failure in the prevented from secking employment or doing attenuous work. "God's cause" must not be narrowly interpreted. All sincere and real service to humanity comes within the definition, as well as actual devotion to religion or to the rightous finam. Such men do not beg from door to door. It is the duty of those who are well-to-do, or of the Public Purse, to find them out.

Ye give, be assured
God knoweth it well.

<sup>323.</sup> We excaptulate the beauty of charity (i.e., unselfish giving of one's self or one's goods) before we come to its opposite, r.e. the selfish grasping greef of usury against those in need or distress. Charity instead of impoverishing you will enrich you; you will have more happiness and less fear. Contrast it with what follows,—the degendation of the grasping susere.

<sup>334</sup> Ustry is condemned and prohibited in the strongest possible lerms. There can be no question about the prohibition. When we come to the definition of Usury there is room for difference of opinion. Hadhrat 'Umar, according to 16 his Maghr, felt some difficulty in the matter, as the Apostle left this world before the details of the question were settled. This was one of the three questions on which he wished he had had more light from the Apostle, the other two being Khilista and Kallstidges iv. 12. n. 318). Our 'Ulama, ancient and modern, have worked out a great body of literature on Usury, based mainly on economic conditions as they raisted at the rise of Islam I agree with the major principles, but respectfully didger from them on the uefinition of Usury. As this being the major principles, but would accept with the conditions as they are the conditions as they are the conditions as they are the conditions as the conditions are the conditions as the conditions are the conditions as the conditions are considered to the conditions are con

<sup>329.</sup> The first part of the werse decids with trainsections involving future payment or future consideration, and the second part with transactions in which payment and delivery is see made on the leptace. Examples of the former are if goods are bought now and payment is promised at a fixed time and given in the future. If cash is paid now and delivery is continued for it as fixed time and place in the future. In such cases a written document is recommended, but it is held that the words later on in this verse, that it is "juster—more suitable as evidence, and more convenient to prevent doubts," the shall it is not obligatory in law. Examples of the latter kindt—cash-payment and delivery or the spond equite no evigence in, writing, but apparently or all writeness in such transactions are recommended.

<sup>340</sup> The scribe in such mattern assumes a fiduciary capacity; he should therefore remember to act as in the presence of God, with full justice to both parties. The art of writing he should look upon as a gulf from God, and he should use it as in His service. In an illiterate population, the scribes position is will more responsible.

Or weak, or unable Himself to dictate.330 Let his guardian Dictate faithfully. And get two witnesses Out of your own men, And if there are not two men. Then a man and two women. Such as ye choose, For witnesses. So that if one of them errs. The other can remind her. The witnesses Should not refuse When they are called on-(For evidence). Disdain not to reduce To writing (your contract) For a future period, Whether it be small Or big: it is juster In the sight of God. More suitable as evidence. And more convenient To prevent doubts Among yourselves But if it be a transaction Which ve carry out On the spot among yourselves, There is no blame on you If ye reduce it not To writing. But take witnesses Whenever ye make A commercial contract: And let neither scribe Nor witness suffer harm. If ye do (such harm). It would be wickedness In you. So fear God: For it is God That teaches you. And God is well acquainted With all things.303

1. It is desirable that the control of the contr our every-day transactions are to be carried out as in the presence of God.

283. If ye are on a journey. And cannot find-A scribe, a pledge With possession (may serve The purpose). 34 And if one of you Deposits a thing On trust with another. 333 Let the trustee (Faithfully) discharge His trust, and let him Fear his Lord. Conceal not evidence: For whoever conceals it,-His heart is tainted 186 With sin. And God Knoweth all that ye do.

(٣) سورة الية

C. 53. - Our honesty and upright conduct (ii. 284-286.) Are not mere matters of policy Or convenience : all our life in this world Must be lived as in the presence of God. The finest example of Faith we have In the Apostle's life : full of faith, Let us render willing obedience To God's Will. Our responsibility, Though great, is not a burden Greater than we can bear : let us Pray for God's assistance, and He will help. .

SECTION: 40.

284. INTo God belongeth all That is in the heavens And on earth, 'Whether Ye show what is in your minds Or conceal it, God Calleth you to account for it.

334. A pledge or security stands on its own independent footing, though it is a very convenient form of closing the bargain where the parties cannot trust each other, and cannot get a written agreement with proper witnesses.

335. The law of Deposit implies great trust in the Depositary on the part of the Depositor, Depository becomes a trustee, and the doctrine of Trust can be further dreveloped on that basis. The trustee's duty is to guard the interests of the person on whose behalf he holds the trust and to render back the property and accounts when required according to the terms of the trust. This duty again is linked to the a control of Religion, which requires a higher standard than Law.

336. It sometimes happens that it some inconvenient piece of evidence is destroyed or concealed, we gain a great advantage materially. We are warred not by vield to such a termination. The concealment of evidence has a serious effect on our own moral and spiritual life, for it tainst the very source of higher life, as typiced by the heart. The heart is also the seal of our secrets. We are told that the ain will reach our most set are being, though the sin may not be visible or open to the world. Further, the heart is the seat of our affections.

He forgiveth whom He pleaseth. And punisheth whom He pleaseth. For God hath power Over all things.

- 285. The Apostle believeth In what hath been revealed To him from his Lord. As do the men of faith. Each one (of them) believeth In God, His angels, His books, and His apostles. " "We make no distinction (they say) Between one and another 136 Of His apostles." And they say : "We hear, and we obey: (We seek) Thy forgiveness, 130 Our Lord, and to Thee Is the end of all journeys,"
- 286. On no soul doth God Place a burden greater Than it can bear. 300 It gets every good that it earns, And it suffers every ill that it earns. (Pray:) " Our Lord! Condemn us not If we forget or fall-Into error; our Lord! Lay not on us a burden Like that which Thou Didst lay on those before u1; 341

And so we end the whole argument of the Sûra with a prayer for God's help, not in our own selfish ends, but in our resolve to uphold God's truth against all Unbelief.

<sup>338</sup> Cf. ii. 136 and ii. 253, n. 289. It is not for us to make any distinction between one and another of God's apostles: we must honour them all equally, though we know that God in His wisdom sent them with different kinds of mission and gave them different degrees of rank.

<sup>339.</sup> When our faith and conduct are sincere, we realise how far from perfection we are, and we humbly pray to God for the forgiveness of our sims. We feel that God imposes no burden on us that we cannot bear, and with this realisation in our hearts and in the confession of our lips, we go to Him and ask for His help and guidance:

<sup>340,</sup> Cf. ii. 233. In that verse the burden was in terms of material wealth; here it is in terms of spiritual duty. Assured by God that He will accept from each soul just such duty as it has the ability to offer, we pray further on for the fulfilment of that promise.

<sup>341.</sup> We must not be arrogant, and think that because God has granted us His favour and mercy we have no need to exert outselves, or that we are outselves superior to those before us. On the contrary, knowing how much they failed, we pray that our burdens should be lightened, and we confess our realisation that we have all the greater need for God's mercy and forgiveness.

Our Lord! lay not on us A burden greater than we Have strength to bear. Blot out our sins, And grant us forgiveness. Have mercy on us. Thou art our Protector; Help us against those Who stand against Faith " رَتِبَاوَلَا عُصِّلِنَا مَالَامُلَافَةُ لَنَابِيَّةٍ عَوَاعْمُنَّانَا وَاغْفِرْلِنَا فَارْمُونَنَّأَ اَنَّ مَوْلِنَا فَأَضْرُرًا عَلَىٰ لَفُوْ مِالْكُسِيِّةِ فِينِ

· APPENDIX I.

The Abbreviated Letters (Al-Mugaffa'as)

Certain Sūras have certain initials prefixed to them, which are called the "Abbreviated Letters". A number of conjectures have been made as to their meaning. Opinions are divided as to the exact meaning of each particular letter or combination of letters, but it is agreed that they have a mystic meaning.

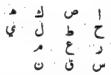

Mystic meaning, not intelligible at first sight, is not inconsistent with the character of the Qur-an as a "plain book". The book of nature is also a plain book, but how few can fully understand it? Every one can get out of the Qur-an plain guidance for his life according to his capacity for spiritual understanding. As his capacity grows, so will his understanding grow. The whole Book is a Record for all time. It must necessarily contain truths that only gradually unfold themselves to humanity. Even parables and tales of mystic meaning employ symbolism. The plain man may find the symbolism helpful, as a soldier finds his National Flag helpful. But what proportion of British soldiers or citizens understands the full symbolism of the British from fack?

This is not a mystery of the same class as "mysteries" by which we are asked to believe against the dictates of reason. If we are asked to believe that one is three and three is one, we can give no intelligible meaning to the words. If we are asked to believe that certain initials have a meaning which will be understood in the fullness of time or of spiritual development, we are asked to draw upon Faith, but we are not asked to do any violence to our reason.

I shall try to discuss some of the probable meanings of any particular abbreviated letter or set of abbreviated letters on the first occasion on which it appears in the Quran. But it may be desirable here to take a general view of the facts of their occurrence to help us in appreciating the various views which are held about them.

There are 29 letters in the Arabic alphabet (counting homes and alif as two letters), and there are 29 Stras which have abbreviated letters prefixed to them. One of these Stras (S. xiii.) has two sets of abbreviated letters, but we need not count this Stratwice. If we take the half of the alphabet, omitting the fraction, we get 14, and this is the number of letters which actually occur in the Muqstja*42.

The 14 letters, which occur in various combinations, are :-

The science of phonetics tells us that our vocal sounds arise from the expulsion of the air from the lungs, and the sounds are determined by the way in which the breath passes through the various organs of speech, e.g., the throat (guttural), or the various positions of the tongue to the middle or front of the palate or to the teeth, or the play of the lips. Everyone of these kinds of sounds is represented in these letters.

Let us now examine the combinations.

Three of these letters occur alone, prefixed each to only one Sura. The letters and Suras are:—

s.	xxxviii.	 ش
s.	Lii,	 ʊ
s.	lxviii.	5

The combinations of two letters occur in ten Sūras as shown below. Three of them occur only once each, but the fourth ( >>> ) occurs in seven consecutive Sūras.

S. xx.	 3
S. xxvii.	المنتق -
S. xxxvi.	يس
S. xl. S. xli. S. xlii. S. xliii. S. xliii. S. xliv. S. xlv.	¥

Note that S. xlii. has a double combination of abbreviated letters, one of two followed by one of three. See under combinations of five.

There are three combinations of three letters each, occurring as follows in 13 Sūras:—

S. ii.
S. iii.
S. xxix.
S. xxx.i.
S. xxxii.
S. xxxii.
S. xxii.
S. xi.
S. xi.
S. xii.
S. xiv.
S. xv.
S. xv.

S. xxviii,

Combinations of four lettres occur twice, each only once :--

S. vii.

S. xiii. Note that the three preceding and the two following Suras have the triple letters:

Finally there remain the combinations of five letters, each of which occurs once only, as follows:—

In S. xlii. the and was are put in separate verses. From that point of view they may be considered two separate combinations. The first combination has already been listed under the group of two-letter combinations.

This arithmetical analysis brings certain facts into prominence. I do not know how far they have a bearing on the inner meaning of the Muqalla at.

The combinations of abbreviated letters that run in a series in consecutive Suras is noticeable. For example, cocurs in seven consecutive Suras from xl. to xlvi. The combination cocurs in six consecutive Suras x to xv., but in one of them (S. xiii.) it is modified to [3], connecting it with the [3] series. The [3] series covers 6 Suras. It begins with S. ii. and S. iii., which are practically the beginning of the Qur-an, and ends with the four consecutive Suras xxix. to xxxii. I call S. ii. and S. iii. practically the beginning of the Qur-an, because S. i. is considered a general introduction to the Qur-an, and the first Sipara is commonly known as [3], the first verse of S. ii. The combination [3] is prefixed to S. xxvi, and S. xxviii., but the intervening S. xxvii. has the combination [3], which may be considered a syncopated form, or the three-letter combination [3] may be considered an extended form of [3]. Again the question arises: Does the [3] in [3], and [3], stand for the same signification, or does it mean a different thing in each case? We may generalise and say that there are three series of six, and one series of three, and the others occur all singly.

We should logically look for a common factor in the Sūras bearing the same initials, and this factor should be different for Sūras bearing other initials. In all cases where the abbreviated letters occur, there is some mention of the Qurân or the Book. The Irgān makes an exception in the case of three Sūras, Anhābūt (S. xixi), Rūm (S. xxx), and Nūn (S. xxix), Rīm (S. xxx), and Nūn (S. xvixi), Rūm (S. xxix), Anhabūt (R. xvixi), Rūm (S. xxix), Anhabūt (S. xxixi), Rūm (S. xxix), Anhabūt (S. xxixi), Rūm (S. x

These are general considerations, which I have thought it most convenient to present in the form of an Appendix.

INTRODUCTION TO SURA III (Al-i-'lmran).

This Sûra is cognate to Sûra II, but the matter is here treated from a different point of view. The references to Badr (Ramadhan, H. 2) and Uhud (Shawwal, H. 3.) give a clue to the dates of those passages.

Like Stra II, it takes a general view of the religious history of mankind, with special reference to the People of the Book, proceeds to explain the birth of the new People of Islam and their ordinances, insists on the need of struggle and fighting in the cause of Truth, and exhorts those who have been blessed with Islam to remain constant in Faith, pay for guidance, and maintain their spiritual hope for the Future.

The new points of view developed are: (1) The emphasis is here laid on the duty of the Christians to accept the new light; the Christians are here specially appealed to, as the Jews were specially appealed to in the last Süra; (2) the Jessons of the battles of Badr and Uhud are set out for the Muslim community; and (3) the responsibilities of that community are insisted on both internally and in their relations to those outside.

Summary.—God having revealed His Book, confirming previous revelations, we must accept it in all reverence, try to understand its meaning, and reject the base motives which make Truth unacceptable to those who reject Faith. (iii. 1-20, and C. 54.)

The People of the Book had only a portion of the Book, and if they reject the complete Book, the People of Faith must part company with them, and their day is done. (iii, 21-30, and C. 55.)

The story of the family of 'Imran (the father of Moses) leads us from the Moseic Dispensation to the miracles connected with the birth of Jesus and his ministry, (iii, 31-63, and C. 55.)

God's revelation being continuous, all people are invited to accept its completion in Islam, and controversies are deprecated. The Muslims are asked to hold together in union and harmony, and are promised security from harm from their enemies, and enjoined to seek friendship among their own people, (iii, 64-120, and C. 57.)

The battle of Badr showed how God helps and upholds the virtuous, and how patience, perseverance, and discipline find their reward; on the other hand, the lessons of Uhud must be learnt, not in despair, but in the exercise of the higher virtues and in contempt of pain and death. (iii. 121-148, and C. 58.)

The misfortunes at Uhud are shown to be due to the indiscipline of some, the indecision and selfishness of others, and cowardice on the part of the Hypocrites, but no enemy can hurt God's Cause. (iii. 149-180, and C. 59.)

The taunts of the enemy should be disregarded, and sincere prayer offered to God, Who would grant His servants success and prosperity. (iii, 181-200, and C. 60.)

C. 54.—The Qur-an revelation has, step by step,
(in. 120) Confirmed the Law of Moses and the Gospel
Of Jesus, It is a guide from God,
And appeals to reason and understanding.
Let us understand it rightly, in reverence
And truth, unswayed by those who reject
Faith, and seeking ever the reward
Of the pleasure of God, through firmless,
Patience, discipline, and charity, and offering others
The light which we have ourselves received.

Sura III.

Al-i-'Imran, or The Family of 'Imran.

342. See note to ii. 1. 343. Cf. ii. 255.

344. In some editions the break between verses 3 and 4 occurs here in the middle of the sentence, but in the edition of Hāfē 'Ulmmān, followed by the Egyptian Concordance Fāfē·wr-Rāḥmās, the break occurs at the word Furqās. In verse-divisions our classicists have manify followed rhythm. As the word Furqās from this point of view is parallel to the word Jurāḥm, which ends the next verse. I have accepted the verse-division at Furqās as more in consonance with Quranic rhythm. It makes no real difference to the numbering of the verses, as there is only a question of whether one line should go into verse 3 or verse 4.

From this point onwards in this Stra. M. M. A. followed by H. G. S., numbers the vesses so that there is a deficiency of one compared with the accepted numbering in the most approved Texts, which I have followed, including that of the Egyptian Royal Edition and that of our Anjuman-i Birmâyatilâtim.

345. Criterion : Furgan : for meaning see ii. 53, n. 68.

346. Who can penetrate the mystery of life when a new life is just being botn, except God? The reference to the mystery of birth prepares us for the mystery of the birth of Jesus mentioned in in. 41 and the following verses.

There is no god but He, The Exalted in Might, The Wise.

7. In e it is Who has sent down To thee the Book: In it are verses Basic or fundamental (Of established meaning); They are the foundation 307 Of the Book: others Are allegorical. But those In whose hearts is perversity follow The part thereof that is allegorical, Seeking discord, and searching For its hidden meanings. But no one knows Its hidden meanings except God. And those who are firmly grounded 345 In knowledge say: "We believe In the Book; the whole of it Is from our Lord : " and none Will grasp the Message Except men of understanding.

<sup>347.</sup> This passage gives us an important clue to the interpretation of the Holy Qur-an. Broadly speaking it may be divisited into two portions, not given separately, but interminiged; sur. (1) the nucleus of foundation of the flook, literally "the mother of the Book", and (2) the part which is figurative, metaphorical, or allegorical. It is very fascinating to take up the latter, and extrose our ingenuity about its inner meaning, but it refers to such profound spiritual matters that human language is inadequate to it, and though people of wisdom may get some light from it, no one should be diagnately, as the final meaning is known to God alone. The Commentators usually understand the verses" of established meaning "kmakkam) to refer to the categorical orders of the Sharka (or the LAW), which are plant to everyone's understanding. But perhaps the meaning is wider; the "mother of the book" must include the very foundation on which all Law rests, the essence of God's Message, as distinguished from the various flustrative parables, allegories, and ordinances.

If we refer to x 1 and xxxx, 23, we shall find that in a sense the whole of the Qur-an has both "established meaning" and altegracial meaning. The division is not between the verses, but between the meanings to be attached to them. Each werse is but a Sign of Symbolic what it represents is smeething immediately applicable, and something eternal and independent of time and space—the "rums of ideas" in Plato's Pholosophy. The wire man will understand that there is an "essence" and an illustrative clothing given to the essence, throughout the Book. We must try to understand it as best we can, but not waste our energies in disputing about matters beyond our depth.

349. This is the prayer of those who are firmly grounded in knowledge. The more they know, the more they realise how little they know of all the depths of Truth in the spiritual world. But they have Faith. The glinpages they get of Truth they wash to hold fast unther hearts, and they pray to God to preserve them from deviating even from what light they have got. They are sure of their eventual return to God, when all doubts will be solved.

350. From the beginning of the world, sin, oppression, arrogance, and want of Faith have gone together. The Pharaoh of the time of Moses relied upon his power, his ferritory, his armies, and his resources to more's at Moses the man of Goid and to uppress the prople of Moses. Gold saved the Israelites and punished their oppressors through many plagues and calamities.

351. As Moses warned the Egyptians, so the warning is here sounded to the Pogan Arabs, the Jaws and the Christians, and all who resisted Faith, that their resistance would be in vain. Already the battle of Boar treferred to in the next verse) had been a warning how Faith must conquer with the help of God. The next few decades saw the Byrantine and the Pessian Empires overthrewn because of their arrogance and their resistance to the Law of God.

352. This refers to the battle of Badr in Ramadhan in the second year of the Hijra. The little exiled community of Meccan Muslims, with their friends in Medina, had organised themselves into a God-feraing community, hiw were constantly in danger of being stacked by their Pagan enemies of Mecca, in aliance with some of the disaffected elements (Jews and Hypocities) in or near Medina where the second of the 353, It was impossible, without the miraculous aid of God, for such a small and ill-equipped force as was the Muslim band, to defeat the large and well-found force of the enemy. But their striness, zeal, and discipline won them divine aid. Enemy prisoners stated that the enemy ranks saw the Muslim force to be many times larger than it was.

354. The pleasures of this world are first enumerated: women for love; sons for strength and pride; hondred riches, which procure all luxwines; the best and finest profigere horse; suttle, the measure of wealth in the ancient world, as well as the means and symbols of good farming in the modern world; and broad acress of well-tilled land. By analogy, we may include, for our mechanized age, machines of all kinds—tractors, motor-cars, aeroplanes, the best internal-combustion regimes, etc., etc. In 'heaped-up hoads of gold and silver.'' the Arabic word translated hards is genafize plural of guardar, which literally means a Talent of 1,200 ounces of gold. That quantity of pure gold would coin.into 597 sterling gold sovereigns, each containing 12272 grains of gold 22 carats fine. These at present prices [say, Rs. 20 to the soverign) would be worth more than a lakh of rupees, Heaped hoadts of quagity would therefore be boundless wealth 'as wish can claim.'

<sup>337.</sup> True servants of God are described in iii. 16 and 17. They have faith, humility, and hope (iii. 16); and they have certain virtues (iii. 17) eis., (17 patience, stead astness, self-restraint, and all that goes under the full definition of gabr: this shows a certain attitude of mind; (2) in all their dealings they are tue and sincere as they are also insight promises and words; this marks them out in social conduct; (3) forther, their sprittudes the promises and words; this marks them out in social conduct; (4) their sprittudes of their promises and seep, an inner counterpart of their outward conduct; (4) their and God shows itself in their love of their fellow-men. for they are ready and liberal in charity; and (5) their self-discipline is so great that the first thing they do every morning is humbly to approach their God.

<sup>358.</sup> God Himself speaks to us through His revelations (through angels) and through His Creation, for all Nature glorides God. No thinking mind, if it only judges the matter fairly, can fail to find the same witness in his own heart and conscience. All this points to the Unity of God, His exatted nature, and His widdom.

361. The People of the Book may be supposed to know something about the previous religious history of mankind. To them the appeal should be easy and intelligible, as all Religion is one, and it is only being renewed in Islam: But the appeal is also made to the Pagan Arabs, who are unlearned, and who can well be expected to follow the example of one of their own, who received divine entightenment, and was able to bring new knowledge to them. A great many of both these classes did to. But the few who resisted God's grace, and actually threatened and persecuted those who believed, are told that God will look after His own.

Examples of the Prophets slain were: "the righteous Flood shed upon the earth, from the blood of inghteous Abel undo the blood of Zacharas, son of Barachias, whom ye slew between the temple and the altar" Matt xxiii. 35 Cf. Q. is bl. n. 75. Again, John the Hapitst (Yahya noble, chaste, a prophet, of the goodly company of the righteous, Q. in. 39), was bound, imprisoned, and beheaded, and his head presented to a daircing harfol: Matt.xiv. 1-11. An example of x just man in another nation, who taught righteousness and was put to death, was Socrates, the Greek philosopher.

365, Cf. ii 217, end.

366. A partion of the Book. I conceive that God's revelation as a whole throughout the ages is "The Book." The Law of Moses, and the Gospel of Jesus were portions of the Book. The Qur-an completes the revelation and is par excellent the Book of God.

367. The Commentators mention a particular incident when a dispute was submitted by the Jew-for arbitration to the Holy Apostte. He appealed to the authority of their own books, but they tried to conceal and prevaricate. The general lesson is that the People of the Book should have been the first to welcome in Mulanmad the living exponent of the Message of God as a whole, and some of them did so; but others turned away from guilty arrogance, relying on corrupted texts and doctrines forged out of their own fancies, though they were not conformable to reason and good sense.

<sup>36)</sup> Another glorious passage, full of meaning, both obvious and mystic. The governing phrase in it all is: "In Thy hand is all Good." What is the standard by which we may judge Good? It is Good's Will. Therefore when we submit to God's Will, and real visual ullumnates us, we set the highest food. There has been and is much controvery as to what is the Highest Good. But further, if light and darkness are newed as symbols of (a) knowledge and ignorance, (b) happiness and misrey, (s)partitual insight and spiritual bindness, God's Plan or Will works here too as in the physical world, and in His hand is all Godd. 1.

<sup>371</sup> We can interpret Dead and Living in even more senses than Day and Night: death physical, in the little trail emotional, spiritual. Life and Death may also apply to collective, group, or national life. And who his ever solved the mystery of Life? But Faith refers it to God's Will and Plan.

<sup>373.</sup> If Faith is a fundamental matter in our lives our associations and friendships will naturally be with those who share our Faith. "Evil communications corrupt good manners"; and evil company may corrupt Faith. In our ordinary every-day affairs of business, we are asked to seek the help of Believers rather than Ohbelievers. Only in this way can our community be strong in organisation and unity. But where there is no question of preference, or where in self-delence we have to take the assistance of those not belonging to our Faith, that is permissible. In any case we must not weaken our Brotherhood: we must try to make it stronger if possible.

To Zakariya, in his old age, was born A son Yahya, amid prodigies:
Yahya was the herald of Jesus
The son of Mary, and was known
As John the Baptist. Jesus
Was of virgin birth,
And performed many miracles.
But those to whom he came as Prophet
Rejected him, and plotted for his death.
Their plots failed, for God's Plan
Is above man's plots. So will it be
With Islam, the Truth from all detentity.

<sup>374.</sup> The Prophets in the Jewish-Christian-Muslim Dispensation form one family literally. But the argument is wider. All mee of God form spiritually one family. If you love and obey God, love and obey His Messenger who is actually present with you (in the fiesh or in his teaching). Your love, obselence, and discipline will be the test of your Faith.

<sup>375.</sup> Now we begin the story of Jesus, As a prelude we have the birth of Mary and the parallel story of John the Baptist, Yabyā it soon of Zakariya. Yabyā's mother Elisabeth was a cousin of Mary the mother of Jesus (Luke 1,3b), and therefore John and Jesus were cousins by blood, and there was a spiritual cousinhood in their birth and career. Elisabeth was of the daughters of Aaron (Luke 1,5), of a priestly family which went pack to Aaron the brother of Moses and so no of Imran. Her husband Zakariya was actually a priest, and her cousin Mary was presumably also of a priestly family. By tradition Mary's mother was called Hannah in Latin, Anna, and its English, Annel, and her father was called Imran. Hannah is therefore both a descendant of the priestly house of 'Imrân, "a woman of 'Imran' in a double sense.

376 Muharrar=freed from all worldly affairs and specially dedicated to God's service. She expected a son, who was to be a special devotee, a miraculous son of the old age of his parents, but God gave her instead a daughter. But that daughter was Mary the mother of Jesus, the chosen one among the women: iii. 45

<sup>377.</sup> The mother of Mary expected a malechild. Was she disappointed that it was a female child? Nor she had Faith, and she knew that God's Plan was better than any wishes of hers. Mary was no ordinary girl; only God knew what it was that her mothet brought forth.

<sup>378.</sup> The female child could not be devoted to Temple service under the Mosac-law, as she intend ed. But she was marked out for a special desting as a marcle-child, to be the mother of the marcle-child lesus. She was content to seek God's protection for her against all evil. There is a certain sense of pride in the girl on the part of the mother.

<sup>379</sup> Mary grow under God's special protection. Her sustenance, under which we may include both her physical needs and her spiritual lood, came from God, and her growth was indeed a "goodly growth" which I have tried to express in the Text by the words "purity and beauty". Some apo-cryphal Christian writings say that she was brought up in the Temple to the age of twelve like a dove, and that she was fed by anneels.

<sup>380.</sup> The birth of Mary, the mystic mother of Jesus, of John the Bagtist, the precursor of Jesus, and of Jesus, the mystic prophet of Israel, whom Israel rejected, occurred in that order chromologically, and are told in that order. They are all inter-connected. Zakariya prayed for no ordinary son. He and his wife were past the age of parenthood. Seeing the growth of the mystic girl Mary, the prayed for some mystic child from God,—"from Thee, a progeny that is pure", Perhaps he had adoption in his mind. Did he want to adopt Mary? To his surprise, he is given a son in the flesh, ushered in by a mystic Sign.

<sup>382,</sup> Mary the mother of Jesus was unique, in that she gave birth to a son by a special miracle, without the intervention of the customary physical means. This of coinse does not mean that she to pray to God as anyone else. The Christian dogma, in all sects except the Unitarian, holds that Jesus was God and the son of God. The worship of Mary became the practice in the Roman Catholic Church, which calls Mary the Mother of God. This seems to have been endorsed by the Countri of Ephesus in 431, in the century before Muhammad was born to sweep away the corruptions of the Church of Christ. For Jamen's as meaning all nations, see iii, 96, a, 433.

<sup>383,</sup> Things unseen: mystic, spiritual. The whole story has a mystic meaning, and it would be unseemly to dispute or speculate about it.

<sup>.388.</sup> The ministry of Jesus lasted only about three years, from 30 to 33 years of his age, when in the eyes of his enemies he was crucified. But the Gospel of Luke (i), 46) describes him as disputing with the doctors in the Temple at the age of 12, and even earlier, as a 'child, he was "strong in spriit, filled with wisdom" (Luke ii. 46). Some apocryphal Gospels describe him as preaching from inflancy.

<sup>390.</sup> She was addressed by angels, who gave her God's message. In reply she speaks as to God. In reply, apparently an angel again gives God's message.

<sup>392.</sup> The story of Jesus is told with special application to the time of the Apostle Muhammad. Note the word helpers (An.Ar) in this connection, and the reference to plotters in iti 54. It was the one Religion—the Religion of Viold, which was unessence the religion of Apoham, Moses, and Jesus. The argument runs: why do ye then now make divisions and reject the living Teacher? Islam is: bowing to the Will of God. All who have faith should bow to the Will of God. All who have faith should bow to the Will of God. All who have faith should bow to the Will of God. All who have faith should bow to the Will of God and be Missims.

<sup>393.</sup> The Arabic makera has both a bad and a good meaning, that of making an intricate plan to carry out some secret purpose. The enemies of God are constantly doing that. But God—in whose hands is all good—has this plans also, against which the evil ones will have no chance whatever.

<sup>198.</sup> After a description of the high position which Jesus occupies as a prophet, we have a repudia-tion of the dogma that he was God, or the son of God, or anything more than a man. If it is saud that he was born without a human father, Adam was also so born. Indeed Adam was born without either a human father or mother. As fat as our physical bodies are concerned they are mere dust. In God's sight Jesus was as dust just as Adam was or humanity is. The greatness of Jesus arose from the divine command "Be": for after that he was—more than dust—a great spointial leader and teacher.

<sup>399.</sup> The truth does not necessarily come from prests, or from the superstitions of whole peoples. It comes from God, and where there is a direct revelation, there is no room for doubt.

<sup>401.</sup> We are now in a position to deal with the questions which we left over at it. 87. Jesus is nome than a man. It is against eason and revelation to call him God or the son of God. He is called the son of Mary to emphasize this. He had no known human father, as his bitth was intraculous. But it is not this which raises him to his high spiritual position as a prophet, but because God called him to his office. The praise is due to God. Who by His word give him spiritual strength—"strengthened him with the holy spirit". The miracles which surround his story relate not only to his birth and his life and death, but also to his mother Mary and his precursor Yahya. These were the "Clear Signs" which he brought. It was those who misunderstood him who obscured his clear Signs and surrounded him with spirites of their own invention.

<sup>412.</sup> All our duties to our fellow creatures are referred to the service and faith we owe to God. But in the matter of truth an appeal is made to our own self-respect as responsible beings; is it becoming that we should be false to our own word, to ourselves? And then we are reminded that the utmost we can gain by falsifying God's word or being untrue to ourselves is but a miserable price. We get at best something very pathry as the price for selling our very souls.

<sup>418.</sup> The Muslim position is clear. The Muslim does not claim to have a religion peculiar to himself. Islam is not a sect or an ethnic religion. In its view all Religion is one, for the Truth is one. It was the religion preached by all the earlier Prophets. It was the right haupin by all the inspired Books. In essence it amounts to a consciousness of the Will and Plan of God and a joyful submission to that Will and Plan. If any one wants a religion other than that, he is false to his own nature, as he is false to God's Will and Plan. Such a one cannot expect guidance, for he has deliberately renounced guidance.

Before it was promulgated Israel was free to choose its own food. I take "Israel" here to stand for the people of Israel.

<sup>421</sup> The greater freedom of Islam in the matter of the ceremonial law, compared with the Mosaic is not a reproach but a recommendation. That incident shows that man may be weak, but if he allows his weak will to be governed by the example of men of God, he may yet retrieve his weakness.

<sup>444.</sup> Gratitude to God is not to be measured by words. It should show itself in conduct and life. God helps those who show constancy, courage, and discipline, and use all the human means at their disposal, not those who fold their hands and have no faith. But God's help is determined on considerations exalted far above our petty human motive, and by perfect wisdoms, of which we can have only faint elimpset.

<sup>449</sup> Upud is as much a sign-post for Islam as Badr. For us in these latter days it carries an ever greater lesson. God's help will come if we have faith, obedience, discipline, unity, and the spirit of acting in righteousness and justice. If we fait, his mercy is a laways open to us. But it is abso open to our enemies, and those who seem to us His enemies. His Plan may be to bring sinners to repentance, and to teach us righteousness and windom through those who seem in our eyes to be rebellious or even defant. There may be good in them that He sees and we do not,—a humbling thought that must lead to our own self-examination and self-improvement.

no other words, Hell contrasted with Reaven. Led we should think that haven is a sor of enclosed material Garden somewhere in the skies, we are told that is table the sense of the whole of the heavens and the earth,—all the creation we can imakine. In other words our spiritual felicity covers not merely this or that part of our being, but all life and all existence. Who can measure its width, or length, or depth?

<sup>453.</sup> Another definition of the righteous (so. 14-35). So far from grasping material wealth, they give freely, of themselvés and their substance, not only when they are well-off and it is easy for them to do so, but also when they are in difficulties, for other people may be in difficulties at the same time. They do not get ruffled in adversity, or get angry when other people behave badly, or their own good plans fail. On the contrary they redouble thair efforts. For the charity—or good deed—is all the more necessary in adversity. And they do not throw the blame on others. Even where such blame is due and correction is necessary, their own mind is free from a sense of grievance, for they forgive and cover other men's faults. This as far as other people are concerned. But we may be ourselved at fault. In site, it is a far as other people are concerned. But we may be ourselved at fault. In such circumstances his behaviour is described in the next vete.

<sup>454.</sup> The righteous man, when he finds he has fallen into sin or error, does not whine or despair, but asks for God's forgiveness, and his faith gives him hope. If he is sincere, that means that he abandons his wrong conduct and makes amends

<sup>455.</sup> Sin is a sort of oppression of ourselves by ourselves. This follows from the doctrine of personal responsibility as opposed to that of blind fate or of an angry God or gods lying in wait for revenge or injury on mankind,

C. 59.—Uhud showed how dangerous it was (iii. 149-180.) To lend ear to enemy suggestions, To disobey orders, dispute, lose courage, Or seek selfish ends; some even followed

461. There is a slight touch of irony in this. As applied to the archers at Uhud, who deserted their posts for the sake of plunder, they might have got some plunder, but they put themselves and the whole of their army into lepondry. For a little worldly gain, they nearly lost their souls. On the other hand, those who took the long view and fought with staunchness and discipline,—their reward was swift and sure. If they died, they got the crown of martyrdom. If they lived, they were heroes honoured in this life and the next.

The evil course of turning back. But great is God's mercy: where He helps, No harm can come. Trust your Leader. The Hypocrites, in withdrawing from battle, Were really helping the Unbelievers, But glorious were those who knew No fear: those killed in the Cause of God Yet live and thrive and do rejoice; And never can those who fight against Faith Hurt in the least the Cause of God.

SECTION 16.

- 150. Nay, God is your Protector, And He is the best of helpers.
- 151. Soon shall We cast terror
  Into the hearts of the Unbelievers,
  For that they joined companions
  With God, for which He had sent

  His promise to you

  And disobeyed it

  And some that desire
  The Hereafter. Then did He

و تَأْثُنَا ٱلَّذِينَ وَإِنَّهُمْ إِن تُطْبِعُوا الَّذِينَ

<sup>462.</sup> The order was: not to run after booty, but strictly to maintain discipline. Uhud was in the beginning a victory for the Muslims. Many of the enemy were slain, and they were retiring when a part of the Muslims, against orders, ran in pursuit, attracted by the prospects of booty. See note to iii. 121.

Divert you from your foes In order to test you.463 But He forgave you: For God is full of grace To those who believe.

153. Behold! ve were climbing up The high ground, without even Casting a side glance At any one, and the Apostle In your rear was calling you Back. There did God give you One distress after another By way of requital,464 To teach you not to grieve For (the booty) that had escaped And for (the ill) that had befallen you.

For God is well aware Of all that ve do.

154. After (the excitement) Of the distress. He sent down Calm on a band of you Overcome with slumber,46 While another band Was stirred to anxiety By their own feelings, Moved by wrong suspicions Of God-suspicions due To Ignorance. They said: "What affair is this of ours?" " Say thou: " Indeed, this affair

ه أَنَّ أَنَّ لَ عَلَىكُمْ مِنْ بَعِنْدِ

<sup>463.</sup> The disobedience seemed at first pleasant: they were chasing the enemy, and there was the prospect of booly. But when the gap was noticed by the enemy, they turned the flank round the hill and nearly overwhelmed the Muslims. Had it not been for God's grace, and the firmness of them. Leader and his immediate Companions, they would have been finished,

<sup>465.</sup> After the first surprise, when the enemy turned on them, a great part of the Muslims did their best, and seeing their mettle, the enemy withdrew to his camp. There was a luli; the wounded had rest; those who had fought the hard fight were visited by kindly Sleep, sweet Nature's nurse. In contrast to them was the band of Hypocrites, whose behaviour is described in the next note.

<sup>466.</sup> The Hypocrites withdrew from the fighting. Apparently they had been among those who had been counselling the defence of Medina within the walls instead of bodily coming out to meet the enemy. Their distress was caused by their own mental state: the sleep of the just was denied them; and they continued to murmur of what might have been. Only fools do so: wise men face actualities.

Is wholly God's." They hide In their minds what they Dare not reveal to thee. They say (to themselves): " If we had had anything To do with this affair. We should not have been In the slaughter here," Say: "Even if you had remained In your homes, those For whom death was decreed Would certainly have gone forth To the place of their death ": But (all this was) 167 That God might test What is in your breasts And purge what is In your hearts. For God knoweth well . The secrets of your hearts.

<sup>467.</sup> That testing by God is not in order that it may add to His knowledge, for He knows all. It is in order to help us subjectively, to mould our will, and purge us of any grosser motives, that will be searched but by calamity. If it is a hardened sinner, the test brings conviction out of his own self Cf, also iii, 140.

<sup>.468.</sup> It was the duty of all who were able to fight, to fight in the sacred cause at Uhud. But a small section were timd: they were not quite as had as those who railed against God, of those who thoughtlessly disobeyed orders. But they still failed in their duty. It is our inner motives that God regards. These limitorous people were forgiven by God. Perhaps they were given another chance: petitaps they rose to it and did their duty that.

471. The extremely gentle nature of Muhammad endeared him to all, and it is reckoned as one of the Mercies of God. One of the Apostle's titles is "A Mercy to all Creation." At no time was this gentleness, this mercy, this long-suffering with human weaknesses, more valuable than after a disaster like that at Uhud. It is a God-like quality, which then, as always, bound and binds the souls of countless men to him.

<sup>469.</sup> It is want of faith that makes people afraid (1) of meeting death, (21 of doing their duty wheat it involves clanger, as in travelling in order to earn an honest living, or fighting in a sacred cause. Such fear is part of the punishment for want of faith. If you have faith, there is no fear in cause. Such fear is part of the punishment for want of faith. If you have faith, there is no fear in meeting death, for it brings you nearter to your goal, nor in meeting dank, for it brings you nearter to your goal, nor in meeting dank in many that the kevs of life and death are in God's hands. Nothing can happen without God's Will. If it is God's Will, if it is God's Will, that you should live, who should live, you taking at home will not aver you. If it is His Will that you should inkey your life in the danger, there are three considerations that would make you appear to the standard of the separation which the sould which he has no news; he signing energy that it instead of the separation which the souls without faith fear, he looks forward to a surer sounce than it sought in the fear. reunion than is possible in this life.

<sup>474.</sup> If Uhud was a reverse to the Muslims, they had inflicted a reverse twice as great on the Meccans at Badr. This reverse was not without God's permission, for He wanted to test and purily the faith of those who followed bislam, and to show them that they must strive and do all in their power to deserve God's help. If they disobeyed orders and neglected discipline, they must attribute the disaster to themselves and not to God.

476 The testing of the Hypocrites was the searching out of their motives and exposing them to the sight of their brethern, who might otherwise have been taken in. In the first place they gave counsels of caution: in their minds it was nothing but cowardice. In the second place, what they wished was not the good of the community but its being placed in a contemptible position. When others were for self-sacrifice, they were for ease and fair words. Pretending to be Muslims, they were nearer to Unbelief. Ironically they pretended to know nothing of fighting, and left their devout brethen to defend their faith and ideals. If that devout spirit did not appeal to them, they might at least have defended their city of Medina when it was threatened,—defended their cattles and homes as good citizens.

 • تَأْنَاأَةَ مَنْ أَلَةً مَنْ أَلَاثَةً مَنْ أَلَةً مَنْ أَلَةً وَفَضْلِ

<sup>497.</sup> A beautiful passage about the Martyrs in the cause of Truth. They are not dead: they live,—and in a far higher and deeper sense than in the life they have left. Even those who have no faith in the Heroafter honour those that do not have cause, with the crown of immortality in the minds and memories of generations unbown. The life cause, with the crown of immortality in the minds and memories of generations unbown. For the life is not the life in the sea a higher, ruse, and less relative immortality. Perhaps 'mmortality' is not the right word in the see a higher, ruse, and less celative immortality in the life. In their case, which are properties of general of death, not consider the true ruse life, as opposed to its shadow life. Our cause life is sustained with carnal took and its pays and pleasures at their best are those which are projected on the screen of this material world. Their real Life is sustained from the ineffable Presence and Nearness of Good. Cf. M. 154, and see how the idea is further developed here.

<sup>478.</sup> The Martyrs not only rejoice at the bliss they have themselves attained. The dear one left behind are in their thoughts; it is part of liter glory that they have saved their dear ones from fear, sorrow, humiliation, and grief, in this life, even before they come to share in the glories of the Herealter.

Note how the refrain: "on them shall be no fear, nor shall they grieve": comes in here with a new and appropriate meaning. Besides other things, it means that the dear ones have no cause to grieve at the death of the Martyrs; rather have they cause to rejoice.

The reward of the Faithful To be lost (in the least).

The challenge was accepted, and a picked band of Mussims under their intrepid Leader kept the trys, but the enemy did not come. <sup>484.</sup> By an api metaphor the muer is told that his wealth or the other pits which he hoarded will ching round his neck and told min my good. He will ursh he could get rid of them, but he will not be round his neck (Matt. xviii 6). The metaphor here is fuller. He hugged his wealth or his gifts about him. They will become like a heavy rollar, the bage of slavery, round his neck. They will be ted tight and twisted, and they will gree him pan and angust his stead of pleasure. Cf. also xvii. 13.

<sup>485</sup> Another metaphor is now introduced. Material wealth or properly is only called ours during our short life here: it then descends to heirs and heirs until it goes to the ultimate heir, the State So all gifts are ours in trust only; they ultimately revert to God, to Whom belongs all that is in the heavens or on earth.

<sup>486.</sup> In II. 245 we read: "Who is he that will loan to God a beautiful loan?" In other places charity or spending in the way of God is metaphorically described as giving to God. The holy Apostle often used thet expression in appealing for funds to be spent in the way of God. The scoffers mocked and said: "30 God is findigent and we are rich!" This blaspheniy was of a piece with all their conduct in history, in slaying the Prophets and men of God.

Even if it had been so, did the Jews obey the Prophets who showed this Sign? In Leviticus iz, 23-24, we are told of a burnt offering prepared by Moses and Aaron; "and there came a fire out from before the Lord, and consumed upon the altar the burnt offering and the fat." Yet the neople rebelled frequently against Moses, and rebellion against a Prophet is spiritually an attempt to kill him. Abelt's offering facinfice) was probably a burnt offering; it was accepted by God, and he was killed by Cain out of realousy; Gen, iv, 3-8. Mosaic sacrifices were no longer needed by the people of Jesus or the people of Majammad.

These virtues we are to exercise for ourselves and in relation to others; we are to set an example, so that others may vie with us, and we are to vie with them, lest we fall short; in this way we strengthen each other and bind our mutual relations closer, in our common service to God.

<sup>503.</sup> Prosperity (falā) here and in other passages is to be understood in a wide sense, including prosperity in our mundane afairs as well as in sprintual progress. In both cares il implies happiness and the attainment of our wishes, purified by the love of God,

INTRODUCTION TO SURA IV (Nisāa)

This Sura is closely connected chronologically with Sura III. Its subject-matter deals with the social problems which the Muslim community had to face immediately after Uhud. While the particular occasion made the necessity urgent, the principles faid down have permanently governed Muslim Law and social practice

Broadly speaking, the Sūra consists of two parts: (1) that dealing with women, orphans, inheritance, marriage, and family rights generally, and (2) that dealing with the recalcitrants in the larger family, the community at Medina, viv., the Hypocrites and their accomplices.

Summary.—It begins with an appeal to the solidarity of mankind, the rights of women and orphans, and the implications of family relationship, including an equitable distribution of property after death. (iv. 1-14 and C. 61.)

While the decencies of family life should be enforced, women should be held in honour and their rights recognized, in marriage, property, and inheritance; and this principle of goodness should be extended to all beings, great and small. (iv. 15-42, and C. 62.)

The sections in Medina, not yet in the Muslim community, should not go after false gods, but should accept the authority of the Apostle, and obey him. Then it will be their privilege to be admitted to a great and glorious Fellowship. (iv. 43.70, and C. 63.)

The Believers should organize in self-defence against their enemies, and beware of the secret plots and mischiels of the Hypocrites; how deserters should be treated, (iv. 71-91, and C. 64).

Caution about the taking of life; recommendations for leaving places inimical to Islam; religious duties in the midst of war. (iv. 92-104, and C. 65.)

Treachery and the lure of evil. (iv. 105-126, and C. 66.)

Women and orphans to be justly dealt with; Faith must go with justice, sincerity, and moderation in speech. (iv. 127-152, and C. 67.)

Where People of the Book went wrong, with honourable exceptions, (iv. 153-176, and C. 68).

C. 61.-All mankind are one, and mutual rights

(iv. 1.14.) Must be respected: the sexes
Must honour, each the other;
Sacred are family relationships
That rise through marriage
And women bearing children;
Orphans need especial loving care;
In trust is held all property;

Should be made in equitable shares
To all whose affection, duty,
And trust shed light and joy
On this our life below.

Sūra IV.

Nisaa, or The Women.

In the name of God, Most Gracious

Most Merciful.

- 2. Mo orphans restore their property (When they reach their age), Nor substitute (your) worthless things For (their) good ones; and devour Their substance (by mixing it up)

504. Na/s may mean: (1) soul; (2) self; (3) person, living person; (4) will, good pleasure, as in v. 4 below. Minhã: i follow the construction suggest-d by iman Razi. The particle min would then suggest here not a portion or a source of something else, but a species, a nature, a similarity. The pronoun hã refers of course to Na/s. The Biblical story of the creation of Eve from a rib of Adam may be allegorical, but we need not assume it in Quranic teaching.

505. All our mutual rights and duties are referred to God We are his creatures; His Will is the standard and measure of Good; and our duties are measured by our conformity with His Will. "Our wills' are ours, to make them Thine," says Tennyson (if Memorium). Among ourselves fluman beings) our mutual rights and duties arise out of God's Law, the sense of Right that is implanted in us by him.

506. Among the most wonderful mysteries of our nature is that of sex. The unregenerate male is apt, in the prude of his physical strength, to forget the all-important part which the female plays in his very existence, and in all the social relationships that arise in our collective human lives. The mother that bore us must ever have our reverence. The write, through whom we enter parentage, must have our reverence. Sex, which governs so much of our physical life, and has so much inherece on our emotional and higher nature, deserves—not our fear, or our contempt, or our amused indulgence, but—our reverence in the highest sense of the term. With this fitting introduction we enter on a discussion of women, orphans, and family relationships.

507. Justice to orphans is enjoined, and three things are particularly mentioned as temptations in the way of a guardian: (!) He must not postpone restoring all his ward's property when the time comes; subject to iv. 5 below. (2) If three is a list of property, it is not enough that that list should be technically followed: the property restored must be of equal value to the property received: the same principle applies where there is no list. (!) If property. It is managed together, or where perishable goods must necessarily be onsumed, a stricted probity is necessary when the separation takes place, and this is instituted on. See also it. 220 and not.)

With your own. For this is Indeed a great sin.

- 3. If ye fear that ye shall not Be able to deal justly With the orphans, 300 Marry women of your choice, Two, or three, or four; But if ye fear that ye shall not Be able to deal justly (with them), Then only one, or (a captive) That your right hands possess. That will be more suitable, To prevent you From doing injustice. 300
- 4. And give the women
  (On marriage) their dowcr
  As a free gift; but if they,
  Of their own good pleasure,
  Remit any part of it to you,
  Take it and enjoy it:
  With right good cheer.
- 5. Æto those weak of understanding 100 Make not over your property, 111 Which God hath made
  A means of support for you,
  But feed and clothe them
  Therewith, and speak to them
  Words of kindness and justice.

<sup>508.</sup> Notice the conditional clause about orphans, introducing the rules about marriage. This remodules of the immediate occasion of the promulgation of this verse. It was after Upud, when the Muslim community was left with many orphans and widows and some captives of war. Their treatment was to be governed by principles of the greatest humanity and equity. The occasion is past, but the principles remain. Marry the orphans if you are quite sure that you will in that way protect their interests and their property, with perfect justice to them and to your own dependants if you have any. If not, make other arrangements for the orphans.

<sup>300.</sup> The unrestricted number of waves of the "Times of Ignorance" was now strivtly limited to a maximum of four, provided you could treat them with perfect equality, in material things as well as in affection and immaterial things. As this condition is most difficult to fulfil, I understand the recommendation to be towards monogamy.

This does not mean that he is harshly dealt with. On the contrary his interests must be protected, and he must be treated with special kindness because of his incapacity.

If both parents are living, and there are also children, both father and mother take a sixth each; if only one parent is living, be orse takes his or her sixth; and the rest goes to the children. If the parents are living, and there is no child or other heir, the muther gets a third (and the father the remaining two-children) and there is no child or other heir, the muther gets a third (and the father the remaining two-children). if there are no children, but there are brothers or sisters (this is interpreted strictly in the plural). the mother has a sixth, and the father apparently the residue, as the father excludes collaterals, This is far from being an exhaustive statement, but it establishes the proposition that children and parents have always some share if they survive, but their shares are affected by the existence and number of the heirs in these categories,

<sup>520.</sup> The word in Arabic is kalālat, which is so construed usually. But it was nowhere defined authoritatively in the lifetime of the Apostle. This was one of the three terms about which Hadbrat Umar wished that the Apostle had defined them in his lifetime, the other two being Khilāfat, and ribā (usury). On the accepted definition, we are concerned with the inheritance of a preson who has left no descendant or ascendant (however distant), but only collaterals, with or without a widow or widower. If there is a widow or widower surviving, she or he takes the share as already defined, before the collaterals come in

<sup>$21.</sup> A "brother or sister" is here interpreted to mean a uterine brother or sister, i.e., a brother or sister by the same mother but not by the same father, as the case of full brothers and sisters or brothers and sisters by the same father but different mothers is understood to be dealt with later, in the last verse of this Sūra. The uterine brother or sister, if only one survives, takes a sixth: if more than one survive, they take a third collectively, and divide among themselves; this on the supposition that there are no descendants or ascendants, however remote. There may, however, be a widow or widower surviving: she or he takes her or his share, as a fenced specified.

The shares of collaterals generally are calculated on a complicated system which cannot be described in a brief note. For these, and the rules about Residuaries (Asaba) reference should be made to special legal treaties.

<sup>522.</sup> Debts (in which funeral expenses take first rank) and legacies are the first charge on the estate of a deceased person, before distribution takes place. But equity and fair dealing should be observed in all matters, so that no one's interests are prejudiced. Thus funeral expenses should be reasonable; debts must be genuine and not rerkless debts; and the shares must be calculated with fairness.

An Arter denning the profilioted degrees, the verse proceeds to say that women other than those specified may be south in marriage, but even so, not from motives of lust, but in order to promote chartity between the sexes. If this does not appear clear in our sight, let us remember that we have ho full knowledge but God has. We must not be jealous if other people have more than we have—in wealth or position or strength or honour or talent or happiness. Probably things are equalized in the aggregate or in the long run, or equated to needs and merits on a scale which we cannot appealse. If we want more, instead of being jealous or coverous, we should pray to God and place before Him our needs "hough He knows all, and has no need of our prayer, our prayer may reveal to ourselves our shortcomings and enable us to deserve more of God's bounty or make ourselves $1 for it.

If we take the rendering as in the note, we reach the same result in a different way: the good wrife, in her hisband's absence, emembering how God has given her a sheltered position, does everything to justify that position by guarding her own virtue and his reputation and property.

<sup>550.</sup> The essence of Islam is to serve God and do good to your fellow-creatures. This is wider and more comprehensive than "Love God and love your neighbour". For it includes duties to animals as our fellow-creatures, and emphasises practical service rather than sentiment.

Coleridge's "Rime of the Ancient Mariner": "Ho prayeth best who loveth best All things both great and small, Por Itle dear God who loveth out. He made and loveth all."

<sup>554.</sup> Real deeds of service and kindness proceed, not from showing off or from a superior sort of consecusion (Cf. "White Man's Burden"), but from a frank recognition of our own humility and the real claims, before God, of all our fellow-creatures. For in our mutual needs we are equal before God, or perhaps the best of us (as the world sees us) may be worse than the worst of us (from the same point of view).

Niggardly is the worldy wise man with not or spand himself in service, but by example and precept prevents others from doing so, as otherwise he would be made odious by comparison, before his fellow-creatures. So he either makes a virtue of his caution, or hides the gifts which have been given him—wealth, position, talent, etc.

<sup>556.</sup> Note how the punishment fits the crime. The aiggard holds other people in contempt, and in doing so, becomes himself contemptible.

567. Literally, "before We obliterate some features (or faces) and turn them front to back (or back (or back to front)"; an Arabic Idiom, which must be translated freely to yield its proper meaning in English. The face is the chief expression of a man's own real essence; it is also the index of his fame and estimation. The People of the Book had been specially favoured by God with spirtual revealations. If they proved themselves unworthy, they lost their "face" Their eminance would, owing to their own conduct, be turned into degradation. Others would take their-place. The word I have translated živi (here and in it, 250) is Tagic, which means the evil one, the one who exceeds all bounds, Satan; or it may refer to some idol worshipped by the Pagan Arabs, with whom the Jews of Medina were intriguing against the Holy Aposte. The Jews had taken much to sorcery, magic, divination, and such superstitions.

<sup>574.</sup> The Jews were then seeking the aid of the Mercan Pagans against Muhammad, but so far for getting any help from them, they and the Pagans were both overthrown. That was the immediate occasion, but the words have a perfectly general—a universal—meaning.

<sup>581.</sup> The immediate reference was to the Hypocrites (Munäßigin) of Medina, but the words are general, and the evil of hypocrisy has to be deatt with in all ages. To wage unrelenting war against them may destroy the hope of reforming them and purging them of their hypecrity. The man of God keeps clear of their wites, but at the same time, does not hesitate to show them the error of their ways; nor to, put in a word in season, to penetrate their hearts and win them back to God.

$85. Four advantages of obedience to God are mentioned, in the order in which they will appeal to the beginner in faith: (1) his own benefit ("best for them"); (2) strengthening of his faith, as he becomes more and more at home in the spiritual world; (3) revard from God's own Presence, such intense conviction that no further arguments are needed; (4) the Straight Way, in which there is no doubt or difficulty whatever in our practical conduct,

It is a company which lives preptually in the sunshine of God's Grace. (This passage partly illustrates Q. i. 5). It is a glorious hierarchy, of which four grades are specified: (1) The highest is by example and precept. That rank in Islam is heliu by Muhamman (1) and <sup>587,</sup> If a generous General gives the private soldier the privilege of sitting with his comrades and officers, high and low, in one common Brotherhood, people may perhaps wonder: how may this be? If we are admitted to that Fellowship, we want to know no more. It is enough to us that God knows our humility and our unworthiness, and with His full knowledge admits us to that elorious Fellowship!

SSB. No fight should be undertaken without due preparations and prevautions. When these are taken, we must go beddy forward. "Go forth" is therefore repeated for emphasis. But we must go forth in a collective spirit, and not in a selfsh spirit—either in small parties or all together, as our Leader determines. We must not tarry like the doubter in the next two yerses.

<sup>599.</sup> The doubter detaches himself in thought and action from the community. If the general body has a reverse, he blesses God that he was not among them, instead of being athamed, of himself for desertion. If the general body wins a success, he does not rejoice for the common cause, but only regrets for himself that he was not there to share in the glory and the gain.

591. It is not every one,—least of all, poltroons and faint-hearted persons—who is fit to fight in the cause of God. To do so is a privilege, and those who understand the privilege are prepared to scarcine all their interests in this life, and this life itself; for they know that it is the sacrifice of something leating and of little value, for the sake of something everlasting, and of immense value. Whether (in appearance) they win or lose, in reality they win the prize for which they are lighting—wir, honour and glory in the sight of God. Note that the only alternatives here are Death or Victory! The true fighter knows no deleat.

<sup>593</sup> Even from the human point of view the cause of God is the cause of justice, the cause of the oppressed. In the great persecution, before Mecca was won again, what sorrows, threats, tortures and oppressions, were suffered by those whose faith was unshaken? Muhammad's life and that of his adherents was threatened; they were mocked, assaulted, unsuited and beaten; those within the power of the enemy were put into chains and cast into prison; others were boycorted, and shut out of trade, business, and social intercence; they excluded the property of the prison of the believing slaves, women, and children after the Hijirat. Their cry for a protector and helper from God was answered when Muhammad the Chosen One brought freedom and peace to Mecca again.

Death will find you out,
Even if ye are in towers
Built up strong and high!"

If some good befalls them, They say, "This is from God"; But if evil, they say, "This is from thee" (O Prophet)."

<sup>593.</sup> Before the command for fighting was issued there were some who were impatient, and could scarcely be held back. They wanted fighting from bunnan motives,—pugnacity, the love of plunder, hetred against their enemies, the gaining of personal ends. Fighting from such motives is wrong at all times. When the testing time came, and they had to fight, not for their own hand, but for a Sacred Cause, in which there was much suffering and tittle personal gain, the Hypocrites held back and were afrain.

Briefly, the answer is: (1) in any case the pleasures of this world are short; this life is fleeting; the first hing for a righteous man to do is to emancipate hinself from its obsessions; (2) to do your duty is to do right; therefore turn your attention mainly to duty; (3) when duty calls for self-sacrifice, be sure that God's call is never unjust, and never such as to exceed your capacit; and (4) if you fear death, you will not by fear escape death; it will find you out wherever you are; why not face it poldly when duty calls?

<sup>59).</sup> The Hypocrites were inconsistent, and in this reflect unregenerate mankind. If a disaster happens, due to their own folly, they blame somebody else; but if they are fortunate, they claim reflected credit by pretending that Heaven has favoured them because of their own superior ments. The modern critic discards even this pretence, eliminates Heaven altogrether, and claims all credit direct to himself, unless be brings in blind Chance, but that the does mostly to claims all credit direct to himself, unless be brings in blind Chance, but that the does mostly to handly claim credit for good ourselves with a special credit from God. But if we look to the proximate cause of things, our own merit is so small, that we can hardly claim credit for good ourselves with any fairness. In God's hand is all good is 16 50 to the other hand, the proximate cause of our evil is due to some wrong in our own inner selves; for never are we dealt with unjustify in the very least; iv, 77.

<sup>.598</sup> To blame a man of God for our misfortunes is doubly unjust. For he comes to save us from misfortune, and it is because we float him or pay no heed to him, that our own rebellion brings its own punishment. If we realise this truth we shall be saved from two sins: (1) the sin of injustice to God's Messengers, who come for our good, and not for our harm; (2) the sin of not realising our own shortcomings or rebellion, and thus living in spiritual darkness. If the Message is from God, that carries its own authority: "enough is God for a witness."

600. If we trust to people who are not true, they are more likely to hinder than to help. But God is Mall-good as well as All-powerful, and all our affairs are best entrusted to His care. He is the best Guardian of all interests.

Therefore we should not trust the lip professions of Hypocrites, but trust in God. Nor should our confidence in God be shaken by any secret plots that enemies hutch against, us. We should take all human precautions against them, but having done so, we should put our trust in God. Who knows the inner working of events better than any human mind can conceive.

601. The unity of the Qur-ān is admittedly greater than that of any other sacred book. And yet how can we account for it except through the unity of God's purpose and design? From a mere human point of view, we should have expected much discrepancy, because (I) the Messenger who promulgated it was not a learned man or philosopher. (2) it was promulgated at vanous times and in various circumstances, and (3) it is addressed to all grades of mankind. Yet, when properly understood, various process it together better than a jig saw puzzle even when arranged without any regard to chronological order. There was just the One Inspirer and the One Inspire.

<sup>602.</sup> In times of war or public panic, thoughtless repetition of gossip is rightly restrained by all effective States. If false, such news may cause needless alarm: if true, it may frightlen the timid and cause some misgivings even to the bravest, because the counterpart of it—the preparations made to meet the danger—is not known. Thoughtless news, true or false, may also encourage the enemy. The proper course is quietly to hand all news direct to those who are in a position to investigate it. They can then sift it and take suitable measures to checkmate the enemy. Not to do so, but to deal with news either thoughtlessly or maliciously, is to fall directly into the snares of Evil.

<sup>604.</sup> In this fleeting world's chances God's providence and justice may not always appear plant to our eyes. But we are asked to believe that if we help and support a good oause, we share in all alls credit and in its eventual victory. And conversely, we cannot support a bad cause without sharing in all its evil consequences. If appearances seem against this faith, let us not be deceived by appearances. For God has power over all things.

606. When the desertion of the Hypocrites at Uhud nearly caused a disaster to the Muslim cause there was great feeling among the Muslims of Medina against them. One party wanted to put them to the sword: another to leave them alone. The actual policy pursued avoided both extremes, and was determined by these verses. It was clear that they were a danger to the Muslim community if they was determined by these verses. It was clear that they were a danger to the Muslim community if they were admitted into its counsels, and in any case they were a source of demoralisation. But while every causion was used, no extreme measures were taken against them. On the contrary, they were given a chance of making good. If they made a sacrifice for the cause "fine from what is forbidden," see next verse, their conduct purged their previous cowardice, and their sincerity entitled them to be taken before the contraction of the contraction

On the other hand if he by false pretences comes into the inner counsels merely to betray them, he may rightly be treated as a traitor or deserter and be punished for his treason or desertion; are if he escapes, he can be treated as a traitor or deserter and be punished for his treason or desertion; are if he escapes, he can be treated as an enemy and is entitled to no mercy. He is worse than an enemy; he has claimed to be of you in order to spy on you, and been all the time helping the enemy, 606. Except the exception refers to "seize them and slay them," the death penalty for repeated desertion. Even after such desertion, exemption is granted in two cases. One is where such a tribe (even though outside the pale of Islam) might be trusted to keep the man from fighting against the forces of Islam—in the modern phrase, to disarm him and render him harmless. The second case for exemption is where the man from this own heart desires never to take up arms against Islam, though he does not wish to join, the forces of Islam, to fight against a hostile tribe (perhaps his own) fighting against lalam. But he must make a real approach, giving guarantees of his incertity: In the modern phrase he would be "on parole". But this provision is much milder who have destread from a tray of the provision of the him of the provision of the humanity as well as policy treated them with great lenient.

Their neutrality itself may be a great advantage to you. So long as you are satisfied that they are sincere and their acts support their declarations of peace with you, you should not consider youseff justified in pursuing them and warring against them.

<sup>.610.</sup> As opposed to the two classes of deserters to whom clemency may be shown, there is a class which is treacherous and dangerous and cannot be left alone. They try to win your confidence, and are all the time in the confidence of the enemy. Every time they get a chance, they secured to the temptation of double-dealing. The best way of dealing with them is to treat them as open enrules. Keep them not in your must. If they give you guarantees of peace and do not actually fight against you, well and good. 92. Dever should a Believer Kill a Believer: but (If it so happens) by mistake. 611 (Compensation is due): If one (so) kills a Believer. It is ordained that he Should free a believing slave. And pay compensation To the deceased's family. Unless they remit it freely. If the deceased belonged To a people at war with you. And he was a Believer. The freeing of a believing slave (Is enough). If he belonged To a people with whom Ye have a treaty of mutual Alliance, compensation should Be paid to his family. And a believing slave be freed. For those who find this Beyond their means, (is prescribed) A fast for two months Running: by way of repentance To God: for God hath All knowledge and all wisdom.

There was no guilty intention: therefore there was no murder. But all the same, the family Muslims. There was no guilty intention: therefore there was no murder. But all the same, the lammy of the deceased was entitled to compensation unless they freely remitted it, and in addition it was provided that the unfortunate man who made the mistake should free a believing slave. Thus a deplorable mistake was made the occasion for winning the liberty of a slave who was a Believer for Islam discountenances slavery. The compensation could only be paid if the deceased belonged by the paid if the deceased was a Believer, they note Muslim society. Obviously it could not be paid if, though the deceased was a Believer, his propie social could be paid if, though the deceased was a Believer, his profit of the second was a believer. The profit of the second was a believer, his profit of the second was a believer. The profit of the second was a believer, his profit of the deceased was a believer. There are people with natural inertia: they do the minmum that is required of them, but no more. There are people who are weak in will: they are easily frightened. There are people who are so strong in will and so firm in faith that they rice determined to compare every obstacle, whether in their own physical or other infirmities or in the external world around them. <sup>615.</sup> The immediate occasion for this passage was the question of migration (hijral) from places where Islam was being persecuted and suppressed. Obviously the duty of Muslams was fo leave such places, even if it involved forsaking their homes, and join and strengthen the Muslim community among whom they could live in peace and with whom they could help in fighting the evils around them. But the meaning is weller. Islam does not say: "Rests not evil." On the contrary, it requires bome and units and garaged assainst evil. For such struggle it may be necessary to forsake bome and units and garaged assainst evil. For such struggle it may be necessary to forsake bome and units and suppressible and the such proposed that the suppressible is the suppressible and God's earth is spacious enough for the purpose. <sup>617,</sup> Verse 101 gives permission to shorten congregational prayers when people are on a journey: verses 102-100 ideal with cases when they are in danger at war, in face of the enemy. The shortening of congregational prayers in both cases is further governed as to details by the practice of the Apostle and his Companions. As to fourney, we questions after (1) what constitutes a journey for this prayers? As to (1), its hest to leave the matter to discretion, having regard to all the circumstances of the journey, as in the race of the journeys which excuse a fast; see it. 814, n. 192. The text leaves it to discretion. As to (2), the practice of the Apostle shows that danger is not an essential condition? it is merely mentioned as a possible incident. The Apostle usually shortened the prayers from four Rak atts to two Rak latts in 3shr (midday prayer), 3pr (afternoon prayer) and 13shd (night prayer); Prayer playing three.

But when the danger is past, the full prayers should be objected at the stated times.

620. Religion should be a source of strength and not of weakness in all our affairs. If we have to struggle hard and suffer hardships, those without faith have to do the same, with this difference, that the man of Faith is full of hope in God, whereas the man without Faith has nothing to sustain him.

611. The Commentators explain this passage with reference to the case of Taima ibn Ubairaq, who was nominally a Muslim but really a Hypocrite, and given to all sorts of wicked deeds. He was suspected of Paving stolen a set of armour, and when the trail was hot, he planted the stolen properly into the house of a few, where it was found. The few denied the charge and accused Taima, but the sympathies of the Aluxlin community were with far man on account of his norm interpretation of islam, as "guided by God". Attempts were made to prejudice him and deceive him into using his authority to favour Taim.

The general lesson is that the righteous man is faced with all sorts of subtle wiles: the wicked will try to appeal to his highest sympathies and most honourable molives to decreive him and use him as an instrument for defeating justice. He should be careful and cautious, and seek the help of God for protection against deception and for firmness in dealing the strictest justice without thear of favour. To do otherwise is to bettay a secred trust take trustee must defeat all-attempts made to mislead him.

<sup>622.</sup> Our souls are a sort of trust with us. We have to guard them against all temptation. Those was unrender to crime or evil betray that trust. We are warned against being deceived into taking their part, induced either by plausible appearances, or by such incentives to partiality as that they belong to our own people or that some link connects them with us, whereas when we are out to do justice, we must not allow any irrelevant considerations to sway us.

<sup>623.</sup> The plots of sinners are known fully to God, and He can fully circumvent them if necessary, according to the fulness of His wisdom. The word used is: Compass them round: muhi; not only does God know all about it, but he is all round it. If the His wisdom He allows it, it is not because He has not complete control over it, but because, having it as it were enclosed in a complete circle, He can use it to further His own Plan. Even out of evil hie can bring good.

<sup>624.</sup> Kasab = 10 earn, to gain, to work for something valuable, to lay up a provision for the future life. We do a day's labour to earn our livelihood: so in a spintual sense, whatever good or will we do in this life, earns us good or evil in the life to come. In verses 110-112 there cases are considered; 191 we do ill and repent, God will forgive; (2 if we do ill and do not repent, thinking that we can hide it, we are wrong; nothing is hidden from God, and we shall suffer the full consequences in the life to come, for we can never evade our personal responsibility or the life that we do ill, great or small, and impute it to another, our original responsibility for the ill remains, but we add to it is omething else; for we tie round our accks the guilt of falschood, which converts even our minor fault into a great sin, and in any case brands us even in this life will shame and ignominy.

<sup>625.</sup> Usually secrecy is for evil ends, or from questionable motives, or becaus: the person seeking secrecy is ashamed of himself and knows that if his acts or motives became known, he would make himself adous. Islant therefore disapproves of secrecy and loves and enjoins openies in all consultations and doings. But there are three things in which secrecy is permissible, and indeed haudable, provided the motive be purely unsellish, to carn "the good pleasure of God": (1) if you are doing a deed of charity or beneficence, whether in giving material things or in helping in moral, intellectual, or have to think of his feelings; (2) where an unpleasant act of justice or correction has to be done; this should be done, but there is no virtue in publishing it abroad and causing humilation to some parties or adding to their flumilation by publicity; (3) where there is a delicate question of concluding parties to a quarrel; they may be very touchy about publicity but quite amenable to the influence of a man acting in private.

<sup>(3%</sup> To protect the woman's economic interests, various rules are prescribed for dower in marriage. But the samity of marriage itself is general than any economic interests. Divorce is, of all things permitted, must liabell to God. Therefore if a breach butween husband and wife can be previoted by some economic consuleration, it is better to make that connectson than to imperi the future of the wife, the children, and probably the busband also. Such concessions are permissible, in view of like love of wealth ingrained in unregenerate man, but a recommendation is mude that we should practise self-restraint, and do what we can to come to an amicable settlement without any economic sacrifice on the nast of the woman.

<sup>639.</sup> In this material world there are two principal causes of division between man and wife, mone, and "the other woman" or "the other man". Money was featl with in the last verse, there is the case of "the other woman". Legally more than one wife (up to four) are permissible on the condition that the man can be perfectly fair and just to all. But this is a condition almost impossible to fulfil, in the hope that he might be able to fulfil it, a man puts himself in that impossible to fulfil to only right to insist that he should not distart one but at least fulfil all the outward duties that are incumbent on him in respect of her.

<sup>640.</sup> Notice the refrant; "To God belong all things in the heavens and on earth"; reported three titings, each time with a new application. In the first instance it follows the statement of God's universal providence and love. If two persons, inspite of every sincene desire to love and comfort each ther, fail to achieve that end, and have to separate, God's all-reaching homist never fails, for the is the Lord of all things. In the second instance it is connected with God's Self existence, Self-excellence, and independence of all creatures; all fails commands are for our good, and they are given to all this for the rould destroy any individual or nation and create a new one without any loss to Himself; but He gives a chance to all gain and a gain, and even rewards them beyond their own ambitions.

<sup>64).</sup> God's existence is absolute existence, it does not depend on any other person or any other thing? And it is worthy of all praise, for it is all-good and comprises every possible excellence. It is necessary to stress this point in order to show that the moral law for man is not a mere matter of transcendental commands, but really rests on the essential needs of mankind steelf. If therefore such schools of thought as Behaviourism proved their theories up to the hill, they do not affect the position of Islam in the least. The highest tehical standards are enjoined by Islam, not as dogmatic importatives, but because they can be shown to follow from the needs of man's nature and the results of man's seprence.

<sup>642.</sup> This refers to the next verse. He does not need us, but we need Him. Our hopes, our happings, our success centre in Him; but He is Self-sufficient. He has the power to supersede us, but His goodness is ever seeking to give us every chance in this world as well as in the Herealter.

<sup>643.</sup> Man-in this life can only see up to the horson of this life. The highest rewards which his wishes or ambitions can conceive of are conceived in the terms of this life. But God can give hum not only these but something infinitely higher,—the rewards of the Hereafter,—which it did not even enter his heart to ask for or his imagination to conceive.

- Believe in God
  And His Apostle,
  And His Apostle,
  And the scripture which He Hath sent to His Apostle
  And the scripture which He sent
  To those before (him).**
  Any who denieth God,
  His angels, His Books,
  His Apostles, and the Day
  Of Judgment, hath gone
  Far, far astray.

<sup>64.</sup> Justice is God's attribute, and to stand firm for justice is to be a witness to God, even if it is detrimental to our own interests (as we conceive them) or the interests of those who are near and dear to us. According to the Latin saying." Let justice be done though heaven should fall."

But Islamic justice is something higher than the formal justice of Roman Law or any other human Law. It is even more penetrative than the subtler justice in the speculations of the Greek philosophers. It searches out the innermost motives, because we are to act as in the presence of God, to whom all-thiggs, acts, and motives are known.

<sup>645.</sup> Some people may be inclined to favour the rich, because they expect something from them. Some people may be inclined to favour the poor because they are generally helpless. Partiality in some protection as a far at their legitimate interests are concerned, but they cannot expect to be favoured at the expense of others. And the can protect their legitimate interests are concerned, but they cannot expect to be favoured at the expense of others. And the can protect their interests are their han any man.

<sup>646.</sup> If your belief is by habit or birth or the example of those you love or respect or admire, make that belief more specific and personal to yourself. We must not only have faith, but realise that faith nour impost being. The chief objects of our Faith are 60d, His Apostt and Tiss Revelations. To all these we must give a home in our hearts. The angels we do not see and realise as we seelise 60d, who is nearer to us than the vehicle of our life-blood, and the Day of Judgment is for our future experience, but we must not deay them, or we cut off a part of our sprittual vehicle.

137. Mehose who believe,
Then reject Faith,
Then believe (again)
And (again) reject Faith,
And go on increasing
In Unbelief,—God
Will not forgive them
Nor guide them on the Way.

138. To the Hypocrites give The glad tidings that There is for them (But) a grievous Penalty;—

139. Yea, to those who take
For friends Unbelievers
Rather than Believers:
Is it honour they seek Among them? Nay,—
All honour is with God. 449

140. Already has He sent you 469
Word in the Book, that when
Ye hear the Signs of God
Held in defiance and ridicule,
Ye are not to sit with them
Unless they turn to a different
Theme: if ye did, ye would be Like them. For God will Collect the Hypocrites and those Who defv Faith—all in Hell:—

﴿ إِنَّ الَّذِينَ اسْنُوا أَرْكُمْنُوا أَرْمَامُنُوا أَرْكُمْرُوا أَرُّرُ ازْدَادُوا كُمْزًا لَّهُ بَكِي اللّهُ لِيتَذِيرَ لِمُنْدُ وَلَا لِيهْذِيهُ مُسْسِيدًا

<sup>647.</sup> Those who go on changing sides again and again can have no real Faith at any time. Their motives are mere worldly double-dealing. Flow can they expect God's grace or forgiveness?

Here is a clear warning against those who make-their religion a mere matter of worldly convinience. True religion goes far deeper. It transforms the very nature of man, After that transformation it is as impossible for him to change as it is for light to become darkness.

<sup>648.</sup> If the motive is some advantage, some honour,—the fountain of all good is God. How can it really be expected from those who depy Faith? And if there is some show of worldly honour, what is it worth against the contempt they earn in the spiritual world?

I Where we see or hear Truth held in light eateen, we ought to make our protest and withdraw from such company, not out of aroganice, as if we thought ourselves superior to other people, but one such company, not out of aroganice, as if we thought ourselves superior to other people, but one of the superior of the sup

141. (These are) the ones who Wait and watch about you: If ve do gain A victory from God. They say: "Were we not With you? "-but if The Unbelievers gain A success, they say (To them): " Did we not Gain an advantage over you. And did we not guard You from the Believers?" But God will judge Betwixt you on the Day Of ludgment, And never Will God grant To the Unbelievers A way (to triumph) Over the Believers.450

SECTION 21.

- 142. Mahe Hypocrites-they think They are over-reaching God. But He will over-reach them: When they stand up to prayer, They stand without earnestness, To be seen of men. But little do they hold God in remembrance:
- 143. (They are) distracted in mind Even in the midst of it .-Being (sincerely) for neither One group nor for another. Whom God leaves straying .-Never wilt thou find

نَ بَانَ ذَالَ لا اللهِ مُتَوَلَّا وَلا وَاللهِ وَلا وَلا

<sup>650.</sup> The methods and motives of Hypocrisy are thoroughly unmasked here. It has no principles, but watches for an opportunity to turn any event to its own advantage. If hattle is joined between two inconsistent principles, it has no belief in either, but watches the result. There is unceasing fight two inconsistent principles, it has no belief in either, but watches the result. There is uncessing right between Good and Evil in this world. If the Good seems to win, the hypocrities range themselves on its side with unctuous words, taking a great part of the credit to themselves. Perhaps the balance tips the other way later, and they have to make their peace with Evil. "Oh!" they say arily, "we were the other way later, and they can compute their peace with Evil. "Oh!" they say arily, "we were the other way later, and they can be under the control of t Good must ultimately triumph,

For him the Way. 651

- 144. O ye who oelieve!
  Take not for friends
  Unbelievers rather than Believers: do ye wish
  To offer God an open
  Proof against yourselves?
- 145. The Hypocrites will be In the lowest depths Of the Fire: no helper Wilt thou find for them:—
- 146. Except for those who repent,
  Mend (their life), hold fast
  To God, and purify their religion
  As in God's sight: if so
  They will be (numbered) 605
  With the Believers.
  And soon will God
  Grant to the Believers
  A reward of immense value.
- By your punishment, If ye are grateful And ye believe? Nay, it is God That recogniseth 663

147. What can God gain

<sup>651.</sup> If we choose evil duliterately and double our guilt by fraud and deception, we do not deceive God but we deceive ourselves. We deprive ourselves of the Grace of God, and are left straying saws from the Path. In that condition who can guide us or show us the Way? Our true and right instincts become blunded; our fraud makes us unstable in character; when our fellow-men find out our fraud, any advantages we may have gained by the fraud are lost; and we become truly distracted in mind.

<sup>632</sup> Even Hypocrites can obtain forgiveness, on four conditions: (1) sincere repentance, which purifies their mind, (2) amendment of their conduct, which purifies their outer life; (3) steadlastness and devotion to God, which strengthens their faith and protects them from the assaults of evil; and (4) sincerity in their religion, or their whole inner being, which brings them as full members into the goodly Fellowship of Faith.

<sup>. 65.1.</sup> There is no pleasure nor advantage to God in punishing His own creatures, over whom He watches with loying rare. On the contrary He recognises any gond—nowwere little—with He finds in us, and delights to give us a reward beyond all measure. His recognition of us is compared by a bold metaphor to our gratitude to Him for His favours. The epithet Shāfrir is applied to God, she tee, in ii. 188, and other passages. Ia xvi. 121 it is applied to Ahraham: "he showed his gratitude for the favours of God, who choose him and guided him to a Straight Way."

- 148. God loveth not tnat evil Should be noised abroad as In public speech, except Where injustice hath been Done; for God Is He who heareth And knoweth all things.
- 149. Whether ye publish

  Or cover evil with pardon,

- 150. Those who deny God
  And His apostles, and (those Who) wish to separate
  God from His apostles, Saying: "We believe in some
  But reject others":
  And (those who) wish
  To take a course midway,—636
- 151. They are in truth (Equally) Unbelievers:

651. We can make a public scandal of evil ut many ways. (1). It may be idle sensation-mongering; it often leads to more evil by injutation, as where criminal deeds are glouthed in a cinema, or talked about shamelessly in a novel or drama (2) It may be malicious gossip of a foolish, personal kind; it does no good, but it hurts penpile's feelings. (3) It may be malevolent stander or libel; it is intended deliberately to cause harm to penple's reputation or injure them in other ways, and is rightly punishable under all laws. (4) It may be a public rebuke or correction or remonstrance, without maline. (4), (2), and (3) are absolutely forbidden. (4) may be by a person in authority; in which case the exception applies for all wrong or missine must be corrected openly; to prevent its recuirance. Or (4) may be by a person into twested with authority, but acting either from motives of public spirit, or in order to help some one who has been wronged; here again the exception will apply. But if the motive is different, the exception does not apply. (4) would also include a public complaint by a person who has suffered a wrong; the has every right to seek public redress.

653. Qudfr: I have translated it more fully than most translators. The root qudara not only implies power, ability, strength, but two other ideas which it is difficult to convey in a single word, pit, the act and power of estimating the true value of a thing or persons, as in vi. 91; and the act and power of regulating something so as to bring it into correspondence with something. "Judgment of values" I think sums up these finer slades of meaning. God forgives what is wrong and is able fully to appreciate and judge of the value of our good deeds whether we publish them or conceal tiem.

456. Unbrilef talgs various forms. Three are mentioned here: (1) denial of God and His sevelation to mankind through inspired men; (2) a sort of nominal belief in God and His apostles, but one which is partial, and mixed up with racial pride, which does not allow of the recognition of any apostles beyongli those of a particular race; and (3) a nominal belief in universal revelation but so bedgeder ound, with peculiar doctrines of exclusive salvation, that it practically approaches to a denial of God's universal love and and all Creation. All three amount to Unbelief, for they really denry God's universal love and care.

And We have prepared For Unbelievers a humiliating Punishment.

152. To those who believe In God and His apostles And make no distinction Between any of the apostles, We shall soon give Their (due) rewards:
For God is Oft-forgiving, Most Merciful

C. 68.—The People of the Book went wrong:

(iv. 153-176.) The Jews in breaking their Covenant,
And slandering Mary and Jesus,
And in their usury and injustice;
And the Christians in raising
Jesus the Apostle to equality
With God. God's revelstion
Is continued in the Qur-an,
Which, comes with manifest proof
And a clear light to those who understand.

SECTION 22.

153. PEhe People of the Book Ask thee to cause A book to descend to them From heaven: indeed They asked Moses For an even greater (Miracle), for they said: "Show us God in public." 437 But they were dazed For their presumption, With thunder and lightning. Yet they worshipped the calf Even after Clear Signs Had come to them: Even so We forgave them; And gave Moses manifest Proofs of authority.

يَتْعَلَقُ أَهْمُ الْكِتْبِ أَنْ نُؤَلِ عَلَيْهِ

 مُتَحَقَرَا عَن دَالِثُ وَمَا لِيَنَا مُوسَىٰ شَلْمَانًا
 يُهِينًا

657, Cf, ii, 55, for the thunder and lightning which dazed those who were presumptuous amough to ask that They should see-God face to face, and ii. 51 and n, 66, for the worship of the golden call.

The lesson is that it is presumptuous on the part of man to judge of spiritual things in terms of material things, or to ask to see God with their material eyes when God is above material forms and is independent of time and space.

- 154. And for their Covenant
  We raised over them

  Of Mount (Sinsi); 694
  And (on another occasion)
  We said: "Enter the gate

  God hath set the seal on their hearts For their blasphemy,
  And little is it they believe;—

658. In this verse there is a recapitulation of three salient incidents of Jewish refractoriness already referred to in the second Stars viz. (1) the Covenant under the lowering height of Smal, ii. 63: (2) their arrogance where they were commanded humility in entering a town, ii 58; and (3) their transgression of the Sabbath, ii. 63.

659. In verset 155, 156, 157, 160 (latter half), and 161 with parenthetical clauses including those in verses 154-199, and 160 (first half), there is a catalogue of the iniquities of which the Jews were guilty, and for these iniquities we must understand some such words as: "They are under divine displeasure." Each clause of the indictment I have indictated by prefixing the word "that."

660, Cl. iii, 21, and nn. 363 and 364,

661, Cf. ii 88, and n. 92, where the full meaning is explained.

Note the crescendo (heightening effect) in the argument. Their niiquities were: (1) that they broke their Covenant; (2) that they rejected God's guidance as conveyed in His Signs; (3) that they killed God's Messengers and incurred a double guilt, war, that of murder and that of a deliberate defiance of God's law; and (4) that they imagined themselves arroganity self-sufficient, which means a blasphemous closing of their hearts for ever against the admission of God's grace. Then begins another series of iniquities from a different point of view; (1) that they rejected Faith; (3) that they made false charges against a saintly woman like Mary, who was chosen by God to be the mother of Jesus; (3) that they boasted of having killed Jesus when they were victims of their own self-hallucination; (4) that they hindered people from God's way; and (5) that by means of usury, and fraud they oppressed their fellow-men.

A grave false charge; 668

157. That they said (in boast),
"We killed Christ Jesus
The son of Mary,
The Apostle of God";—
But they killed him not,
Nor crucified him, sit
But so it was made
To appear to them,
And those who differ
Therein are full of doubts,
With no (certain) knowledge,
But only conjecture to follow,
For of a surety
They killed him not:—

158. Nay, God raised him up 661 Unto Himself; and God Is Exalted in Power, Wise;—

159. And there is none Of the People of the Book ثِهُ تَلَنَّ عَظِيمُ ﴿ وَوَلِيدِ إِنَّ اَ مَتَلْنَا الْسَيحَ عِيسَى اَبْنِ مَهْدُ دَسُولَ اللّهِ وَمَا هَلَوُهُ وَمَا صَلَهُوهُ وَلَسِينَ شُنِهَ كَثَمُ وَالَّ الذِّنَ اخْتَلَمُوهُ وَلَسِينَ شُنِهَ كَثَمُ وَالَّ الذِّنَ اخْتَلَمُوهُ إِلَّا إِنْهَ الظَّيْ وَمَا مَا كُمُهُ يِهِ مِنْ صِلْمِ إِلَّا إِنْهَ الظَّيْ وَمَا هَلُهُ يَقِيبُ

> ﴿ بَلَ زَفَعَهُ ٱللَّهُ إِلَيْهُ وَكَانَا لَلْتُكَرِّيرُكُوكِيمًا ﴿ وَلَا مِنْ أَصْلِ ٱلْكِنَابِ

<sup>662.</sup> The false charge against Mary was that she was unchaste. Cf. xix. 27-28. Such a charge is bad enough to make against any woman, but to make it against Mary, the mother of Jesus, was to bring into ridicule God's power itself. I slain is specially strong in guarding the reputation of women. Slanderers of women are bound to bring four witnesses in support of their accusations, and if they fail to produce four witnesses, they are 40 be flogged with eighty stripes and debarred for ever from being competent witnesses; xxiv.

<sup>664.</sup> There is difference of opinion as to the exact interprelation of this verse. The words are: The Jews did not kill Jesus, but God raised him up (refa@) to Himself. One school bolds that Jesus did not did the usual human death, but still lives in the body in heaven; another holds that he did die (r. 120) but not when he was supposed to be crucified, and that his being "raised up" unto God means that instead of being disgraced as a malefactor, as the Jesus intended, he was on the contrary knonured by God as His Apostle: see also next verse. The same word rafa'a is used in association with honour in connection with Museaff in xciv. 4.

But must believe in him Before his death; 665 And on the Day of Judgment He will be a witness 666 Against them;—

<sup>65).</sup> Before his death. Interpreters are not agreed as to the exact meaning. Those who hold that lesus did not die (see last note) refer the pronoun "his" to Jesus. They say that Jesus is still living in the body and that he will appear just before the Final Day in preparation for the coming of Imitim Mahdi, when the world will be purified of sin and unbellef. There will be a final death before the final Resurrection, but all will have believed before that final death. Others think that "his 'is better referred to "none of the People of the Book", and that the emphatic form "must believe" (12-ya-miransa) denotes more a question of duty than of fact.

688. First we have a general statement: that inspiration was sent to many Messengers, and the inspiration was of the same kind as that sent to the Apostle Muhammad, for God's Message is one. Note that what is spoken of here is inspiration, not necessarily a Book. Every nation or group of people had an apostle: x 47. Some of these apostles have been mentioned by name in the Qur-ân, and some not it iv, 164.

669. Cf. ii. 136 and iii. 84. The list here given is in three groups. (1) The first group, Abraham's family, is the same as in ii. 136 (where see the note) and in ii. 84. (2) Then we have the tragic figures of Jesus, Job and Jonah, whose mission was from a worldly point of view unsuccessful. (3) Then we have Aaron the priest and Solomon the King, both great figures, but each subordinate to another primary figure, vits., Mosse (mentioned in the next verse) and David (mentioned at the end of this verse). David's distinction was the Psaims, which are still extant. Though their present form may possibly be different from the original, and they do undoubtedly include Psaims not written by David, the obliection don'drism much devotional poetry of a high order.

670. God spoke to Moses on Mount Sinai through a cloud; Exad. xxxiv. 5. Hence the title of Moses in Muslim theology : Kalim ulläh: the one to whom God spoke.

671. Every apostle proclaims God's goodness to the righteous and forgiveness to those who repent, (good news), and the Wrath to come for those who reject Faith and live in iniquity (warning). Their mission of warning is a prelude and complement to their mission of good news. No one can then say that he or she did not know.

672. Inspiration, though it is clothed in human language, and shaped to the personality of the inspired one, proceeds from the knowledge of God, and therefore often confains more meaning than the inspired one himself realises.

And the angels bear witness:

But enough is God for a witness.

673. Easy—not in the sense that God takes any pleasure in any of His creatures going astray. The contrary is the case: for God's Grace recognises all good in us to such an extent that it is compared to gratifude in it. 147; see n 633. We must understand easy in the sense that God is Supreme in knowledge and power; if any forces of rebellion foolishly think that they can evade punishment, they are mistaken. Punishment comes as a matter of course: if is, not a matter of difficulty or exertion on the part of God.

674. Gogs solicitude for us is for our own good, not because He gets any advantage from it. For He is independent of all things, and everything declares His glory and praise.

675. Just as a foolish servant may go wrong by excess of zeal for his master, so in religion people's excesses may lead them to blasphemy or a spirit the very opposite of religion. The Jewish excesses in the direction of formalism, racialism, exclusiveness, and rejection of Christ Jesus have been denounced in many places. Here the Christian attitude is condemned, which raises Jesus to an equality with God; in some cases venerates Mary almost, to idolative; attributes a physical son to God ; and invents the doctrine of the Trinity, opposed to all reason, which according to the Athanasian Creed, unless a man believes, he is doomed to hell for ever. Let our Muslims also beware lest they fall into excesses either in doctrine or in formalism.

Christ lesus the son of Marv Was (no more than) An anostle of God. And His Word. Which He bestowed on Mary. And a Spirit proceeding From Him: so believe In God and His apostles. Say not "Trinity": desist: 676 It will be better for you: For God is One God: Glory be to Him: (Far Exalted is He) above Having a son. To Him Belong all things in the heavens And on earth. And enough Is God as a Disposer of affairs.

The doctrines of Trinity, equality with God, and sonship, are repudiated as blasphemics. God is independent of all needs and has no need of a son to manage His affairs. The Gospel of John (wheever worteit) has put in a great deal of Alexandrian and Gnostic mysticism round the doctrine of the Word (Greek, Logos), but it is simply explained here, and our giffs work on this explanation.

<sup>681.</sup> This verse supplements the rule of inheritance to the estate of a deceased person who has left as heir neither a descendant or an ascendant. We shall call such a person A, who may be either a male or a female. In iv. 12 (second half), A's case was considered where he had left uterine brothers or sisters. Here A's case is considered where he has left brothers and/or sisters by the father's side, whether the mother was the same or not "Brothers" and "sisters" in this verse must be construed to be such brothers and sisters.

For the sake of clearness I have expanded the tess language of the original in the translation. Let me explain it more concretely in this note. A, and "brother" and "sister" being strictly defined as above, we proceed to consider how A's inheritance would be divided. If A'left a widow or widower, the widow's or widower's share would first be calculated as in the first half of iv. 12; if A left no spouse, this calculation would not be necessary. Then if A left a single "sister," she would have a half share, the remaining half (in so far as it, or a part of it, does not fall to a spouse, if any) going to remother heirs; if a single "stotter," he would have the whole (subject to the spouse's right if there is a spouse); if more than one "brother," they divide the whole (subject to, etc.). If A left two or more "sisters," they give between them two-linids, subject to the spouse's right, if any. If A left a "brother" and "sister," or "brothers" and "sisters," they divide on the basis that each "brothers' share is twice that-of the "sister" (subject to, etc.). In all cases debts, (uneral expense, and legacies (to the amount allowed) have priority as in a, 527.

Have half the inheritance:
If (such a deceased was)
A woman, who left no child,
Her brother takes her inheritance:
If there are two sisters,
They shall have two-thirds
Of the inheritance
(Between them): if there are Brothers and sisters, (they share),
The male having twice
This share of the female,
Thus doth God make clear
To you (His law), lest
Ye err. And God
Hath knowledge of all things.

INTRODUCTION TO SURA V (Maida).

This Sara deals, by way of recapitulation, with the backsliding of the Jews and Christians from their pure religions, to which the coping stone was placed by Islam. It refers particularly to the Christians, and to their solemn Sacrament of the Last Supper, to whose mystic meaning they are declared to have been false.

As a logical corollary to the corruption of the earlier religions of God, the practical precepts of Islam, about food, cleanliness, justice, and fidelity are recapitulated.

The fourth verse contains the memorable declaration: "This day have I perfected your religion for you": which was promulgated in 10 H., during the Apostle's last Pilgrimage to Mecca. Chronologically it was the last verse to be revealed.

Summary,—Beginning with an appeal to fulfil, as sacred, all obligations, human and divine, it points to certain regulations about food, as conducive to a sober and social life, without superstition and without bias or hatted (v. 1-6, and C. 69).

Cleanliness of body, and justice and uprightness of dealing are nearest to Piety (v. 7-12, and C. 70).

If the Jews and the Christians turned back from the Truth and (y)olated their Covenants, they have had their warning (v. 13-29, and C. 71).

The murder of Abel by Cain is the type of the treatment which the just man suffers from the envious. There is punishment from God. The just man must not prieve (v. 30-46, and C. 72).

Muslims must do impartial justice, but must protect their own Brotherhood and their Faith from insult and scorn: they must appreciate piety, humility, and other good points among the Christians (v. 47-89, and C. 73).

They must enjoy with gratitude all that is good and lawful, but guard themselves against excess. Swearing, intoxication, gambling, violation of the Sanctuary, superstitions of all kinds, and false evidence are condemned (v. 90-111, and C. 74).

The miracles of Jesus, and how they were misused by those who bore his name (v. 112-123, and C. 75).

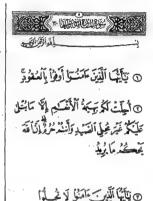

C. 69 .- All obligations are sacred, human (v. 16) Or divine. In the spiritual world We owe duties to God, which must Be fulfilled. But whilst we are In this world of sense, those duties Are by no means isolated From what we owe to ourselves And our fellows in the world Of men. We must respect the laws And customs of the Sacred Mosque And the Sacred Sanctuary. In food our laws are simple : All things good and pure are lawful, We refuse not social intercourse · With men and women,-People of the Book.

Stira V.

Manda, or The Table Spread.

In the name of God, Most Gracious, Most Heroiful,

- 2. Taxwful unto you (for food)
  Are all four-fooded animals.
  With the exceptions named:
  But animals of the chase
  Are forbidden while ye
  Are in the Sacred Precincts
  Or in pilgrim garb:
  For God doth command
  According to His Will and Plan.
- O ye who believe!
   Violate not the sanctity

682. This line has been justly admired for its terseness and comprehensiveness. Obligations: 'gold'; the Arabic word implies so many things that a whole chapter of Commentary can be written on it. First, there are the divine obligations that arise from our spiritual nature and our relation to God. He created us and implanted in us the faculty of knowledge and foresight; besides the intuition and reason which He gave us, He made Nature responsive to our needs, and His Signs in Nature are so many lessons to us in our own inner life; He further sent Messengers and Teachers, for the guidance of our conduct in individual, social, and public life. All these gifts create corresponding obligations which we must fulfil. But in our own human and material life we undertake mutual obligations. express and implied. We make a promise; we enter into a commercial or social contract; we enter into a contract of marriage; we must faithfully fulfil all obligations in all these relationships. Our group or our State enters into a treaty: every individual in that group or State is bound to see that as far as lies in his power, such obligations are faithfully discharged. There are tacit obligations; living in civil society, we must respect its tacit conventions unless they are morally wrong, and in that case we must get out of such society. There are tacit obligations in the characters of host and guest. wayfarer or companion, employer or employed, etc., etc., which every man of Faith must discharge conscientiously. The man who deserts those who need him and goes to pray in a desert is a coward who disregards his obligations. All these obligations are inter-connected. Truth and fidelity are parts of religion in all relations of life.

This verse is numbered separately from the succeeding verses by Haft Uthman and the Fath-ur-Rahman. As it forms a paragraph or chapter by itself, I have followed that numbering throughout this Sūra, thus reluctantly diverging from the numbering in the edition of the Asymans-Himāyat-i-laidm throughout this chapter.

683, See v. 4 below.

684, Cf. v. 97.99. Hunting and the use of game are forbidden "while ye are hurumus," i.e. while ye are (1) in the Sacred Precincts, or (2) in the special pilgrim garb (hram), as to which see n. 212, ii. 196. In most cases the two amount to the same thing. The Sacred Precincts are sanctuary both for man and beast.

685. God's commands are not arbitrary. His Will is the perfect Archetype or Plan of the world.

Everything He wills has regard to His Plan, in which are reflected His perfect wisdom and goodness,

Of the Symbols of God. 66 Nor of the Sacred Month. day Nor of the animals brought For sacrifice, nor the garlands That mark out such animals. Nor the people resorting To the Sacred House. Ye may hunt And let not the hatred Of some people In (once) shutting you out Of the Sacred Mosque Lead you to transgression (And hostility on your part). Help ye one another in righteousness and piety. But help ve not one another In sin and rancour: Fear God: for God Is strict in punishment.

Forbidden to you (for food)
 Are: dead meat, blood.

686. Cf. ii 158, where $afa and Marwa are called "Symbols (nka'str) of God". Here the Symbols are everything connected with the Pilgrimage, vtz. (1) the places (like 8afa and Marwa, or the Ka'ba or 'Arafat, et.c.); (2) the rites and ceremonies prescribed; (3) prohibitions (such as that of hunting, etc.); (4) the times and seasons prescribed. There is spiritual and moral symbolism in all these. See notes on it. 158, ii. 1942.00.

37. The month of pligrimage, or else, collectively, the four sacred months (ix. 30), viz., Rajab (7th), Zul-aji (12th, the month of Pligrimage), and Muharram (the first of the year) In all these months War was probibled. Excepting Rajab the other three months are consecutive.

688. The immunity from attack or interference extended to the animals brought as offerings for sacrifice and the garlands or filter or distinguishing marks which gave them immunity. They were treated as sacred symbols. And of course every protection or immunity was enjoyed by the Pilgrims.

689. This is the state opposite to that described in n. 684, i.e., when ye have left the Secred Precincts, and have doffed the special pilgrim garb, showing your return to ordinary life.

690. See n. 205 to iii, 191, In the sixth year of the Hijra the Pagans, by way of hatred and Muslims were re-established in Mecca, some of them wanted to retailate and exclude the Pagans or in some way to interfere with them in the Pilgrimage. This is condemned. Passing from the immediate event to the general principle, we must not retailate or return evil for evil. The hatred of the wicked does not justify hostility on our part. We have to help each other in righteousness and piety, not in perpetuating fends of hatred and enmity. We may have to fight and por down evil, but never in a spirit of malice or hatred, but always in a spirit of justice and righteousness.

The flesh of swine, and that On which hath been invoked The name of other than God; 671 That which hath been Killed by strangling. Or by a violent blow. Or by a headlong fall. Or by being gored to death: That which hath been (partly) Eaten by a wild animal; Unless ye are able To slaughter it (in due form); 692 That which is sacrificed 193 On stone (altars): (Forbidden) also is the division 694 (Of meat) by raffling With arrows: that is implety.

MRhis day have those who Reject Faith given up All hope of your religion: 400 Yet fear them not But fear Me.

But if any is forced 691. Cf. ii. 173 and in. 173 and 174. The probabition of dead meat, blood, the flesh of swine, and that on which other names than that of God has been invoked, has been there explained.

692. If an animal dies by strangling, or by a violent blow, or a headlong fall, or by being gored to death, or by heing attacked by a wild animal, the presumption is that it becomes carnon, as the ide-blood is congealed before being taken out of the body. But the presumption can be rebutted if the life-blood still flows and the solenn mode of slaughter (gable) in the name of God as a sacrifice is carried out, it becomes lawful as food.

693. This was also an idolatrous rite, different from that in which a sacrifice was devoted to a particular idol or a false god.

694, Gambling of all kinds is forbidden: ii. 291. A sort of lottery or rafile practised by Pagan Arbab been described in n. 241., Division of meat in this way is here forbidden, as it is a form of gambling.

693. So long as Islam was not organised, with its own community and its own laws, the Unbelievers had hoped to wean the Believers from the new Teaching. Now that hope was good, with the complete organisation of Islam.

696. The last verse revealed chronologically, marking the approaching end of Musiafa's ministry in his earthly life.

697. The previous verse was negative; it defined what was not lawful for food, vis., things gross, or disgusting, or dedicated to superstition. This verse is positive: it defines what is lawful, vis., all things that are good and pure.

688. In the matter of the killing for meat, the general rule is that the name of the true God should be pronounced as a rite in order to call our attention to the fact that we do not take life thoughtfestly but solemnly for food, with the permission of God, to whom we render the life back. The question of hunting is then raised. How can this soletum rite be performed when we send forth trained hawks, trained hounds, or trained cheetahs or other animals trained for the chase? They must necessarily kill at some distance from their masters. Their game is legalised on these conditions: (I) that they are trained to kill, not merely for their own appetite, or out of mere wantonness, but for their master's food; the training implies that something of the solemnity which God has taught us in this matter goes into their action; and G2 we are to pronounce the name of God over the quarry; this is interpreted to mean that the Tabbir should be pronounced when the hawk or dog, etc., is released to the quarry.

699. The question is for food generally, such as is ordinarily "good and pure": in the matter of meat it should be killed with some sort of solemnity analogous to that of the Tabler. The rule of Islam in this respect being analogous to those of the People of the Book. Here is no objection to mutual recognition, as apposed to meat killed by Pagans with superstitious rites. In this respect the Christian rule is the same: "That ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication." (Acts, xv. 23)." Notice the bracketing of fornication with things unlawful to eat.

700. Islam is not exclusive. Social intercourse, including inter-marriage, is permitted with the People of the Book. A Muslim man may marry a woman from their ranks on the same terms as the would marry a Muslim woman, i.s., he must give her an economic and moral status, and must not be actuated merely by motives of lust or physical desire. A Muslim woman may not marry a mon-Muslim man, because her Muslim status would be affected: the wife ordinarily lates the nationality and status given by her husband's law. A non-Muslim woman marrying a Muslim busband would be expected eventually to accept Islam. Any man or woman, of any race or faith, may, on accepting Islam, freely marry any Muslim woman or man, provided it be from motives of purity and chastity and not of lewdness.

C. 70.—God wishes us to be clean and pure, (v. 7-12.) At prayer and at other times.

But justice and right conduct,

Even in the face of spite and hatred,

Are nearest to Piety and the love

Of God: in Him we put our trust.

SECTION 2.

7. ve who believe! When ye prepare For prayer, wash 202 Your faces, and your hands (And arms) to the elbows : Rub your heads (with water): And (wash) your feet To the ankles. If ye are in a state Of ceremonial impurity,200 Bathe your whole body. But if ye are ill, Or on a journey, Or one of you cometh From offices of nature, Or ve have been In contact with women, And ye find no water. Then take for yourselves Clean sand or earth,704

<sup>701.</sup> As always, food, cleanliness, social intercourse, marriage and other interests in life, are linked with our duty to God and faith in Him. Duty and faith are for our own benefit, here and in the Hereafter

<sup>702.</sup> These are the essentials of Wudyll, or ablutions preparatory to prayers, viz. (1) to baths the whole face in water, and (2) both hands and arms to the elbows, with (3) a little rubbing of the head with water (as the head is usually protected and comparatively clean), and (4) the bathing of the feet to the ankles. In addition, following the practice of the Apostic, it is usual first to wash the mouth, the throat, and the nose, before proceeding with the face, etc.

243

- 9. O ve who believe ! Stand out firmly For God, as witnesses 706 To fair dealing, and let not The hatred of others To you make you swerve 700 To wrong and depart from Justice. Be just : that is Next to Piety: and fear God. For God is well-acquainted With all that ye do.

٥، وَعَلَدُ اللَّهُ ٱلَّذِي ﴿ وَالْمَهُ الَّذِي الْمَنْهُ ا

705. There is a particular and a general meaning. The particular meaning refers to the solemn Pledge and Covenant taken by two groups of people at 'Aqaba, a valley near Mina, the first about fourteen months before the Hijra, and the second a little later. These were Pledges of feative to the Apostle of God, comparable to the Covenant under Mount Sinai taken in the time of Moses (See Q. ii, 63 and n 78.) The general meaning has been explained in n. 682 to v. 1; man is under a spiritual obligation under an implied Covenant with God; God has given man reason, judgment, the higher faculties of the soul, and even the position of God's vicegerent on earth (ii. 30), and man is bound to serve God faithfully and obey His Will. That obedience begins with cleanliness in bodily functions, food, etc. It goes on to cleanliness of mind and thought, and culminates in purity of motives in the inmost recesses of his heart and soul.

<sup>707.</sup> To do justice and act righteously in a favourable or neutral atmosphere is meritorious enough, but the real test comes when you have to do justice to people who hate you or to whom you have an aversion. But no less is required of you by the higher moral law.

 Those who reject faith And deny Our Signs Will be Companions Of Hell-fire.

12. O ye who believe!

Unto you when
Certain men formed the design
To stretch out
Their hands against you,
But (God) held back
Their hands from you:
So fear God. And on God

C. 71.—If the men who received revelations

If they broke their agreements
And twisted God's Message from its aim,
If they rebelled against Truth and followed
Their fancies, God's grace was withdrawn
From them and they wandered in the wilderness.

708. In the life-time of the Apostle it happened again and again that the enemies of Islam stretched out their hands against the Apostle, his people, and his teaching. The odds were, from a worldly point of view, in their favour, but their hands were rendered inert and poweriess because they were fighting against the truth of God. So does it happen always, now as it did then. True faith must take heart, and at the same time humbly recognise God's favour and mercy, and be grateful.

709, Cf. ii. 63 and n. 78. "Moses...called for the elders of the people....and all the people answered together and said, 'All that the Lord hath spoken we will do'." (Exod. xix, 7-8.) This was under the towering height of Mount Sinai.

The captains or elders or leaders of the people were selected, one from each of the twelve tribes see ii. 60 and n. 73). For census purposes the names of the delars of the tribes are given in Num. i. 4-16: they are called "every one the head of the house of his fathers". Later, twelve other "heads of the Children of Israel" were selected to spy out the land of Canaan: their names are mentioned in Num. xiii. 1-16. See also, below, v. 22-29 and notes.

<sup>710.</sup> Cf. il. 245, n. 276. The phrase means "spending in the cause of God." God in His infinite grace looks upon this as a loan, for which He gives a recompense manifold.

<sup>7.13.</sup> Israel, when it lost God's grace as above, began to sin against truth and religion in three ways: (1) they began to misuse Scripture itself, by either taking words out of their right meaning, or applying them to hings for which they were never meant; (2) ind doing so, they conveniently forgot a part of the Message and purpose of God; and (3) they invented new decits to support the old ones.

<sup>216.</sup> Afables: I wish I could translate by a simpler word than "perspicuous". But "plasi" may mean unadorned, the opposite of beautiful, and this Book is among the most beautiful that it is a privilege of mankind to read. "Clear" would be right as far as it me, or "unambiguous, self-or doct, not involved in mystenes of origin, history, or meaning, one which every one can understand as to the essentials necessary for him, without the intervention of priests or privileged persons." Afable has all these meanings, but it suggests, besides, some quality of a shiming light, by which we are able to make things clear, to distinguish the true from the false. This I think is suggested better by "perspicuous" than by the word "clear". Besides it is hardly good idiom to speak of "a clear Book."

Against God, if His Will Were to destroy Christ The son of Mary, his mother, And all—every one That is on the earth? For to God belongeth The dominion of the heavens And the earth, and all That is between. He createth 711 What He pleaseth. For God Hath power over all things."

<sup>717.</sup> The most honoured of the apostles of God are but men. All power belongs to God, and not to any man. God's creation may take many forms, but because in any particular form it is different from what we see daily around us, it does not cease to be Creation, or to be subject to the power of God. No creature can be God.

<sup>718.</sup> Sons of God: Cf. Job, xxxviii. 7: "When the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy." In the 29th Psalm, 1st verse, the authorised Translation "O ye mighty" should apparently be "O ye sons of Elm", "El being" a name of God. Cf. also Genesis, vi. 2: "The sons of God saw the daughters of men"

Beloved: Cf. Paalms, cxxvii. 2: "He giveth his beloved sleep."

If used figuratively, these and like words refer to the love of God. Unfortunately, "son" used in a physical sense, or "beloved" in an exclusive sense as it God loved only the Jews, make a mockety of religion.

<sup>719.</sup> This refram in the last verse negatives the idea of sonship, and in this verse negatives the idea of an exclusive "Beloved". In both cases it means that God is independent of physical relationships or exclusive partiality.

<sup>720.</sup> The six hundred years (in round figures) between Christ and Muhammad were truly the dark ages of the world. Religion was corrupted; the standard of morals fell low; many false systems and heresics arose; and there was a break in the succession of apostles until the advent of Muhammad.

In (the series of) our apostles, Lest ye should say: "There came unto us No bringer of glad tidings And no warner (from evil)": But now hath come Unto you a bringer Of glad tidings And God hath power Over all things.

72]. There was a long line of patriarchs and prophets before Moses, e.g., Abraham, Isaac, Isma'll, Jacob, etc.

722. From the slavery of Egypt the Children of Israel were made free and independent, and thus each man became as it were a king, if only he had obeyed God and followed the lead of Moses.

723. Cf. Exod. xix. 5: "Now, therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people." Israel was chosen to be the vehicle of God's message, the highest honour which any nation can receive.

724. We now come to the events detailed in the 11th and 14th chapters of the Book of Numbers in the Old Testament. Read these as Commentary, and examine a good map of the Sinai Peninsula, showing its connections with Egypt on, the west, North-West Arabia on the east, and Palestine on the north-east. We may suppose that Israel crossed from Egypt into the Peninsula somewhere near the northern extremity of the Gulf of Suez. Moses organised and numbered the people, and instituted the Priesthood. They went south about 200 miles to Mount Sinai where the Law was received. Then, perhaps a hundred and fifty miles north, was the desert of Paran, close to the southern borders of Canana. From the camp there twelve men were sent to spy out the land, and they penetrated as far as Hebron, say about 150 miles north of their camp, about 20 miles south of the future Jerusalem. They saw a rich, the south of the camp, and the country, and brought from it pomegranates and figs and a bunch of grapes so heavy that it had to be carried by two men on a staff. They came back and reported that the land was rich, but the men there were too strong for them. The people of Israel had no courage and no faith, and Moses remonstrated with them.

24. They said: "O Moses! In this land are a people Of exceeding strength: "" Never shall we enter it Until they leave it: If (once) they leave, Then shall we enter."

25. (But) among (their) God-fearing

Were two on whom God had bestowed His grace: 728 They said: "Assault them At the (proper) Gate: When once ye are in, Victory will be yours:

- 26. But on God put your trust If ye have faith."
- 27. They said: "O Moses! While they remain there, Never shall we be able To enter, to the end of time. Go thou, and thy Lord, And fight ye two, While we sit here!" (And watch)."
- 28. He said: "O my Lord! I have power only

715. The people were not willing to follow the lead of Moses, and were not willing to fight for their "inheritance" in effect they said: "Turn out the enemy first, and then shall enter into possession." In God's Law we must work and strive for what we wish to enjoy.

726. Among those who returned after spying out the land were two men who had faith and courage. They were Joshua, and Caleb. Joshua afterwards succeeded Moses in the leadership after 40 years. These two men pleaded for an immediate entry through the programment of Cate, which I understand to mean, "after taking all due preparations". Cf. Iii. 189 and n. 203. But of course, they said, they must put their trust in God for victory.

727. The advice of Joshua and Caleb, and the proposals of Moers under divine instructions were unpalatable to the crowd, whose prejudices were further inflamed by the other ten men who had gone with Joshua and Caleb. They made an "evil report," and were frightened by the great stature of the Canaanites. The crowd was in open rebellion, was prepared to stone Moses, Aaron, Joshua, and Caleb, and return to Egypt. Their reply to Moses was full of frony, insolence, blasphemy and cowardice. In effect they said: "You talk of your God and all that: go with your God and fight there if you like: we shall sit here and watch."

Over myself and my brother: 728 So separate us from this Rebellious people!"

29. God said: "Therefore Will the land be out Of their reach for forty years: 228 In distraction will they Wander through the land: But sorrow thou not Over these rebellious people.

C. 72.—The jealousy of Cain against Abel, (v. 30-46.) Which led to the murder

Of innocent Abel, is the type
Of the jealousy between the People

In Islam. Jealousy leads to envy
And murder. Such crimes against Individuals are often crimes Against whole peoples. There are Men who are ready to catch up
Every lie told against a just man.
The just man should not grieve,
For that is their way.

SECTION 5.

30. Recite to them the truth 700 Of the story of the two sons 711

٠ * وَاللَّ عَلَيْهِمْ نَبَّا أَبْفَ

. 728. "Moses and Aaron fell on their faces before all the assembly of the congregation." (Num. viv. 5). According to the words in the Old Testament story, God said: "I will smite them with the pestilence, and disinherit them." (Num. viv. 12). Mosey prayed and interceded. But as we are told here, (a spiritual touch not found in the Jewish story), Moses was careful to separate himself and his brother from the rebellion.

729. The punishment of the rehellion of these stiff-necked people, rebellion that was repeated "these ten times" (Num xiv. 22) and more, was that they were left to wander distractedly hither and thither through the wilderness for forty years. That generation was not to see the Holy Land. All those that were twenty vears old and upwards were to die in the wilderness: "your carcasses shall fall in this wilderness." (Num xiv 29). Only those who were then children would reach the promised land. And so it happened. From the desert of Paran they wandered south, north, and east for forty years. From the head of what is now the Gulf of 'Aqaba, they travelled north, keeping to the east side of the depression of which the Pead Sea and the river Jordan are portions. Forty years afterwards they crossed the Jordan opposite what is now Jericho, but by that time Moses, Aaron, and the whole of the elder generation had died.

730. Literally, "recite to them in truth the story", etc. The point is that the story in Gen. iv. 1-15 is a bare narrative, not including the lessons now to be enforced. The aposite is told now to supply the truth of the matter, the details that will enforce the lessons.

731. The two sons of Adam were Habil (in the English Bible, Abel) and Qābil (in English, Cain). Cain was the elder, and Abel the younger—the righteous and innocent one. Presuming on the right of the elder, Cain was puffed up with arrogance and jealousy, which led him to commit the crime of murder. Among the Christians, Cain was the type of the Jew as against Abel the Christian. The Jew tred to kill Jesus and exterminate the Christian. In the same way, as against Muḥammad, the younger brother of the Semitic Iamily. Cain was the type of the Old Testament and New Testament people, who tried to resist and kill Muḥammad and put down his people.

Of Adam. Behold! they each Presented a sacrifice (to God): It was accepted from one, But not from the other. Said the latter: "Be sure I will slay thee." "Surely," Said the former, "God Doth accept of the sacrifice Of those who are righteous.

- 33. The (selfish) soul of the other Led him to the murder Of his brother: he murdered Him, and became (himself) One of the lost ones.<sup>28</sup>
- 34. Then God sent a raven, Who scratched the ground.

722. My sin as stell as thies. There are two possible interpretations: (1) The obvious one is that the unjust murderer not only carried on himself the burden of his own sin, but also the burden of his victim's sins. The victim, in suffering a ewong or injustice, is forgiven his own sins, and the wrong-doer, having been warned, aggravates his own sin. (3) "My sin" has also been interpreted as "the sin against me in that thou slayest me": in that case "thy sin" may mean either "thy crime in committing a murder," or "thy sin against this for the crime causes real loss to thyself in the Hereafter." See the his st clause of the east verse.

733. Abel's speech is full of meaning. He is innocent and God-fearing. To the threat of death with the control of the control

734. The innocent unselfish pleading of the younger brother had no effect, for the soul of the other was full of pride, selfishness, and jealousy. He committed the murder, but in doing so, ruined his own self.

عَالَ وَمُلْقَ أَعَدُنُ أَنْ أَكُونُ مُثَالًا

The shame of his brother."
"Woe is me!" said he;
"Was I not even able
To be as this raven,
And to hide the shame
Of my brother?" Then he became
Full of regrets—789

35. On that account: We ordained For the Children of Israel That if any one slew A person-unless it be For murder or for spreading Mischief in the land-It would be as if He slew the whole people: 137 And if any one saved a life. It would be as if he saved The life of the whole people. Then although there came. To them Our Apostles With Clear Signs, yet, Even after that, many Of them continued to commit Excesses in the land.

36. Mahe punishment of those Who wage war against God
And His Apostle, and strive

735. Sew-of may mean "corpse", with a suggestion of nakedness and shame in two senses; (1) the sense of being exposed without burial, and (2) the sense of being insulted by being violently deprived by the unwarranted murder, of the soul which inhabited it;—the toul, too, of a brother.

252

736. The thought at last came home to the murderer. It was dreadful indeed to slay any one the more so as he was a brother, and an innocent righteous brother! But woss still, the murderer had not even the decency to bury the corpse, and of this simple duty he was reminded by a raveer black bird sustaily held in contempt! His regret was on that account. That was not true repentance.

737. The story of Cam is referred to in a few graphic details in order to tell the story of Israel, leveled against God, slew and insulted righteous men who did them no harm but on the contrary came in all humility. When God withdrew His favour from Israel because of its sins and bestowed it on a brother nation, the jealousy of Israel plunged it deeper into in. To kill or seek to kill an individual because he represents an ideal to kill all who uphold the ideal. On the other hand, to save an individual life in the same circumstances is to save a whole community. What could be stronger condemnation of individual assassination and revenge?

738. For the double crime of treason against the State, combined with treason against God, as shown by over crimes, four alternative pusishments are mentioned, any one of which is to be applied according to circumstances, rie, execution (cutting off of the head), crucifixion, maining, or exile. These were features of the Criminal Law then and for centuries afterwards, except that tortures such as "hanging, drawing, and quartering" in Ragish Law, and piercing of eyes and leaving the unfortunate victim exposed to a tropical sun, which was practured in Arabia, and all such tortures were abolished. In any case sincere repentance before it was too late was recognised as a ground for melro.

Or the cutting off of hands And feet from opposite sides, 780 Or exile from the land: That is their disgrace In this world, and A heavy punishment is theirs In the Hereafter;

37. Except for those who repent Before they fall Into your power: In that case, know That God is Oft-forgiving, Most Merciful.

<sup>740. &</sup>quot;Togoth here too might be translated "fear of God", but the very next clause shows that "fear of God" does not mean "fear" in the ordinary sense, which would make you avoid the object of fear. On the contrary the "fear of God" is the intense desire to avoid everything that is against His Will and Law. It is in fact duty to God, for we are told to seek ardenly the means by which we may approach Him, and that can only be done by aritying with might and main for His cause.

<sup>741. &</sup>quot;Prosper" in the spiritual sense, for that is all that matters, as the life of this world is brief and fleeting, and of small account as against Eternity.

And God hath power Over all things.

<sup>742.</sup> Here we touch upon jurisprudence. The Canon Law jurists are not unanimous as to the value of the property stolen, which would involve the penalty of the cutting off of the hand. The majority hold that petty thefts are exempt from this punishment. The general opinion is that only one hand should be cut off for the first theft, on the principle that "if thy hand or thy foot offend thee, cut them off, and cast them from thee " (Matt. xviii. 8). Apparently in the age of Jesus thieves were crucified (Matt. xxvii. 38),

<sup>743.</sup> Punishment really does not belong to mortals, but to God alone. Only, in order to keep civil society to ether, and protect innocent people from crime, certain principles are laid down on which people and build up their criminal law. But we must always remember that God not only punishes but forgives, and forgiveness is the attribute which is more prominently placed before us. It is not our wisdom that can really define the bounds of forgiveness or punishment, but His Will or Plan, which is the true standard of righteousness and justice,

<sup>744.</sup> Two classes of men are meant, viz., the Hypocrites and the Jews. For both of them Mustafá laboured earnestly and assiduously, and it must have been a cause of great grief and disappointment to him that some among them showed so much insincerity, cunning, and hardness of heart. These are types not yet extinct.

Or it be among the lews .-Men who will listen To any lie,-will listen Even to others who have Never so much as come "13 To thee. They change the words From their (right) times 746 And places: they say, " If ye are given this, Take it, but if not, Beware!" If any one's trial Is intended by God, thou hast No authority in the least For him against God. For such-it is not God's will to purify Their hearts. For them There is disgrace In this world, and In the Hereafter A heavy punishment.

45. (They are fond of) listening To falsehood, of devouring." Anything forbidden. If they do come to thee, Either judge between them, Or decline to interfere." If thou decline, they cannot Hurt thee in the least. If thou judge, judge In equity between them. For God loveth those Who judge in equity.

745. There were men among the Jews who were eager to catch up any lie against the Apostle. They had their ears open even to takes from people who had never so much as come near to the Apostle. If we understand "for" instead of "to" before "others" (for the Arabic word would bear both meanings), the sense will be: They are keen listeners or spies for any lies they can catch; and they will act as spies for others (their Rabbis, etc.) who are in the background but to whom they carry false talles.

746. Cf. v. 14. The addition of the words min ba'di here suggests the change of words from their right times as well as places. They did not deal honestly with their Law, and misapplied it, by distorting the meaning. Or it may be that as tale-bearers they distorted the meaning by misrepresenting the context.

747. Decouring anything forbidden: both in a literal and in a figurative sense. In the figurative sense, it would be: the taking of usury or bribes, or taking undue advantage of people's weak position or their own fiduciary powers to add to their own wealth.

748. Where it is merely a trick to catch out the unwary, a just man may honourably decline to interfere in a cause submitted to him, as also in a case where the parties are not honestly desirous of justice, but each hopes that some partiality will be shown to it.

46. But why do they come **
To thee for decision,
When they have (their own)
Law before them?—
Therein is the (plain)
Command of God; yet
Even after that, they would Turn away. For they Are not (really)
People of Faith.

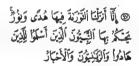

C. 73.—True justice accords with God's Law.

(v. 47-59.) Follow not men's selfah desires,
But God's Will, which was revealed
To Moses and Jesus, and now to Muhammad.
Take not for friends and protectors
Those in whose hearts is a disease,—
To whom religion is a mockery
Or a plaything,—who worship evil.
Proclaim the Truth of God, and be
Not afraid. Eschew their iniquities,
Which were denounced by David
And Jesus. But recognise with justice
Those who are sincere and humble,
Though they may be themselves
Not of your flock, if they witness to Truth.

SECTION 7.

47. It was We who revealed The Law (to Moses): therein Was guidance and light. By its standard have been judged The Jews, by the Prophets Who bowed (as in Islam)
To God's Will, by the Rabbis 251
And the Doctors of Law:

240. This is a searching question as to the motive of the Jews in bringing their cases for decision to the Aposite. They came either (1) to ridicule whatever he said, or (2) to deceive him as to facts and snatch a favourable decision which was against equity If their own Law did not suit their selfish interests, they sometimes twisted it. But Muhammad was always inflexible in his fustice.

<sup>750.</sup> Guidance, with reference to conduct; light, with reference to insight into the higher realms of the spirit.

<sup>751.</sup> Rabban may, I think, be rightly translated by the Jewish title of Rabbi for their learned ven. Jewish learning is identified with Rabbincial literature. Abble is, the plural of bibr or babr, by which we may understand Jewish Doctors of Law. Later the term was applied to those of other religions. Query: Is the word connected with the same root as "Hebrew", or "Eber" (Gen. x. 21), the ancestor of the Hebrew race? This seems negatived by the fact that the Arabic root connected with the word "Hebrew" is 'Abar, not flows.

For to them was entrusted
The protection of God's Book,
And they were witnesses thereto:
Therefore fear not men,
But fear Me, and sell not
My Signs for a miserable price.
If any do fail to judge
By (the light of) what God
Hath revealed, they are
(No better than) Unbelievers.

48. We ordained therein for them: 756

"Life for life, eye for eye,
Nose for nose, ear for ear,
Tooth for tooth, and wounds
Equal for equal." But if Any one remits the retaliation
By way of charity, it is
An act of atonement for himself. 725
And if any fail to judge
By (the light of) what God
Hath revealed, they are (No better than) wrong-doere. 726

49. And in their footsteps
We sent Jesus the son

يّما آسْفُتُفِظُولُ مِن كِلْكِ اللّهِ فَكَاظُا عَلَيْهِ لَهُ لَمُ اللّهُ فَكَاظُا عَلَيْهِ لَمُ لَهُمُ اللّهُ فَلَا فَا عَلَيْهُ لَا اللّهِ مِنْ اللّهُ عَلَيْهُ وَمَن لَا يَخْدُ مِنّا أَرْتُكُ اللّهُ عَالَمُتُهِا فَكُولُ اللّهُ عَالَمُتُهِا فَكُولُ الْكُلُولُونَ اللّهُ عَالَمُتُهِا فَكُولُ الْكُلُولُونَ اللّهُ عَالَمُتُهَا فَكُولُ الْكُلُولُونَ اللّهُ عَالَمُتُهَا فَكُولُ الْكُلُولُونَ اللّهُ عَالَمُتُهَا فَكُولُ اللّهُ عَالَمُتُهَا فَكُولُ اللّهُ عَلَيْهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ عَلَيْهُ اللّهُ عَلَيْهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ عَلَيْهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ عَلَيْهُ اللّهُ عَلَيْهُ اللّهُ عَلَيْهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ عَلَيْهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ عَلَيْهُ اللّهُ عَلَيْهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ عَلَيْهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ عَلَيْهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ عَلَيْهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ عَلَيْهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ عَلَيْهُ اللّهُ اللّه

752. They were living witnesses to the truth of Scripture, and could testify that they had made it knows to the people: Cf. ii. 143, and iv. 135.

733. Two charges are made against the Jews: (1) that even the books which they had, they wristed in meaning, to suit their own purposes, because they feared men rather than God: (2) that what they had was but fragments of the original Law given to Moses, mixed up with a lot of semi-historical and legendary matter, and some fine poetry. The Jawast mentioned in the Qur-an is not the Old Testament as we have it: nor is it even the Pentateuch (the first five books of the Old Testament, containing the Law embedded in a great deal of semi-historical and legendary narrative). See Appendix II, on the Tawast (printed at the end of this SUT).

754. The retaliation is prescribed in three places in the Pentateuch, viz., Exod. xxi 12.43; Leviticus xxiv. 18-21, and Deut. xix. 21. The wording in the three quotations is different, but in none of them is found the additional rider for mercy, as here. Note that in Matt. v. 38, Jesus quotes the Old Law "eye for sys." etc., and modifies it in the direction of forgiveness, but the Quranic injunction is more practical. This appeal for intercy is as between man and man in the spiritual world. Even where the injurted one forgives, the State or Ruler is competent to take such action as is necessary for the preservation of law and order in Society. For crime has a bearing that goes beyond the intensts of the person injuried; the Community is affected: see Q. v. 35.

755. This is not part of the Mosaic Law, but the teaching of Jesus and of Muhammad. Notice how the teaching of Jesus is gradually introduced as leading up to the Quran.

756. The seeming repetitions at the end of verses 47, 48, and 50 are not real repetitions. The significant words in the three cases are: Unbelievers, wrong-doers, and rebellious: and each fits the context. If the Jews tamper with their books they are Unbelievers; if they give false judgments, they are wrong-doers. If the Christians follow not their light, they are rebellious.

The Law that had come

- 51. ME thee We sent the Scripture In truth, confirming The scripture that came Before it, and guarding it 28 In safety: so judge Between them by what God hath revealed. <sup>758.</sup> See n. 756 above.

<sup>739.</sup> After the corruption of the older revelations, the Que-an comes with a twofold purpose: (1) to confirm the true and original Message, and (2) to guard it. or act as a check to its interpretation. For example, if people seek statisation in a spirit of revenge, it holds forth mercy. If they glibly mask their cowardice or sentimentalism by empty talk of "turning the other cheek," it tests them by the practical test of forgiveness and mercy.

<sup>761.</sup> By origin mankind were a single people or nation: iv 1, and ii, 213. That being so, God could have kept us all alake, with one language, one kind of disposition, and one set of physical conditions (including climate) to live in. But in His wisdom, He gives us diversity in these things, not only at any given time, but in different periods and ages. This tests our capacity for Unity ("Nadadiniay) still more; and accentuates the need of Unity and Islam.

Plan is) to test you in what He hath given you: so strive As in a race in all virtues. The goal of you all is to God; It is He that will show you The truth of the matters In which ye dispute; ""

- 52. And this (He commands):
  Judge thou between them
  By what God hath revealed,
  And follow not their vain
  Desires, but beware of them
  Lest they beguile thee
  From any of that (teaching)
  Which God hath sent down
  To thee. And if they turn Away, be assured that
  For some of their crimes
  It is God's purpose to punish Them. And truly most men
  Are rebellious.
- 53. Do they then seek after
  A judgment of (the Days **
  Of) Ignorance? But who,
  For a people whose faith
  Is assured, can give Better judgment than God?

762. As our true goal is God, the things that seem different to us from different points of view, will untastly be reconciled in Him. Einstein is right in plumbing the depths of Relativity in the world of physical science. It points more and more to the need of Unity in God in the societual world.

<sup>763.</sup> The Days of Ignorance were the days of tribalism, feuds, and selfish accentuation of differences in man. Those days are really not yet over. It is the mission of Islam to take us away from that false mental attitude, towards the true attitude of Unity. If our Faith is certain (and not merely a matter of words), God will guide us to that Unity.

<sup>764.</sup> That is, look not to them for help and comfort. They are more likely to combine against you than to help you. 767. As "most men are rebellious" (v. 52), it is inevitable that there should be apostates even from such a religion of reason and common-sense as Islam. But here is a warning to the Muslim body that they should not repeat the history of the Jews, and become so self-astisfed or arrogant as to depart from the spirit of God's teaching. If they do, the loss will be their own. God's bounty is not confined to one group or section of humanity. He can always raise up people who will follow the true spirit of Islam. That spirit is defined in two ways: first in general terms; they will love God and God will love them: and secondly, by specific signs; amongst the Brethren, their attitude will be that of humility, but to wrong-doers they will often no meally-mouthed compromises; they will always strive and fight for truth and right; they will know no fear, either physical, or that more insidious form, which says: "What will people say if we act thus?" "They are too great in mind to be haunted by any such thought. For, as the next verse says, their friends are God, His Apostir, and His people, the people who judge rightly, without fear or favour.

. 768. It is not right that we should be in intimate association with those to whom religion is either a subject of mockery or at best is nothing but a plaything. 769. There is the most biting irony in this and the next verse. 'You People of the Book! Do you hate us because we believe in God and not only our scripture, but yours also? Perhaps you hate us because we obey and you are in rebellion against God! Why hate us? There are worse things than our obedience and our Faith. Shall I tell you some of them? Our test will be; what treatment God meted out to the things I mention. Who were the people who incurred the curse of God? (See Deut. xi. 28, and xxviii, 15-68; and numerous passages like Hosea viii, 14, and ix 1.). Who provoked God's wrath? (See numerous passages like Deut. i. 34; Matt. iii. 7.) Who forsook God, and worshipped evil? (See Jeremiah, xvi. 11-13.) That is your record. Is that why you hate us?"

770. For apes see Q. ii. 65. For men possessed by devils, and the devils being sent into swine, see Matt, viii, 28-32. Or perhaps both apes and swine are allegorical: those who falsified God's scriptures became lawless like apes, and those who succumbed to filth, gluttony, or gross living became like swine.

<sup>771.</sup> Eating of things forbidden: may be construed in a literal or a figurative sense. From its juxtaposition with sin and hatred, it is better to construe it in a figurative sense, as referring to their fraudulent misappropriations of other people's property or trust property. "Eating" is used in v. 60 below in the general sense of enjoyment and happiness.

<sup>722.</sup> Cf. v. 13, and ii. 245, for a "beaufful loan to God", and iii. 181, for the biasphemous taunt, "Then God is poor!" It is another form of the taunt to say, "Then God's hands are tied up, He is close-fisted, He does not give!" This blasphemy is repludated. "On the contrary, boundless is God's bounty, and He gives, as it were, with both hands outstretched,—a figure of speech for unbounded liberality."

﴿ * يَنْكُمُنَا ٱلرَّسُولُ بَلِنَعُ مَّا أُثِرَلَ إِلَيْكَ مِن زَيْكُ قاد لَرْ مُنكِلُ

777. Muhammad had many difficulties to contend with, many enemies and dangers to avoid. This is to assure him that his Message was true and from God. His mission must be fulfilled. And he must—as he did—go forward and proclaim that Message and fulfil his mission, trusting to God for protection, and unconcerned if people who had lost all sense of right rejected it or threatened him.

<sup>775.</sup> The argument of the whole verse may be thus stated. The Jews blaspheme and mock, and because of their jealousy, the more they are taught, the more obstinate they become in their rebellion. But what good will it do to them? Their selfishness and spite sow quarrels among themselves, which will not be healed till the Day of Judgment. When they stir up wars, especially against the innocent, God's Mercy is poured down like a flood of water to extinguish them. But their wickedness continues to devise ever new mischief. And God loves not mischief or those who do mischief.

Wouldst not have fulfilled And proclaimed His Mission. And God will defend thee From men (who mean mischief). For God guideth not Those who reject Faith.

<sup>178</sup> In v. 29 Moses was told not to sorrow over a rebellious people. Here Muhammad is told not to sorrow over people without Faith. The second situation is even more trying than the first. Rebellion may be a passing phase. Want of faith is an attitude of mind that is well-nigh hopeless. Yet the Apostic patiently reasoned with them and bore their taunts and insults. If, the argument runs, you do not believe in anything, even in the things that you may be expected to helieve in, how can you receive in Faith God's Message that has come in another form? In fact your jealousy adds to your obstinacy and unbelief.

<sup>779.</sup> Cf. ii. 62. As God's Message is one, Islam recognises true faith in other forms, provided that it be sincere, supported by reason, and backed up by righteous conduct. Note 76 explains who the Sabians were.

784. Note how logically the argument has led up from Jewish back-slidings and want of faith, to blasphemies associated with the names of Jesus and Mary, and in the following verses to the worship of senseless stocks and stones. God is One: His Message is one; yet how people's perversity transforms truth into falsebood, religion into superstition:

785. Excess, as opposed to moderation and reason, is the simplest test by which a hypocrite or a selfish man who 'trades' on religion, is known from a sincere, pious, and truly religious man excess means that truth is sometimes concealed or trampled upon, that the fashions of ancestors or contemporaries are copied or overdone, and God's name is dishonoured by blasphemies or the setting up of false gods or fetishes, or that good (or even bad) men are defided and worshipped. The true path is the even, path, the path of rectitude. (-Cf. ii. 108, and v. 13).

786. The Psalms of David have several passages of imprecations against the wicked. Cf. Psalms cix. 17-18; [xxviii. 21-22 ("Therefore the Lord heard this and was wroth; so a fire was kindled against Jacob, and anger also came up against Israel; because they believed not in God, and trusted not in His salvation"); Psalms ixxx. 22-28, and Psalms v. [0.

787. C/ Matt. xxiii, 33 ("Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of Hell?); also Matt. xii, 34.

<sup>788.</sup> There are bad men in every community, but if leaders connive at the misdeeds of the commonalty,—and even worse, if leaders themselves share in the misdeeds, as happened with the Pharisees and Scribes against whom Jesus spoke out, then that community is doomed.

<sup>789.</sup> The meaning is not that they merely call themselves Christians, but that they are such sincer Christians that they appreciate Muslim virtues, as did the Abyssinians to whom Muslim refugees went during the persecution in Mecca. They would say: "It is true we are Christians, but we understand your point of view, and we know you are good men." They are Muslims at heart, whatever their label may be

<sup>790.</sup> Quasts: I have translated as "devoted to learning," following the Commentators. It seems to be a foreign word, possibly Abysinian rather than Syrac, as the reletence seems to be to the Abysinian Christians. Their real devotion to learning and the renunciation of the world by the Monastic Orders are contrasted with the hypocrisy and arrogance of the Pharisees and Scribes.

C. 74.—In the physical pleasures of life
(v. 90-111.) The crime is excess: there is no merit
In abstention from things that are good
And lawful. Take no rash vows,
But to solemn oaths be faithful. Shun
As abominations drinking and gambling,
And superstitions of all kinds.
But be reverent to what is sacred
In rites and associations. Not the same
Are things good and things evil.
Learn to distinguish, but pry not
Into questions beyond your ken.
Guard your own souls in truth
And justice, and no harm can befall you.

SECTION 12.

90. ye who believe! Make not unlawfu! تَأَيَّتُ الْإَيْنَ المَنْوالَا تُعَيَّمُوا

The good things which God Hath made lawful for you, But commit no excess; "" For God loveth not Those given to excess,

- Eat of the things which God hath provided for you, Lawful and good; but fear God, in Whom ye believe.
- 92. God will not call you To account for what is Futile in your oaths.791 But He will call you To account for your deliberate Oaths: for expiation, feed Ten indigent persons. On a scale of the average For the food of your families: Or clothe them: or give A slave his freedom. If that is beyond your means. Fast for three days. That is the expiation For the oaths ye have sworn, But keep to your oaths. Thus doth God make clear To you His Signs, that ye May be grateful.

@ وَكُلُوا مِنَا رَزَقَكُ اللهُ حَلَاكَ اللهُ حَلَاكَة

791. In pleasures that are good and lawful the crime is excess. There is no merit merely in abstention or ascericism, though the humility or unselfatness that may go with asceticism may have its value. In v. 85 Christian monks are praised for particular virtues, though here and elsewhere mohasticism is disapproved of. Use God's gifts of all kinds with gratitude, but excess is not approved of by God.

792. Vows of panance or abstention may sometimes be futile, or even stand in the way of a really good or virtuous act. See ii. 224-226, and notes. The general principles established are: (1) take no futile oaths; (2) use not God's name. literally or in intention, to fetter yourself against doing a lawful or good act; (3) keep to your solemn oaths to the utmost of your ability; (4) where you are unable to do so, expiate your failure by feeding or clothing the poor, or obtaining some one's freedom, or if you have not the means, by fasting. This is from a spiritual aspect. If any party suffers damage from your failure, compensation will be due to him, but that would be a question of law or equity.

And (divination by) arrows, <sup>795</sup>
Are an abomination,—
Of Satan's handiwork:
Eschew such (abomination),
That ye may prosper.

- 94. Satan's plan is (but)
  To excite enmity and hatred
  Between you, with intoxicants
  And gambing, and hinder you
  From the remembrance
  Of God, and from prayer:
  Will ye not then abstain?
- 95. Obey God, and obey the Apostle, MAnd beware (of evil):
  If ye do turn back,
  Know ye that it is
  Our Apostle's duty
  To proclaim (the Message) The clearest manner.
- 96. On those who believe
  And do deeds of righteousness
  There is no blame
  For what they ate (in the past),
  When they guard themselves
  From evil, and believe,
  And do deeds of righteousness,—
  (Or) again, guard themselves
  From evil and believe,—
  (Or) again, guard themselves
  From evil and do good.

794. Cf. v. 4. The stones there referred to were stone altars or stone columns on which oil was poured for consecration, or slabs on which meal was sacrificed to idols. Any idolatorus or superstitious practices are here condemned. The anable were objects of worship, and were common in Arabia before Islam. See Renan, "History of Israel." Chapter IV. and Corpus Inscriptionsum Semiticarum, Part I. p. 154; Illustrations Nos. 123 and 123 bis are Phoenician columns of that kind, found in Malta.

795. Cf. v. 4. The arrows there referred to were used for the division of meat by a sort of lottery or raffle. But arrows were also used for divination, i.e., for accertaining lucky or unlucky moments, or learning the wishes of the heathen gods, as to whether men should undertake certain actions or not. All superstitions are condemned.

796. We are asked to obey the commands of God (which are always reasonable), instead of following superstitions (which are irrational), or seeking undue stimulation in intoxicants or undue advantage in gambling. To some there may be temporary excitement or pleasure in these, but that is not the way sither of prosperity or piety.

707, Cf. v. 70. Both the worldly and the spiritual aspects of loss are pointed out. Can God's Message do more?

For God loveth those Who do good.798

SECTION 13.

- 97. Pye who believe! God doth but make a trial of you In a little matter Of game well within reach Of your hands and your lances, That He may test 199 Who feareth Him unseen: Any who transgress Thereafter, will have A grievous penalty.
- 98. O ve who believe! Kill not game While in the Sacred Precincts or in pilgrim garb, too If any of you doth so Intentionally, the compensation Is an offering, brought To the Ka'ba, of a domestic animal Equivalent to the one he killed. "

والملافئ الخداسة

798. There is a subtle symphony in what appears at first sight to be a triple repetition. The relation of such simple regulations as those of food, or game, or the reverence due to a sacred place or sacred institution, has to be explained vis-a-vis man's higher duties. Baidhawl is right in classifying such duties under three heads: those due to God, those due from a man to himself (his self-respect), and those due to other creatures of God. Or perhaps all duties have this threefold aspect. The first may be called Believing or Faith; the second, Guarding ourselves from evil, or Conscience; and the third, doing good or Righteousness. But the simplest physical rules, e.g., those about eating, cleanliness, etc., if they are good, refer also to the higher aspects. If we eat bad food, we hurt ourselves, we cause offence to our neighbours, and we disobey God. If we have faith and righteousness, are we likely to be wanting in conscience? If we have conscience and faith, are we likely to fail in righteousness? If we have conscience and righteousness, what can be their foundation but faith? All three manifest themselves in a willing obedience to God, and love for Him. We realise His love in loving and doing good to His creatures, and our love for Him is meaningless without such good.

799. Literally, "know". Cf. iii. 166, and iii. 154, n. 467. Game is forb'dden in the Sacred Precincts. If we deliberately break that injunction, we have no faith and reverence.

800. See v. 2, and n. 684. The pilgrim garb, Ihram, has been explained in n. 212, ii, 196,

801. For an inadvertent breach of the game rule there is apparently no penalty. Intentional breach will be prevented, if possible, by previous action. If in some case the preventive action is not effective, the penalty is prescribed. The penalty is in three alternatives; an equivalent animal should be brought to the Ka'ba for sacrifice; if so, the meat would be distributed to the poor; or the poor must be fed, with grain or money, according to the value of the animal if one had been sacrificed. or the offender must fast as many days as the number of the poor who would have been fed under the second alternative. Probably the last alternative would only be open if the offender is too poor to afford the first or second, but on this point Commentators are not agreed. The "equivalent animal" in the first alternative would be a domestic animal of similar value or weight in meat or of similar shape (e.g., goat to antelope), as adjudged by two just men on the spot.

The alternatives about the penalty and its remission ("God forgives what is past") or exaction explain the last two lines of the verse; being "Exalted and Lord of Retribution", God can remit or regulate according to His just laws.

As adjudged by two just men Among you; or by way Of atonement; the feeding Of the indigent; or its Equivalent in fasts: that he May taste of the penalty Of his deed. God Forgives what is past: For repetition God will Exact from him the penalty. For God is Exalted, And Lord of Retribution.

- 99. Lawful to you is the pursuit wo Of water-game and its use For food,—for the benefit Of yourselves and those who Travel; but forbidden is the pursuit of land-game;—As long as ye are In the Sacred Precincts Or in pilgrim garb. And fear God, to Whom Ye shall be gathered back.

806, Cf. ii, 204. People often judge by quantity rather than quality. They are dazzled by numbers: their hearts are captured by what they see everywhere around them. But the man of understanding and discrimination judges by a different standard. He knows that good and bad things are not to be lumped together, and carefully chooses the best, which may be the scarcest, and avoids the bad, though evil may meet him at every step.

808. For example, the merely fractious questions asked of Moses by the fews: ii. 68-71. They showed that they had no faith. When foolish questions are asked, and there is no answer, it also , shakes the faith of the foolish ones.

<sup>807.</sup> Many secrets are wisely hidden from us. If the future were known to us, we need not necessarily be happy. In many cases we should be miserable. If the inner meaning of some of the things we see before our eyes were disclosed to us, it might cause a lot of mischief. God's Message, in so far as it is necessary for shaping our conduct, is plain and open to us. But there are many things too deep for us to understand, either individually or collectively. It would be foolish to pry into them, as some foolish people tried to do in the time of the Apostle. Where a matter is mentioned in the Qur-an, we can reverently ask for its meaning. That is not forbidden. But we should never pass the bounds of (1) our own capacity to understand. (2) the time and occasion when we ask questions, and (3) the part of the Universal Plan which it is God's purpose to reven! to us.

And on that account Lost their faith.

<sup>809.</sup> A number of Arab l'agan supersitions are referred to. The Pagan mind, not understanding the hidden secrets of nature, attributed certain phenomena to divine anger and were assailed by supersitious fears which haunted their lives. If a she-camel or other female domestic animal had a large number of young, she (or one of her offspring) had her ear sit and she was dedicated to a god: such an animal was a bakirs. On return in safety from a journey, or in recovery from an illness a she-camel was similarly dedicated and let loose for tree pasture: she was called a sibh. Where an animal bore twins, certain sacrifices or dedications were made to idols: an animals of dedicated was a wayin. A stallion-camel dedicated to the gods by certain rites was a pāis. The particular examples lead to the general truth: that supersitition is due to ignorance, and is degrading to men and dishonouring to food.

<sup>810</sup> Cf. ii. 170. Where an apostle of Truth comes to teach us the better way, it is foolish to say; "What our ancestors did is good enough for us."

<sup>811.</sup> Cf. v. 51. There the unity of God will reconcile different views. The unity of the one Judge will do perfect justice to each one's conduct, however different in form it may have appeared in this world.

821. The Jews were seeking to take the life of Jesus long before their final attempt to crucify him: see Luke iv. 28-29. Their attempt to crucify him was also foiled, according to the teaching we have received: O. iv. 157.

822. According to Luke (xi. 15), when Christ performed the miracle of casting out devils, the Jews said he did it through the chief of the devils, i.e., they accused him of black magic. No such miracle of casting out devils is mentioned in the Qur-lan, nor are we asked to believe in demoniacal possession of that kind. But Moses, Jesus, and Muḥammad were all accused of magic rad sorcery, by those who could find no other explanation of God's power.

g23. The request of the Disciples savours a little of (1) want of faith, (2) too much attention to physical food, and (3) a childish desire for miracles or Signs. All these three can be proved from the Canonical Goppels. (1) Simon Peter, quite early in the story, asked Jesus to depart. From him, as he (Simon) was a sinful man (Luke v. 8). The same Peter afterwards denied his Master three several times shamelessly when the Master was in the power of his enemies. And one of the Dusciples (Judas) actually betrayed Jesus. (2) Even in the Canonical Gospels, so many of the miracles are concerned with food and drink; $x$, the turning of the water into wine (John, ii. 1-11); the conversion of five loaves and two small fishes into food for 5000 men (John vi. 5.13), this being the only miracle recorded in all the four Cospels; the miraculous number of fishes caught for food (Luke v. 4-11); the curving of the fig tree because it had no fruit (Malt, Xxi. 18-19); the allegory of eating Christ's fish and drinking his blood (John v. 53-57), (3) Because the Samaritans would not receive Jesus into their village, the Disciples James and John wanted a fire to come down from heaven and consume them (Luke ix. 54).

<sup>826.</sup> The words of the Prayer seem to suggest the Last Supper. Cf. also the vision of Peter in "The Acts of the Apostles", x. 9-16.

82B. A forceful allegory. It is a wicked generation that asks for Signs and Miracles. Usually they are not vouchsafed. But where they are, the responsibility of those who ask for them is increased. If, after that, they reject faith, invert lies, and go after false gods or false ideals, their penalty will be worse than that of other people. How this works out practically among those who call themselves Christians is exemplified in such books as the late Mr. W. T. Stead's "If Christ Came to Chicago?"

APPENDIX II.

On the Taurāi (see v. 47, n. 753)

The Taurāt is frequently referred to in the Qur-ān. It is well to have clear ideas as to what it exactly means. Vaguely we may say that it was the Jewish Scripture. It is mentioned with honour as having been, in its purity, a true revelation from God.

To translate it by the words "The Old Testament" is obviously wrong: The "Old Testament" is a Christian term, applied to a body of old Jewish records. The Protestants and the Roman Catholics are not agreed precisely as to the number of records to be included in the canon of the "Old Testament." They use the term in contradistinction to the "New Testament," whose composition we shall discuss in Appendix III.

Nor is it correct to translate Tourat as the "Pentateuch," a Greek term meaning the "Five Books." These are the first five books of the Old Testament, known as Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy. They contain a semi-historical and legendary parrative of the history of the world from the Creation to the time of the arrival of the fews in the Promised Land. There are in them some beautiful idvlis but there are also stories of incest, fraud, cruelty, and treachery. not always disapproved. A great part of the Mosaic Law is embodied in this narrative. The books are traditionally ascribed to Moses, but it is certain that they were not written by Moses or in an age either contemporary with Moses or within an appreciable distance of time from Moses. They were in their present form probably compiled some time after the return of the lews from the Babylonian Captivity. The decree of Cyrus permitting such return was in 536 B.C. Some books now included in the Old Testament, such as Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi were admittedly written after the return from the captivity. Malachi being as late as 420-397 B.C. The compilers of the Pentateuch of course used some ancient material: some of that material is actually named. Egyptian and Chaldwan terms are relics of local colour and contemporary documents.

But there are some ludicrous slips, which show that the compilers did not always understand their material. Modern criticism distinguishes two distinct sources among the documents of different dates used by the editors. For the sake of brevity and convenience they may be called (a) Jehovistic, and (b) Elohistic. Then there are later miscellaneous interpolations. They sometimes overlap and sometimes contradict each other.

Logically speaking, the Book of Joshua, which describes the entry into the Promised Land, should be bracketed with the Pentateuch, and many writers speak of the six books together as the Hexateuch (Greek term for Six Books).

The Apocrypha contain certain Books which are not admitted as Canonical in the English Bible. But the early Christians received them as part of the Jewish Scriptures, and the Council of Trent (A.D. 1545-1563) seems to have recognised the greater part of them as Canonical. The statement in 2 Esdras (about the first century A.D.) that the law was burnt and Ezra (say, about 458-457 B.C.) was inspired to rewrite it, is probably true as to the historical fact that the law was lost, and that what we have now is no earlier than the time of Ezra, and some of it a good deal later.

So far we have spoken of the Christian view of the Old Testament. What is the Jewish view? The Jews divide their Scripture into three parts (1) the Law (Torah), (2) the Prophets (Nebim), and (3) the Writings (Kethubim). The corresponding Arabic words would be: (1) Taurat, (2) Nabiyin, and (3) Kutub. This division was probably current in the time of Jesus. In Luke xxiv. 44 Jesus refers to the Law, the Prophets and the Psalms. In other places (e.e., Matt. vii. 12) Jesus refers to the Law and the Prophets as summing up the whole Scripture. In the Old Testament Book, II. Chronicles xxxiv. 30, the reference to the Book of the Covenant must be to the Torah or the original Law. This is interesting, as the Qur-an frequently refers to the Covenant with reference to the Jews. The modern Christian terms "Old Testament" and "New Testament" are substitutes for the older terms "Old Covenant" and "New Covenant." The Samaritans, who claim to be the real Children of Israel and disavow the Jews as schismatics from their Law of Moses, only recognise the Pentaleuch, of which they have their own version slightly different from that in the Old Testament.

The view of the school of Higher Criticism is radically destructive. According to Renan it is doubtful whether Moses was not a myth. Two versions of Sacred History existed, different in language, style, and spirit, and they were combined together into a narrative in the reign of Hezekiah (B.C. 727-697). This forms the greater part of the Pentateuch as it exists to-day; excluding the greater part of Deuteronomy and Leviticus. In the reign of Josiah about 622 B.C., certain priests and scribes (with Jeremiah the prophet) promulgated a new code, pretending that they had found it in the Temple (II. Kings, xxii. 8). This Law (Torah=Taurat) was the basis of Judaism, the new religion then founded in Palestine. This was further completed by the sacerdotal and Levitical Torak, compiled under the inspiration of Ezekiel, say, about 575 B.C., and contained mainly in the Book of Leviticus, with scattered fragments in Exodus, Numbers, and Joshua. We are entitled to accept the general results of a scientific examination of documents, probabilities, and dates, even though we reject the premise which we believe to be false, vis., that God does not send inspired Books through inspired Prophets. . We believe that Moses existed: that he was an inspired man of God; that he gave a message which was afterwards distorted or lost; that attempts were made by Israel at various times to reconstruct that message; and that the Taurat as we have it is (in view of the statement in 2 Esdras) no earlier than the middle of the fifth century B.C.

The primitive Torah must have been in old Hebrew, but there is no Hebrew manuscript of the Old Testament which can be dated with certainty earlier than, 916 A.D. Hebrew ceased to be a spoken language with the Jews during or after the Captivity, and by the time we come to the period of Jesus, most cultivated Hebrews used the Greek language, and others used Aramaic (including Syriac and Chaldee), Latin, or local dialects. There were also Arabic versions. For historical purposes the most important versions were the Greek version, known as the Septuagint, and the Latin version, known as the Vulgate. The Septuagint was supposed to have been prepared by 70 or 72 Jews (Latin, septuaginta=seventy) working independently and at different times, the earliest portion dating from about 284 B.C. This version was used by the Jews of Alexandria and the Hellenized Jews who were spread over all parts of the Roman Empire. The Vulgate was a Latin translation made by the celebrated Father of the Christian Church, St. Jerome, from Hebrew, early in the fifth century A.D., superseding the older Latin versions. Neither the Septuagint nor the Vulgate have an absolutely fixed or certain text. The present standard text of the Vulgate as accepted by the Roman Catholic Church was issued by Pope Clement VIII (A.D. 1592-1605).

It will be seen therefore that there is no standard text of the Old Testament in its Hebrew form. The versions differ from each other frequently in minor particulars and sometimes in important particulars. The Pentateuch itself is only a small portion of the Old Testament. It is in narrative form, and includes the laws and regulations associated with the name of Moses, but probably compiled and edited from older sources by Ezra (or Esdras Arabic, 'Uzair) in the 5th century B.C. As Renan remarks in the preface to his History of the People of Israel, the "definite constitution of Judaism" may be dated only from the time of Ezra.. The very early Christians were divided into two parties. One was a Judaizing party, which wished to remain in adherence to the lewish laws and customs while recognising the mission of Jesus. The other, led by Paul, broke away from Jewish customs and traditions. Ultimately Pauline Christianity won. But both parties recognised the Old Testament in its present form (in one or another of its varying versions) as Scripture. It was the merit of Islam that it pointed out that as scripture it was of no value, although it recognised Moses as an inspired apostle and his original Law as having validity in his period until it was superseded. In its criticism of the Jewish position it said in effect: "You have lost your original Law; even what you have now as its substitute, you do not honestly follow; is it not better, now that an inspired Teacher is living among you, that you should follow him rather than quibble over uncertain texts?"

But the Jews in the Apostle's time (and since) went a great deal by the Talmud, or a body of oral exposition, reduced to writing in different Schools of doctors and learned men. "Talmud" in Hebrew is connected with the Arabic rout in Talmās, "disciple" or "student." The Talmudists took the divergent texts of the Old Testament and in interpreting them by a mass of traditional commentary and legendary lare, evolved a standard body of teaching. The Talmudists are of special interest to us, as, in the sixth century A.D., just before the preaching of Islam, they evolved the Massorah, which may be regarded as the body of authoritative Jewish Hadith, to which references are to be found in passages addressed to the lews in the Quran.

The first part of the Talmud is called the Mishna,—a collection of traditions and decisions prepared by the Rabbi Judah about 150 A.D. He summed up the results of a great mass of previous rabbinical writings.

The Mishna is the "Second Law":

Cf. the Arabic Thān-in=second. "It bound heavy burdens, grievous to be borne, and laid them on men's shoulders": Matt. xxiii. 4.

There were also many Targums or paraphrases of the Law among the Jews. "Targum" is connected in root with the Arabic word Tarjama, "he translated." There were many Targums, mostly in Aramaic, and they constituted the teaching of the Law to the masses of the Jewish people.

The correct translation of the Taurāt is therefore "The Law." In its original form it was promulgated by Moses, and is recognised in Islam as having been an inspired Book. But it was lost before Islam was preached. What passed as "The Law" with the Jews in the Apostle's time was the mass of traditional writing which I have tried to review in this Appendix.

APPENDIX III.

On the Initl (see v. 49, n. 757)

Just as the Taurāt is not the Old Testament, or the Pentateuch, as now received by the Jews and Christians, so the Injil mentioned in the Qur-an is certainly not the New Testament, and it is not the four Gospels as now received by the Christian Church, but an original Gospel which was promulgated by Jesus, as the Taurāt was promulgated by Moses and the Qur-an by Mulbammad Muşfafa.

The New Testament as now received consists of (a) four Gospels with varying contents (Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John); and other miscellaneous matter; vis., (b) the Acts of the Apostles (probably written by Luke and purporting to describe the progress of the Christian Church under St. Peter and St. Paul from the supposed Crucifixion of Jesus to about 61 A.D.); (c) twenty-one Letters or Epistles (the majority written by St. Paul to various churches or individuals, but a few written by other Disciples, and of a general nature); and (d) the Book of Revelation or Apocalypse (ascribed to St. John, and containing mystic visions and prophecies, of which it is difficult to understand the meaning).

As Prof. F. C. Burkitt remarks (Canon of the New Testament), it is an odd miscellany. "The four biographies of Jesus Christ .... are not all independent of each other, and neither of them was intended by its writer to form one of a quartette. But they are all put side by side, unharmonised, one of them being actually imperfect at the end, and one being only the first volume of a larger work." All this body of unmethodical literature was casual in its nature. No wonder, because the early Christians expected the end of the world very soon. The four canonical Gospels were only four out of many, and some others besides the four have survived. Each writer just wrote down some odd sayings of the Master that he recollected. Among the miracles described there is only one which is described in all the four Gospels, and others were described and believed in in other Gospels, which are not mentioned in any of the four canonical Gospels. Some of the Epistles contain expositions of doctrine, but this has been interpreted differently by different Churches. There must have been hundreds of such Epistles, and not all the Epistles now received as canonical were always so received or intended to be so received. The Apocalypse also was not the only one in the field. There were others. They were prophecies of "things which must shortly come to pass"; they could not have been meant for long preservation, "for the time is at hand."

When were these four Gospels written? By the end of the second century A.D. they were in existence, but it does not follow that they had been selected by that date to form a canon. They were merely pious productions comparable to Dean Farrar's Life of Christ. There were other Gospels besides. And further, the writers of two of them, Mark and Luke, were not among the Twelve Disciples "called" by Jesus. About the Gospel of St. John there is much controversy as to authorship, date, and even as to whether it was all written by one person. Clement of Rome (about 97 A.D.) and Polycarp (about 112 A.D.) quote sayings of Jesus in a form different from those found in the present canonical Gospels. Polycarp (Epistle, vii) inveighs much against men " who pervert the sayings of the Lord to their own lusts," and he wants to turn " to the Word handed down to us from the beginning." thus referring to a Book (or a Tradition) much earlier than the four orthodox Gospels. An Epistle of St. Barnabas and an Apocalypse of St. Peter were recognised by Presbyter Clement of Alexandria (flourished about 180 A.D.). The Apocalypse of St. John, which is a part of the present Canon in the West, forms no part of the Peshitta (Syriac) version of the Eastern Christians, which was produced about 411-433 A.D. and which was used by the Nestorian Christians. It is probable that the Peshitta was the version (or an Arabic form of it) used by the Christians in Arabia in the time of the Apostle. The final form of the New Testament canon for the West was fixed in the fourth century A.D. (say, about 367 A.D.) by Athanasius and the Nicene creed. The beautiful Codex Sinaiticus which was acquired for the British Museum in 1934, and is one of the earliest complete manuscripts of the Bible, may be dated about the fourth century. It is written in the Greek language. Fragments of unknown Gospels have also been discovered, which do not agree with the received canonical Gospels:

The Injil (Greek, Evangel = Gospel) spoken of by the Qur-an is not the New Testament. It is not the four Gospels now received as canonical. It is the single Gospel which, Islam teaches, was revealed to Jesus, and which he taught. Fragments of it survive in the received canonical Gospels and in some others, of which traces survive (e.g., the Gospel of Childhood or the Nativity, the Gospel of St. Barnabas, etc.). Muslims are therefore right in respecting the present Bible (New Testament and Old Testament), though they reject the peculiar doctrines taught by orthodox Christianity or Judaism. They claim to be in the true tradition of Abraham, and therefore all that is of value in the older revelations, it is claimed, is incorporated in the teaching of the Last of the Prophets.

In v. 85 we are told that nearest in love to the Believers among the People of the Book are the Christians. I do not agree that this does not apply to modern Christians "because they are practically atheists or freethinkers." I think that Christian thought like the world's thought) has learnt a great deal from the protest of Islam against priest domination, class domination, and sectarianism, and its insistence on making this life pure and beautiful while we are in it. We must stretch a friendly hand to all who are sincere and in sympathy with our ideals.

INTRODUCTION TO SURA VI (An'am)

This is a Süra of the late Meccan period. The greater part of it was revealed entire. Its place in the traditional order of arrangement is justified by logical considerations. We have already had the spiritual history of mankind, a discussion of the earlier revelations and how they were lost or corrupted, the regulations for the outer life of the new Community, and the points in which the Jews and Christians failed to maintain the central doctrine of Islam—the unity of God. The next step now taken is to expound this doctrine in relation to Pagan Arabia.

Summary.—The nature of God and the method by which he reveals Himself are first expounded, and the weakness of Paganism is exposed (vi. 1-30, and C. 76).

The emptiness of this world's life is contrasted with the evidences of God's wonderful handiwork in all Creation. It is He who holds the keys of the Unseen and the secrets of all that we see (vi. 31-60, and C, 77).

God's working in His world and His constant care and guidance should give a clue to His unity, as it did to Abraham when he argued with those who worshipped false gods (vi. 61-82, and C. 78).

The succession of prophets after Abraham kept God's truth alive, and led up to the Qur-an. How can man fail to understand the majesty and goodriess of God, when he contemplates God's nature and His Messages tomankind? (vi. 83-110, and C. 79).

The obstinate and the rebellious are deceived: they should be avoided. Though they turn for assistance to each other, they will receive due punishment (vi. 111-129, and C. 80).

God's decrees will come to pass, in spite of all the crimes and superstitions of the ungodly (vi. 130-150, and C. 81).

The better course is to follow the straight Way, the Way of God, as directed in the Qur an, with unity and the full dedication of our lives (vi. 151-165, and C. 82).

C. 76.—God did separate Light from Darkness;
(vi.130.) He reigns not only in heaven but also On earth; Mercy is His Law;
To Him shall we all return
At the end of all things. How can we Then depart from truth and force lies Against Him? It is folly to say that there is Nothing beyond this our present life.

Sora VI.

An'am, or Cattle.

In the name of God, Most Gracious,
Most Merciful.

- 1. Praise be to God,
  Who created the heavens
  And the earth,
  And made the Darkness
  And the Light.
  Yet those who reject Faith
  Hold (others) as equal.
  With their Guardian-Lord.
- 2. He it is Who created the You from clay, and then Decreed a stated term the You from you. And there is In His Presence another Determined term; yet Ye doubt within yourselves!
- 3. And He is God
  In the heavens
  And on earth.
  He knoweth what ye
  Hide, and what ye reveal,
  And He knoweth
  The (recompense) which
  Ye earn (by your deeds).

۞ هُوَ الْذِى خَلَقَكُمْ بِن طِينٍ ثُرَّ فَضَىّ لَجَلَّا وَآجَلُ مُسَدَّى عِندَهُ إِنْزَاكَتُمْ بَشَكَرُونَ

وَهُوَ اللهُ فِي السَّمَلُونِ وَفِي الْأَرْضِّ
 بَسُمُ مُرَاتِكُ وَجَهُ رَكُمْ
 وَيَّسُمُ مُرَاتِكُ مِدَاتِكُ مِنْ

831. Adula has various meanings: (1) to hold something as equal to something else, as here; to balance nicely; (2) to deal justly, as between one party and another, xiii. 15; (3) to give compensation or rejaration, or something as equivalent to something else, v. 70; (4) to turn the balance the right way; to give a right disposition, to give a just bias or proportion, lixxiii. 7; (5) to turn the balance the wrong way, to swerve, to show bias, iv. 135

Als. The argument is threefold: (1) God created everything you see and know; how can you then set up any of His own creatures as equal to Him? (2) He is your own Guardian-Lord; He cherishes and loves you; how can you be so ungrateful as to mater something else! (1) Darkness and Light are to help you to distinguish between the true from the false; how then can you confound the true God with your false ideas and superstitions? There may also be a repudiation of the Duality of old Persian, theology; Light and Darkness are not conflicting Powers; they are both creatures of the one true God.

BS6 After the general argument, the argument comes to man personally. Can such a miserable creature, created from clay, put himself in opposition to his Creator? And can man forget or doubt that he is here only for a short term of probation? And then, after a period, comes the Day of Account before God.

837. This life is a period of probation. The other term leads up to Judgment,

838 It is folly to suppose that God only reigns in the heavens. He also reigns on earth. He knows all our secret thoughts and motives, and the real worth of all that is behind what we care to show. It is by our derest that He judges us; for our deeds, whether good or evil, we shall get due recompense in due time

- 4. But never did a single One of the Signs Of their Lord reach them, But they turned Away therefrom.
- 5. And now they reject
  The truth when it reaches
  Them: but soon shall they Learn the reality of what
  They used to mock at.
- 6. See they not how many Of those before them We did destroy?-Generations We had established On the earth, in strength Such as We have not given To you-for whom We poured out rain From the skies in abundance. And gave (fertile) streams Flowing beneath their (feet): Yet for their sins We destroyed them. And raised in their wake Fresh generations (To succeed them).
- 7. If We had sent Unto thee a written (Message) on parchment, the A
  So that they could Touch it with their hands,
  The Unbelievers would Have been sure to say:
  "This is nothing but

﴿ وَمَا تَأْنِيهِ وَنَ اللَّهِ وَنَ اللَّهِ مِنْ اللَّهِ وَلِهِ اللَّهِ اللَّهِ اللَّهِ اللَّهِ اللَّهِ اللَّه كَانْوَا عَنْهَا مُعْرِضِينَ

839. Now romes the argument from history, looking backwards and forwards, If we are so short-sighted or arrogant as to suppose that we are firmly established on this earth, secure in our privileges, we are reminded of much greater nations in the past, who failed in their duty and were wiped out. In their fate we must road our own fate, if we fail likewise! But those without faith instead of facing facts quarely "turo away therefrom."

839-A. Qiriës, in the Apostle's life, could only mean "parchment," which was commonly used as writing material in Western Asia from the 2nd century B.C. The word was derived from the Greek, Charles (C). Latin, "Charles". Paper, as we know it, made from regs. was first used by the Araba after the conquest of Samarqand in 731 A.D. The Chinese had used it by the 2nd century B.C. The Araba introduced it into Europe it was; used in Greece in the 11th or 12th century, and in Spain through Sielly in the 12th century. The Papyrus, made from an Egyptian reed, was used in Egypt as early as 2500 B.C. It gave place to paper in Egypt in the 10th century.

- 8. They say: "Why is not An angel sent down to him?"
  If We did send down
  An angel, the matter

  Have sent him as a man,
  And We should certainly
  Have caused them confusion
  In a matter which they have Already covered with confusion.

SECTION 2.

- Say: "Travel through the earth And see what was the end Of those who rejected Truth"
- Say: "To whom belongeth All that is in the heavens

840. The materialists want to see actual physical material things before them, but if such a thing came from an unusual source or expressed things they cannot understand, they give it some name like magic, or superstation, or whatever name is in fashion, and they are not helped at all in attaining faith, because their "bearts are diseased" (fi. 10).

841, Cf. ii. 210. An angel is a heavenly being, a manifestation of God's glory, invisible to men who live gross material lives. Such men are given plenty of respite in which to turn in repentance to God and make themselves worthy of His light. But it their prayer to see an angel were granted, it would do them no good, for they would be destroyed as darkness is destroyed by light.

842. Supposing an angel should appear to their grosser senses, he could only do it in human norm. In that case their present confused notions about spiritual life would be still more confounded. They would say: "We wanted to see an angel, and we have only seen a man!".

843. "The scoffers were mocked by the thing that they mocked" would express epigrammatically part of the sense, but not the whole. "Hemmed in" implies that the logic of events turned the tables, and as a man might be besieged and surrounded by an enemy in war, and would be forced to surrender, so these mockers will find that events would justify Truth, not them. The mockers of gesus,—where were they when Titus destroyed jerusalem? The mockers who drove out Muhammad from Mecca,—what was their plight when Muhammad came back in triumph and they sued for mercy—end he gaves it to farm! A eccording to the Latin proverb, Great is Truth, and must prevail.

And on earth?" Say:
"To God. He hath inscribed
For Himself (the rule of) Mercy.**
That He will gather you
Together for the Day of Judgment,
There is no doubt whatever.
It is they who have lost
Their own souls, that will Not helieve.

- 13. To him belongeth all
  That dwelleth (or lurketh)<sup>845</sup>
  In the Night and the Day,
  For He is the One
  Who heareth and knoweth
  All things." <sup>846</sup>
- 14. Say: "Shall I take
  For my protector
  Any other than God,
  The Maker of the heavens
  And the earth?
  And He it is that
  Feedeth but is not fed." bo
  Say: "Nay! but I am
  Commanded to be the first
  Of those who bow
  To God (in Islam),
  And be not thou
  Of the company of those
  Who join gods with God."

844. History, travel, human experience, all prove the Mercy of God and the law that without it those who reject Truth lend to lose their own souls and destroy themselves.

845. Sahana—(1) to dwell; (2) to rest, to be still, to stop (moving), to lurk; (3) to be quiescent, as a letter which is not moved with a yowel

If we imagine Night and Day to be places, and each to have (dwelling in them) things that are open and things that are concealed, things that move and things that are still, things that are sounded and things that are quiescent, we get some idea of the imagery implied. The mystery of Time (which seems more abstract than Space) is thus explained and illustrated by the idea of Place or Space, which also is a notion and not a concrete thing. But He Who has control of all these things is the one true God

Bib Throughout this section we have a sort of implied dialogue, of which one part is understood from the other part, which is expressed. In verse II, we might have an imaginary objector saying: "Why go back to the past?" The answer is: "Well, travel through the world, and see whether its not true that virtue and godliness exail a nation, and the opposite are causes of unit. Both the past and the present prove this." In verse I2 the objector may say: "Buy you speak of God's power?" The man of God replies; "Yes, but Mercy is God's own attribute, and knowledge and wisdom beyond what man can conceive."

847. Feedelh but is not fed: true both literally and figuratively. To God we owe the satisfaction of all needs, but He is independent of all needs.

15. Say: "I would, if I Disobeyed my Lord, Indeed have fear Of the Penalty Of a Mighty Day,

16. "On that day, if the Penalty Is a verted from any, It is due to God's Mercy; And that would be (Salvation), The obvious fulfilment Of all desire. **

17. "If God touch thee
With affliction, none
Can remove it but He;
If He touch thee with happiness,
He hath power over all things."

18. "He is the Irresistible, (watching)
From above over His worshippers;
And He is the Wise,
Acquainted with all things."

19. Say: "What thing is most Weighty in evidence?"
Say: "God is witness
Between me and you;
This Qur-an hath been Revealed to me by inspiration,
That I may warn you
And all whom it reaches.
Can ye possibly bear witness
That besides God there is Another God?" Say:
"Nay! I cannot bear witness!"
Say: "But in truth
He is the One God.

848 We continue the implied dislogue suggested in n 846. In verse 14, the objector might say: "But we have other interests in life than religion and God," "No," says the man of God, "My Creator is the one and only Power whose protection I seek; and I strive to be first in the race." In verse 15, the objector suggests: "Enjoy the good things of this life; it is short." The answer is: "The Haraeffert is more real to me, and promises the true fullment of all desire; happiness or affection comes not from the freeling-petitinesses or illusions of this life, but from the power and wisdom of God." In verse 19, the objector makes his final splanb: "What evidence is there for all this?" The reply is: "I know it is true. For God's voice is within me, and my living Teacher awakens that voice; and there is the Book of Inspiration. God is one, and there is no noe other besides."

849. The vulgar worship false gods out of fear that they would harm them or hope that they would confer some benefit on them. These false gods can do neither. All power, all goodness is in the hands of the One True God. All else is prefered or illusion.

And I truly am innocent Of (your blasphemy of) joining Others with Him."

20. Those to whom We have given the Book Know this as they know *50 Their own sons. Those who have lost Their own souls Refuse therefore to believe.

SECTION 3.

- 23. There will then be (left) No subterfuge for them " But to say: " By God Our Lord, we were not Those who joined gods With God."
- 24. Behold! how they lie Against their own souls!

<sup>850,</sup> Cf. ii, 146 and n. 151. In both passages the pronoun translated "this" may mean "him" and refer to Muhammad the Apostle of God, as some Commentators think,

<sup>851.</sup> Fitnat has various meanings, from the root idea of "to try, to test, to tempt;" e.g., (1) a trial or temptation, as in ii. 102; (2) trouble, tumult, oppression, persecution, as in ii. 191, 193, 217; (3) discord, as in iii, 7; (4) subterfuge, an answer that amounts to a sedition, and excuse founded on a falsehood, as here. Other shades of meaning will be noticed as they occur,

Those who blasphemed God in imagining false gods will now see the vanity of their imaginations for themselves. What answer can they give now? In their perversity they will deny that they ever entertained the notion of false gods.

But the (lie) which they Invented will leave them *** In the lurch.

- 25. Of them there are some

  - 27. If thou couldst but see
    When they are confronted

    They will say:
    "Would that we were

    Then would we not reject
    The Signs of our Lord,
    But would be amongst those Who believe!"
  - 28. Yea, in their own (eyes)
    Will become manifest
    What before they concealed.
    But if they were returned,
    They would certainly relapse
    To the things they were forbidden,

<sup>852.</sup> The lies which they used to tell have now "wandered" from the channels which they use to occupy, and left the hars in the lurch. In denying the indubitable fact that they took alse gods, they admit the falsity of their notions and thus are practically convicted out of their own mouths.

For they are indeed liars. 853

 And they (sometimes) say:
 "There is nothing except Our life on this earth,
 And never shall we be Raised up again."

30. If thou couldst but see
When they are confronted
With their Lord!
He will say:
"Is not this the truth?"
They will say:
"Yea, by our Lord!"
He will say:
"Taste ye then the Penalty,
Because ye rejected Faith."

C. 77.—The life of this world is but empty:
(vi. 31-60.) What is serious is the life hereafter.
The teacher of God's truth is not baulked
By frivolous objections or insults
Or persecution. The wicked will be Cut off to the last remnant. God's wisdom
Pervades the whole of His Creation,
And in His hands are the keys of the Unseen,
And the secrets of all that we see.

SECTION 4.

31. Most indeed are they
Who treat it as a falsehood
That they must meet God,—
Until on a sudden
The hour is on them,
And they say: "Ah! we Unto us that we took
No thought of it";
For they bear their burdens "
On their backs.

<sup>833</sup> Their falsity was not due to want of knowledge, but to perversity and selfishness. In their heart was a disease (ii. 10): therefore neither their understanding, nor their ears, nor their eyes do their proper work. They twist what they see, hear, or are taught, and go deeper and deeper into the mire. The deceptions which they used to practise on other people will, before the Seat of Judgment, become clear in their own eyes.

<sup>854;</sup> Grievous is the burden of sins which the wicked will bear on their backs when they become conscious of them. Some Commentators personity Sins as ugly Demons inding on the backs of men, while the men's Good Deeds become the striong and patient mounts which will carry the men on their backs. If the Good Deeds are few and the Sins many, the man and his Good Deeds will be crushed under the load of the Evil which they carry.

(S. vr. 31-35.

And evil indeed are The burdens that they bear?

- 32. What is the life of this world But play and amusement? 135 But best is the Home In the Hereafter, for those Who are righteous. Will ve not then understand?
- 33. We know indeed the grief Which their words do cause thee: It is not thee they reject: It is the Signs of God. Which the wicked contemn.
- 34. Rejected were the Apostles Before thee: with natience And constancy they bore Their rejection and their wrongs. Until Our aid did reach Them: there is none That can alter the Words (And Decrees) of God. Already bast thou received Some account of those, Apostles.
- 35. If their spurning is hard On thy mind, yet if Thou wert able to seek A tunnel in the ground Or a ladder to the skies And bring them a Sign .-(What good?). If it were God's Will, He could Gather them together Unto true guidance:

<sup>855</sup> Play and amusement are for preparing our minds for the serious things of life; in themselves they are not serious. So this life is a preparation for the Eternal Home to which we are going. which is far more important than the ephemeral pleasures which may possibly seduce us in this life.

<sup>856.</sup> There were many Sigus of a divine mission in the Apostle's life and in the Message which he desivered. If these did not convince the Unbelievers, was it not vain to seek a miraculous Sign from the bowels of the earth or by a visible ascent to the skies? If in the Apostle's eagerness to get all to accept his Message, he was hurt at their callousness, active opposition, and persecution of him, he is told that a full knowledge of the working of God's Plan would convince him that impatience was misplaced. This was in the days of persecution before the Hijrat. The history in Medina and after shows how God's truth was ultimately and triumphantly vindicated. Who among the sincere devotees of Muhammad can fail to read vi. 33-35 without tears in his eyes?

So be not thou Amongst those who are swayed By ignorance (and impatience)!

- 36. Those who listen (in truth), sy Be sure, will accept: As to the dead, God will Raise them up; then will they Be turned unto Him.

837. There is a double meaning here. (1) If people listen to truth sincerely and camestly, they must believe; even if the spiritual faculty: is dead, God will by His grace revive it and they will come to Him. if they really try earnestly to understand. (2) The sincere will believe; but those whose hearts are dead will not listen, yet they cannot escape being brought to the Judgment Seat before him.

858. Signs are all around them, but they do not understand. If they want a particular Sign to suit their gross ignorance, they will not be humoured, for they can always pick holes in anything that descends to their level.

859. "Animals living on the earth" include those living in the water,—dahes, reptiles, crustaceans, insects, as well as four-footed beasts. Life on the wing is separately mentioned. "Talin," which is ordinarily translated as "bird," is anything that flies, including mammals like bats. In our pride we may exclude animals from our purview, but they all live a life, social and individual, like ourselves, and all life is subject to the Plan and Will of God. In v. 59 we are told that not a leaf falls but by His Will, and things dry and green are recorded in His Book. In other words they all obey His archetypal Plan, the Book which is also mentioned here. They are all answerable in their several degrees to His Plan ("shall be gathered to their, Lord in the end"). This is not Panthelsm: It is ascribing all life, activity, and existence to the Will and Plan of God.

860. The limited free-will of man makes a little difference. If he sees the Signs but shuts his ears to the true Message, and refuses flike a dumb thing) to speak out the Message which all Nature proclaims then according to the Plan (of his limited free-will) he must suffer and wander, just as, in the opposite case, he will receive grace and salvation.

In the midst of darkness Profound: whom God willeth, He leaveth to wander: Whom He willeth, He placeth On the Way that is Straight.

861. Sorrow and suffering may (if we take them rightly) turn out to be the best gifts of God to us. According to the Psains (xciv. 12). "Blessed is the man whom Thou chastenest, O Lord!" Through suffering we learn humility, the antidote to many vices and the fountain of many rittues. But if we take them the wrong way, we grumble and complain: we become faint-hearted; and Satan gets his opportunity to exploit us by outling forward the alluring pleasures of his Vainty Fatan

We opened to them the gates Of all (good) things, Me Until, in the midst. Of their enjoyment Of our gifts, On a sudden, We called Them to account, when lo! They were plunged in despair!

56! Learning the inner fruth of ourselves and the world presupposes a certain advanced stage of censitiveness and spiritual development. There is a shallower stage, at which prosperity and the good things of life may teach us sympathy and goodness and cheerfulness like that of Mr Cheeribyles a Dickens. In such cases the Message takes root. But there is another type of character which is puffed up in prosperity. For them prosperity is a trial or even a punishment from the higher point of view. They go, deeper and deeper into sin, until they are pulled up of a sudden, and then instead of being contrict they merely become desperate.

863 God's punishment of wrong doers is a measure of justice, to protect the true and righteous from their depredations and mainfain this righteous decrees. It is an aspect of His character which is emphasised by the epithet "Cherisher of the Worlds."

864, Cl. ii 7 and n

865. Suddenly=without warning. Openly=with many warnings, even to the sinners, though they head them not. As to those who understand and read the signs of God, they could always tell that all wrong-doing must eventually have its punishment. But it will affect the wrong-doers, not the righteous. It is justice, not revenge.

866. The Apostles are not sent to cancel man's limited free-will. They are sent to preach and teach,—to preach hope to the repentant ("good news"), and to warn the rebellious of the Wrath to come

And to warn: so those Who believe and mend (Their lives),—upon them Shall be no fear, Nor shall they grieve.

- 49. But those who reject Our Signs,—them Shall punishment touch, For that they ceased not From transgressing.
- 50, Say: "I tell you not That with me Are the Treasures of God, **
  Nor do I know What is hidden;
  Nor do I tell you I am An angel. I but follow What is revealed to me."
  Say: "Can the blind Be held equal to the seeing?" **

51. Sive this warning to those on In whose (hearts) is the fear That they will be brought (To Judgment) before their Lord: Except for Him They will have no protector Nor intercessor: That they may guard (Against evil).

867. Literally, it might mean that the men of God are not like vulgar soothsayers, who pretend to reveal hidden treasures, or peer into future, or claim to be something of a different nature from men. But the meaning is wider: they deal out God's great (reasures of truth, but the theasures are not theirs, but God's; they have greater insight into the higher things, but that insight is not due to their own wisdom, but to God's inspiration; they are of the same flesh and blood with us, and the sublimity of their words and jeaching arises through God's grace—to them and to those who hear them.

868. Therefore compare not the men of God ("the seeing") with ordinary men ("the blind"). The men, of God, although they be but men, have the higher light with them; therefore do not exact of them petty ephemeral services. Though, they are men, they are not as other men, and are entitled to reverence.

869. There are some men—sinners—who yet believe in Judgment; let them be warned of their personal responsibility to guard against evil; let them not rely upon protectors or intercessors before God; their sinc can only be forgiven by God's own Meccy.

- 52. Send not away those Who call on their Lord
  Morning and evening,
  Seeking His Face.
  In naught art thou accountable
  For them, and in naught are they Accountable for thee,
  That thou shouldst turn
  Them away, and thus be
  (One) of the unjust.
- 53. Thus did We try
  Some of them by comparison was
  With others, that they Should say: "Is it these Then that God hath Favoured from amongst us?"
  Doth not God know best
  Those who are grateful?
- 54. When those come to thee Who believe in Our Signs, Say: "Peace be on you:"
  Your Lord hath inscribed For Himself (the rule ""
  Of) Mercy: verily,
  If any of you did evil
  In ignorance, and thereafter

<sup>870.</sup> Face: trajn: see il. 112 and n. 114. "Face" is used for God's Grace or Presence, the highest aim of spiritual aspiration.

<sup>87).</sup> Some of the rich and influential Qurashs thought it beneath their dignity to listen to Muhammad's teaching in company with the lowly disciples, who were gathered round him. But he refused to send away these lowly disciples, who were sincres seekers after God. From a worldly point of view they had nothing to gain from Muhammad as he was himself poor, and he had nothing to gain from them as they had no influence. But that was no reason for turning them away; indeed their true sincerity entitled them to precedence over wordly men in the kingdom of God, whose justice was vindicated in Muhammad's daily life in this as in other things. If their sincerity was in any way doubtful, it involved no responsibility for the Preacher.

<sup>872.</sup> Pursue the argument of the last note. The influential people who were not given predence over the poor and humble but sincere disciples, were on their trial as to their spiritual insight. Their templation was to say (and they said it in scorn): We are much greater than they; has God then selected these lowly people for His teaching? But that was so. And God knew best those who were grateful to Him for His guidance.

<sup>873.</sup> The humble who nad sincere faith, were not only not sent away to humour the wealthy: they were honoured and were given a special salutation, which has become the characteristic salutation is islam: "Peace be on you,"—the word peace, "salam" having special affinity with the word "Islam." In words they are given the salutation; in life they are promised Mercy by the special grace of God.

Repented, and amended (His conduct), lo! He is. Oft-forgiving, Most Merciful.

55. Thus do We explain The Signs in detail: That the way of the sinners May be shown up. 875

SECTION 7.

- 56. Say: ** I am forbidden
  To worship those—others
  Than God—whom ye
  Call upon." Say: "I will
  Not follow your vain desires:
  II I did, I would stray
  From the path, and be not
  Of the company of those Who receive guidance."
- 57. Say: "For me, I (work)
  On a clear Sign from my Lord,
  But ye reject Him. What ye "
  Would see hastened, is not
  In my power. The Command
  Rests with none but God:
  He declares the Truth,
  And He is the best of judges.".
- 58. Say: "If what ye would see Hastened were in my power, The matter would be settled At once between you and me."

تابَ يِنْ بَعْلِهِ ، وَأَسْلَحَ فَأَنَّهُ عَنْ مُؤَدِّ ذَجِبْ ﴿ وَحَسَدَاكَ مُعْسَلُ الْآيَاتِ وَلِمُسَلَئِينَ سَيَعَلُ الْهِيْعِةِ نَ

875 If the way of the sinners (in jealousy and worldly pride) is shown up, and details are given how to honour the truly sincere, it forms the best illustration of the teaching of God.

876. There are a number of arguments now put forward against the Meccans who refused to believe in God's Message. Each argument is introduced with the word "Say" Here are the first four; (i) I have received Light and will follow it; (2) i prefer my Light to your vain desires (3) your challenge—"if there is a God, why does He not finish the blasphemers at once?"—it is not rem to take up; punjshment rests with God; (4) if it rested with me, it, would be for me to take up your challenge; all I know is that God is not unacquainted with the existence of folly and wickedness, and many other things besides, that no mottal can know; you can see little gimpages of His Plan, and you can be sure that He will not be tardy in calling you to account

- 677. What ye would see hastened: what ye, deniers of God, are so impatient about: the punishment which ye mockingly say does not come to you. Cf. xiii. 6.
- 878. The Messenger of God is not here to settle scores with the wicked. It is not a matter between them and him. It is a matter between them and God; he is only a warner against sin, and a declarer of the scone of salvation.

<sup>879.</sup> Mafātiā: Piural of either mifitahwa key, or maftaḥwa treasure. Both meanings are implied, and I have accordingly put both in my translation.

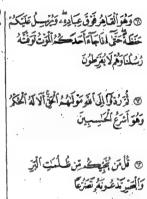

<sup>880</sup> This is the mystic Record, the archetypal Plan, the Eternal Law, according to which everything seen and unseen is ordered and regulated. There is much mystic doctrine here, explained by beautiful metaphors and illustrations. The simplest things in Nature are subject to His Law. The fresh and the withered, the living and the lifeless—nothing is outside the Plan of His Creation.

<sup>881.</sup> As the rest of His Creation is subject to His Law and Plan, so is man's life in every particular and at every moment, awake or asleep. The mystery of Sleep—"the twin brother of death—is called the taking of our soul by Him, with the record of all we have done in our waking moments, and this record sometimes appears to us in confused glimpses in dreams. By day we awaken again to our activities, and so it goes on until we fulfil the term of our lafe appointed for this earth. Then comes the other Sleep (death), with the longer record of our Day (Life); and then, in the end comes the Resurrection and Judgment, at which we see everything clearly and not as in dreams, for that is the final Reality.

Forget Him or run after things That are mere creatures of His, And shall perish,—while He Is the Eternal God, adored By Abraham and all the prophets?

SECTION 8.

- 61. Life is the Irresistible, (watching)
  From above over His worshippers,
  And He sets guardians **
  Over you. At length,
  When death approaches
  One of you, Our angels **
  Take his soul, and they Never fail in their duty.
- 62. Then are men returned
  Unto God, their Protector,
  The (only) Reality: **
  Is not His the Command?
  And He is the Swiftest
  In taking account,
- 63. Say: *** Who is it
  That delivereth you
  From the dark recesses
  Of land and sea,
  When ye call upon Him
  In humility

881 Guardiens: most Commentators understand this to mean guardian angels. The idea of guardianship is expressed if a general term. God watches over us and guards us, and provides all kinds of agencies, material, moral, and spiritual, to help our growth and development, keep us from harm, and bring us nearer to our Destiny.

883. Angels: the word used is rusul, the Sent Ones,—the same word as for human Apostles and Messengers sent by God to teach mankind. The agents who come to take our souls at death are accurate in the performance of their duty. They come neither before nor after their appointed time, nor do they do it in any manner other than that fixed by the Command of God.

884. The only Reality: al-hape, the Truth, the only True One. The point is that our illusions of the life of this lower world now vanish, when we are rendered back to God, from Whom we came. And now we find that so far from the results of our actions being delayed, they follow more swiftly than we can express in terms of Time. Here is the answer to the taunt of those who were impatient of the working of God's Plans (vi. 37-38).

883 In continuation of the four heads of argument referred to inn. 876, we have three more heads here in vi. 63 65: (3) your calling upon Him in times of danger shows that in the depths of your hearts you feel His need: (6) God's Providence saves you, and yet you ungratefully run after false gods; (7) it is not only physical calamities that you have to fear; your mutual discords and vengeances are even more destructive, and only faith in God can save you from them.

886. Zulumāt: dark recesses, terrible lurking dangers, as in deserts or mountains, or forests, or seas.

And silent terror: **
'If He only delivers us
From these (dangers),
(We vow) we shall truly
Show our gratitude'.?"

- 64. Say: "It is God
  That delivereth you
  From these and all (other)
  Distresses: and yet
  Ye worship false gods!"
- 65. Say: "He hath power
  To send calamities "
  On you, from above
  And below, or to cover
  You with confusion
  In party strife,
  Giving you a taste
  Of mutual vengeance—
  Each from the other."
  See how We explain
  The Signs by various (symbols); "
  That they may understand.
- 66. But thy people reject
  This, though it is
  The Truth. Say: "Not mine
  Is the responsibility
  For arranging your affairs:"
- 67. For every Message
  Is a limit of time,
  And soon shall ye
  Know it."

<sup>887.</sup> There are two readings, but they both ultimately yield the same meaning. (1) Khunyalam, situating, secretly, from the depth of your inner heart, suggesting unspeakable terror. (2) Khunyalam, out of terror of fear or reverence, as in vit. 205.

<sup>390</sup> At the date of this revelation, the Apostle's people had as a body not only rejected God's truth, but were persecuting it. The Aspolle's duty was to deliver his Message, which he did. He was not responsible for their conduct. But he told, them plainly that all warnings from God had their time limit, as they would soon find out. And, they did find out, within a very few years. For the leaders of the resistance came to an evil end, and their whole system of fraud and selfshness was destroyed, to make room for the purer Faith of Islam. Apart from that particular application, there is the more general application, for the present time and for all time.

Sav: WS II Shall we indeed Call on others besides God .-Things that can do us Neither good nor harm .--And turn on our heels After receiving guidance From God? -like one Whom the evil ones Have made into a fool. Wandering bewildered Through the earth, his friends Calling 'Come to us', (Vainly) guiding him to the Path."

Sav: "God's guidance Is the (only) guidance, And we have been directed To submit ourselves To the Lord of the worlds:-

- 72. "To establish regular prayers And to fear God: For it is to Him That we shall be-Gathered together."
- 73. It is He Who created The heavens and the earth In true (proportions): 006 The day He saith, "Be."

ه قَا أَمَدُعُ أَمِن دُونِ اللَّهِ مَا لَا يَعْنَعُنَا

<sup>895.</sup> In continuation of the seven heads of argument referred to in on. 876 and 885, we have here the final two heads: (8) who would, after receiving guidance from the living, eternal God, turn to lifeless idols? To do so would indeed show that we were made into fools, wandering to a precipice; (9) therefore accept the only true guidance, the guidance of God, and obey His Law, for we shall have to answer before His judgment-seat.

<sup>896.</sup> The argument mounts up here, leading to the great insight of Abraham the true in faith, who did not stop short at the wonders of nature, but penetrated "from nature up to nature's God." God not only created the heavens and the earth: with every increase of knowledge we see in what true and perfect proportions all Creation is held together. Creatures are subject to Time, but the Creator is not: His word is the key that opens the door of existence. It is not only the starting point of existence, but the whole measure and standard of Truth and Right. There may nossibly be, to our sight in this great world, aberrations of human or other wills, but the moment the trumpet sounds for the last day. His judgment-seat will, with perfect justice, restore the dominion of Right and Reality. For His knowledge and wisdom cover all reality.

Behold I it is, His Word Is the Truth. His will be The dominion the day The trumpet will be blown. He knoweth the Unseen As well as that which is Open. For He Is the Wise, well acquainted (With all things).

- 74. Tao! Abraham said
  To his father Azar:
  "Takest thou idols for gods?
  For I see thee
  And thy people
  In manifest error."
- 75. So also did We show ***
  Abraham the power
  And the laws of the heavens
  And the earth, that he Might (with understanding)
  Have certitude.
- 76. When the night
  Covered him over,
  He saw a star:
  He said: "This is my Lord."
  But when it set,
  He said: "I love not Those that set."
- 77. When he saw the moon Rising in splendour, He said: "This is my Lord." But when the moon set.

897. Now comes the story of Abraham. He lived among the Chaldeans, who had great knowledge of the stars and heavenly bodies. But he got beyond that physical world and saw the spiritual world behind. His ancestral idols meant nothing to him. That was the first step. But God took him many degrees higher. God showed him with certitude the spiritual glones hehind the magnificent powers and lays of the physical universe.

898. This allegory shows the stages of Abraham's spiritual enlightenment. It should not be supposed that he literally worshipped stars or heavenly bodies. Having seen through the folly of ancestral field worshipping distant beautiful things that shine, which the vulgar endue with a power which does not reside in them. A type of such as a star shining in the darkness of the night. Superstition might read fortunes in it, but truer knowledge shows that it rises and sets according to laws whose author is God. And its light is extinguished in the broader light of day. Its worship is therefore futile, It is not a Power, much less the Superem Power.

He said: "Unless my Lord Guide me, I shall surely Be among those Who go astray." ""

- 78. When he saw the sun Rising in splendour, He said: "This is my Lord; This is the greatest (of all)." But when the sun set, He said: "O my people! I am indeed free From your (guilt) Of giving partners to God. 500
- 73. "For me, I have set
  My face, firmly and truly,
  Towards Him Who created
  The heavens and the earth,
  And never shall I give Partners to God."
- 80. His people disputed with him. He said:
  "(Come) ye to dispute
  With me, about God,
  When He (Himself)
  Hath guided me?
  I fear not (the beings)
  Ye associate with God:

899. Continuing the allegory, the moon, though she looks bigger and brighter than the star, turns out on closer knowledge, not only to set like the star, but to change her shape from hour to hour, and even to depend for her light on some other body! How decentive are appearances; That is not God! At that stage you begin to search for something more reliable than appearance to the eve in the darkness of the night. You ask for guidance from God!

900. The next stage in the allegory is the sun. You are in the open light of Day. Now you have the right clue. You see the biggest object in the heavens, But is it the biggest? There are thousands of stars in the universe bigger than the sun. And every day the sun appears and disappears from your sight. Such is not the God who created you and all these wonderful works of His. What folly to worship creatures, when we might turn to the frue God? Let us abjure all these follies and proclaim the one true God.

901. To continue Abraham's allegory: if spiritual enlightenment go so far as to take a man beyond his ancestral worship, people will come to dispute with him. They will frighten him with the dire consequences of his dissent. What does he care? He has found the truth. He is free from superstitious fears, for has he not found the true God, without Whose Will nothing can happen? On the contrary he knows that it is the godless who have just grounds for fear. And he often admonition to them, and arguments that should bring them the cleaness of truth instead of the vagueness and mystery of superstition,—the security of Faith instead of the haunting fear of those who have no clear guidance.

Unless my Lord willeth, (Nothing can happen). My Lord comprehendeth In His knowledge all things. Will ye not (yourselves) Be admonished?

81. "How should I fear

83. What was the reasoning
About Us, which
We gave to Abraham
(To use) against his people: 822

﴿ وَفِلْكُ مُحَثِّنَا مَا تَبْنَعَا إِنْ هِي عَلَى فَهَدْ .

<sup>902.</sup> The spiritual education of Abraham raised him many degrees above his contemporaries, and he was expected to use that knowledge and dignity for preaching the truth among his own people.

We raise whom We will, Degree after degree: For thy Lord is full Of wisdom and knowledge.

- 84. We gave him Isaac
  And Jacob: all (three)
  We guided: ***
  And before him,
  We guided Noah, **
  And among his progeny,
  David, Solomon, Job,
  Joseph, Moses, and Aaron:
  Thus do We reward
  Those who do good:
- 85. And Zakariya and John, on And Jesus and Elias: All in the ranks .Of the Righteous:
- 86, And Isma'īl and Elisha. 808 And Jonas, and Lot:

إِنْ رَبَكَ مَرَكَ عَرَكَ عَلِيهُ وَاللّهُ وَالّهُ وَاللّهُ وَالّ

903. We have now a list of eighteen Apostles in four groups, covering the great Teachers accepted among the three great religions based on Mopes, Jessus, and Muhammad. The first group to be mentioned is that of Abraham, his son Issac, and Issac's son Jacob. Abraham was the first to have a Book. His Book is mentioned in Q_lxxvii. 19, though it is now lost. They were therefore the first to receive Guidance in the sense of a Book.

. 904. In the second group, we have the great founders of families, apart from Ahraham, viz., Noah, of the time of the Flood; David and Solomon, the real establishers of the Jewish monarchy; Job, who lived 100 years, saw four generations of descendants, and was blessed at the end of his life with large pastoral wealth (Job xili 16, 12); Joseph, who as Minister of State did great things in Egypt and was the progenitor of two Tribes; and Moses and Aaron, the leaders of the Exodus from Egypt. They led active lives and are called "doers of good."

903. The third group consists not of men of action, but Preachers of Truth, who led solitary lives. Their epithet is; "the Righteous." They were mystic prophets and form a connected group round Jesus. Zakarrya was the father of John the Baptist; the precursor of Jesus (iii. 37-41); and Jesus referred to John the Baptist as Elias: "this is Elias, which was for to come" (Matt, xi. 14); and Elias is said to have been present and talked to Jesus at the Transfiguration on the Mount (Matt, xii. 18). Elias is the same as Elijah.

906. This is the last group, described as those "faroured above the nations." It consists of four my ho had all great misfortunes to contend with, and were concerned in the clash of nations, but they kept in the path of God, and came through above the clash of nations. Ismail was the eldest son of Abtaham; when he was a baby, he and his mother had nearly died of thirst in the desert round Mecca; but they were saved by the well of Zamzam, and he became the founder of the new Arab nation. Elisha (Al-Yasa') succeeded to the mantle of the Prophet Elijah (same as Elias, see last note); he lived in troublost times for both the Jewisk kingdoms (of Judah and Israel); there were wicked kings, and other nations were pressing in on them; but he performed many miracles, and some check was given to the enemies under his advice. The story of Jonas (Yūnu) is well-known: he was swallowed by a fish or whale, but was saved by God's mercy; through his preaching, his city (Nineveh) was saved (x. 98). Lot was a contemporary and nephew of Abraham: when the city of Sodom was destroyed for its wickedness, he was saved as a just man (vii. 80-84).

And to all We gave Favour above the nations:

- 87. (To them) and to their fathers, And progeny and brethren: We chose them, And We guided them To a straight Way.
- 88. This is the Guidance
  Of God: He giveth
  That guidance to whom
  He pleaseth, of His worshippers.
  If they were to join
  Other gods with Him,
  All that they did
  Would be vain for them.
- 89. These were the men
  To whom We gave
  The Book, and Authority,
  And Prophethood: if these (Their descendants) reject them, 600
  Behold! We shall entrust
  Their charge to a new People
  Who reject them not.
- 90. Those were the (prophets)
  Who received God's guidance:
  Copy the guidance they received;
  Say: "No reward for this
  Do I ask of you:
  This is no less than
  A Message for the nations."

SECTION 11.

907. I take verse 87 to refer back to all the four groups just mentioned,

908. Them, i.e., the Book, and Authority and Prophethood. They were taken away from the other People of the Book and entrusted to the holy Apostle Muhammad and his People.

509, Qadara: to weigh, judge, or estimate the value or capacity of anything; to have power so to do. Cf. Qadar inv. 149 and a. 655. The Jews who denied the inspiration of Mipsemmand had a good answer in their own books about the inspiration of Mipses. To those who do not believe in Moses, the answer is more general: is it a just estimate of Qod to thinke either that He has not the power or the will to guide mankind, seeing that He is Omnipotent and the Source of all good I if you say that guidance comes, not through an inspired book or man, but through our general intelligence, we point to the spiritual ignorance of "you and your ancestors" the sad spiritual darkness of men and nations high in the intellectual scale.

"Nothing doth God send down To man (by way of revelation)": Say: "Who then sent down The Book which Moses brought?—A light and guidance to man: *10 But ye make it into (Separate) sheets for show,*11 While ye conceal much (Of its contents): therein Wers ye taught that Which ye knew not—Neither ye nor your fathers." Say: "God (sent it down)": Then leave them to plunge In vain discourse and trifling.

910, Cf. v. 47 and n. 750, and v. 49. In those passages Guidance (in practical conduct) is put before Light for spiritual insight), as they refer to ordinary or average men. Here Light (or spiritual insight) is put fast as the question is: does God send inspiration?

911. The Message to Moses had unity: it was one Book. The present Old Testament is a collection of odd books ("sheets") of various kinds: see Appendix II. end of 5. v. In this way you can make a show, but there is no unity, and much of the spirit of the original is lost or concealed or overlaid. The same applies to the New Testament: see Appendix III., after Appendix II.

912. Mubārah: blessed, as having received God's blessing; bringer of blessings to others, as having been blessed by God. God's highest blessing is the Guidance and Light which the Book brings to us, and which brings us nearer to Him.

913, Mother of Cities: Mecca, now the Qibla and Centre of Islam. If this verse was (like the greater part of the Chapter) revealed in Mecca before the Hijrat, and before Mecca was made the Qibla of Islam, Mecca was nonetheless the Mother of Cities, being traditionally associated with Abraham and with Adam and Eve (see it. 125, and n. 217 to it. 197).

All round Mecca: would mean, the whole world if we look upon Mecca as the Centre:

914. An earnest study of the Qur-an is true worship; so is Prayer, and so are all deeds of goodness and charity.

A lie against God. Or saith. " I have Received inspiration." When he hath received None, or (again) who saith, " I can reveal the like Of what God hath revealed "? <sup>913</sup> Yield up your reads: or "get your souls to come out of your bodies". The wriked, we may suppose, are not anxious to part with the material existence in their bodies for the "reward" which in irony is stated to be there to welcome them.

<sup>916.</sup> Somb of the various ideas connected with "creation," are noted in a 120 to it. 117. In the creation of man there are various processes. If his body was created out of clay, it e. early matter, there was an earlier process of the creation of such earthy matter. Here the body is left behind, and the soul is being addressed. The soul underwent various processes of fashioning and adapting to its various functions in its various surroundings [xxxii. 79]. But each individual soul, after release from the body, comes back as it was created, with nothing more than its history. "the deeds which it has carned," which are really a part of it. Any exterior things given to help in its development, "the favours which we bestowed on you," it must necessarily leave behind, however it may have been proud of them. These exterior things amy be material things, e.g., wealth, ropoerty, signs of power, influence and pride such as sons, relatives, and friends, etc., or they may be intangible things, like releast, intellets, social gifts, etc.

Away from the truth?

938 Another beautiful nature passage, referring to God's wonderful attistry in Hijs Creation. In how few and how simple words, the whole pageant of Creation is placed before us. Beginning from our humble animal needs and dependence on the vegetable world, we are asked to contemplate the interaction of the living and the dead. Here is mystic teaching, referring not only to physical bir but to the higher life above the physical plane,—not only to individual life but to the collective life of nations. Then we take a preprinto the daily miracle of morning, noon, and night, and pass on to the stars that guide the distant mariner. We rise still higher to the mystery of the countless individuals from the one human soul,—their sojourn and their destiny. So we get back to the heavens: the description of the lusticous fruits which the "gentle rain from 'heaven' produces, leaves us to contemplate the spiritual fruits which faith will provide for us, with the aid of the showers of God's mercy.

919 The seed-grain and the date-stone are selected as types in the vegetable kingdom, showing how our physical life depends on it. The fruits mentioned later (in v. 99) start annother allegory which we shall notice later. Botanists will notice that the seed-grain includes the cereals (such as wheat, barley, rice, millet, etc.) which are monocotyledons, as well as the pulses (such as beans, peas, gram, etc.) and inher seeds which are dicotyledons. These two represent the most important classes of foodgrains, while the date-palm. A monocotyledon, represents for Arabia both food, fruit, confectionery thatch and pillari for houses, shady groves in oases, and a standard measure of wealih and well being "Split and sprout"; both ideas are included in the root falaqa, and a third is expressed by the word "clave" in the next verse, for the action of evolving day-break from the dark. I might almost have used the word "churn," familiar to students of Hindu lore in the Hindu allegory of the "churning of the ocean". For vegetables, "split and sportut" represents a double process: (1) the seed divides, and 12 one part shoots up, seeking the light, and forming leaves and the visible parts of the future tree, and the other part digs down into the dark, forming the roots and seeking just that sustenance from the soil, which is adapted for the particular plant. This is just one small instance of the "judgment and ordering" of God, referred to in the next verse.

920. This does not mean that in physical nature there are no limits between life and non-life, between the organic and the non-organic. In fact physicists are baffied at the barrier between them and frankly confess that they cannot solve the mystery of Life. If there is such a barrier in physical nature, is it not all the more wonderful that God can create Life out of nothing? He has but to say, "Be," and it is. He can bring Life from onn-Life and annihilate Life. But there are two other senses in which we can contemplate the contrast between the living and the dead. (1) We have just been speaking of the botanical world. Take it as a whole, and see the contrast between the winter of death, the spring of revivilication, the summer of growth, and the autumn of decay, leading back to the death of winter. Here is a cycle of living front dead, and dead from living. (2) Take our spritual life. Individual or collective. We rise from the darkness of spritual nothingness to the light of spritual life. And if we do not follow the spritual laws, God will take away that life and we shall be again as dead. We may die many deaths. The keys of life and death are in God's hands. Neither Life nor Death are fortuitous things. Behind them both is the Cause of Causes,—and only He.

<sup>921.</sup> The night, the day, the sun, the moon,—the great astronomical universe of God. How Iar, and yet how near to us! God's universe is boundless, and we can barely comprehend even its relations to us. But this last we must try to do if we want to be numbered with "the people who know". Tage4r: Cf. vi. 91 and n. 909, and iv. 149 and n. 655.

<sup>922.</sup> See the last note. At sea, or in deserts or forests, or "in fairy scenes forlorn,"—whenever we sweep over wide spaces, it is the stars that act as our guides, just as the sun and moon have already been mentioned as our measures of time.

<sup>923.</sup> Produced: asshera—made you grow, increase, develop, reach maturity: another of the processes of creation. This supplements n. 120 to it. 117 and n. 916 to vt. 94. It is one of the wonders of God's Creation, that from one person we have grown to be so many, and each individual has so many faculties and capacities, and yet we are all one. In the next verse we have the allegory of grapes and other futirs: all grapes may be similar to look at, yet each variety has a distinctive flavour and other distinctive qualities, and each individual grape may have its own special qualities. So for man.

<sup>924.</sup> In the sojourn of this life we must respond to God's hand in fashioning us by making full use of all our faculties, and we must get ready for our departure into the Life that will be eternal.

925. Our allegory now brings us to maturity, the fruit, the harvest, the vintage. Through the seed we came up from nothingness to life; we lived our daily life of rest and work and passed the mile-stones of time; we had the spiritual experience of traversing through vast spaces in the spiritual world, guiding our course through the star of Faith; we grew; and now for the harvest or the vintage! How satisfied the grower must be when the golden grain is harvested in heaps or the vintage gathered! So will man if he has produced the fruits of Faith;

926. Each fruit-whether it is grapes, or olives, or pomegranates.—looks alike in its species, and yet each variety may be-different, in flavour, consistency, shape, size, colour, juice or oil contents, proportion of seed to fruit, etc. In each variety individuals may be different. Apply the allegory to man, whose varied spiritual fruit may be equally different and yet equally valuable?

927. And so we finish this wonderful allegory. Search through the world's literature, and see if you can find another such song or hymn,—so fruity in its literary flavour, so profound in its spiritual meaning?

928. There is a refrain in this song, which is subtly varied. In verse 97 it is: "We detail our Signs for people who know." So far we were speaking of the things we see around us every day. Knowledge is the appropriate instrumient for these things. In verse 96 we read: "We detail Our Signs for people who understand." Understanding is a higher faculty than knowledge, and is necessary for seeing the mystery and meaning of this life. At the end of verse 99 we have: "In these things there are Signs for people who believe." Here we are speaking of the real fruits of spiritual Life. For them Faith is necessary, as bringing us nearer to God.

939. Jims. who are they? In xviii. 30 we are told that Ibits was one of the Jinns, and it is suggested that that was why he disobeyed the Command of God. But in that passage and other similar passages, we are told that God commanded the angles to bow down to Adam, and they obeyed except Ibits. That implies that Ibits had been of the company of angels. In many passages juns and men are spoken of together. In Iv. 14-15, man is stated to have been created from clay, while Jinns from a flame of fire. The root meaning of jama, yajima, is "to be covered or hidden," and jamay yayama, in the active voice, "to cover or hide," as in: '16. Some people say that jima therefore mans the hidden qualities or capacities in man; others that it means wild or jungle folk hidden in the fillis or forests. I do not wish to be dogmatic, but I think, from a collation and study of the Quiranic passages, that the meaning is simply "a spirit," or an invisible or hidden force. In folk-lore stories and romances like the Arabian Nights they become personified into fantastic forms, but with them we are not concerned here.

934. The teaching in the Qur-an explains things by various symbols, parables, narratives, and appeals to nature. Each time, a new phase of the question is presented to our minds. This is what a diligent and earnest teacher would do, such as was Muhammad Mujesfa. Those who were in search of knowledge and had thus acquired some knowledge of spiritual things were greatly helped to understand more clearly the things of which, before the varied explanations, they had only one-sided knowledge.

935. God's Plan is to use the human will to co-operate in understanding Mirn and Hir relations to us. This is the answer to an objector who might say: "If He is All-powerful, why does no or evil exist in the world? Can He not destroy it?" He can, but His Plan is different, and in any case it is not for a Teacher to force any one to accept the truths which he is inspired to presch and proclaim.

936 A man's actual personal religion depends upon many things,-his personal psychology. the background of his life, his bidden or repressed feelings, tendencies, or history (which psychoanalysis tries to unravel), his hereditary dispositions or antipathies, and all the subtle influences of his education and his environment. The task before the man of God is: (1) to use any of these which can subserve the higher ends. (2) to purify such as have been misused, (3) to introduce new ideas and modes of looking at things, and (4) to combat what is wrong and cannot be mended; all for the purpose of leading to the truth and gradually letting in spiritual light where there was darkness before if that is not done with discretion and the skill of a spiritual Teacher, there may be not only a reaction of obstinacy, but an unseemly show of dishonour to the true God and His Truth, and doubts would spread among the weaker brethren whose faith is shallow and infirm. What happens to individuals is true collectively of nations or groups of people. They think in their self-obsession that their own ideas are right. God in His infinite compassion bears with them, and asks those who have purer ideas of faith not to vilify the weaknesses of their neighbours, lest the neighbours in their turn vilify the real truth and make matters even worse than before. In so far as there are mistakes, God will forgive and send His grace for helping ignorance and folly. In so far as there is active evil, He will deal with it in His own way. Of course the righteous man must not hide his light under a bushel, or compromise with evil, or refuse to establish right living where he has the power to do so.

937. If the Unbellevers are merely obstinate, nothing will convince them. There is no story more full of miracles than the story of Jesus. Yet in that same story we are told that Jesus said: "A wicked gaduterous generation seaketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given not it, but the sign of the Prophet Jonas": Matt. xvi. 4. There are Signs given by God every day—understood by those who believe. A mere insistence upon some particular or special Sign means mere contumacy and misuaderstandings of the sortifular work.

938. Where there is sheer obstinacy and ridicule of faith, the result will be that such a suner's heart will be hardened and his eyes will be sealed/ho that he cannot even see the things visible to ordinary mortals. The sinner gathers impetus in his descent towards evons.

944. Cf. v. 4. When a clear law has explained what is lawful and unlawful in food, it is wrong to raise fresh scruples and mislead the ignorant.

945. Here is an altegory of the good man with his divine mission and the evil man with his mission of evil. The former, before he got his spritual life, was like one dead. It was God's grace that gave him spiritual life, with a Light by which he could walk and guide his own footsteps as well as the footsteps of those who are willing to follow God's light. The opposite type is that which as the footsteps of those who are willing to follow God's light. The opposite type is that which hast God's light, which hives in the depths of drakness, and which plots and burrows against all that is good. But the plots of evil recoil on itself, although it thinks that they will burt the good. Can these two types be for a moment compared with each other? Perhaps the lead in very centre of oppulation is taken by the men of evil. But the good men should not be discouraged. They should work in infiltenousness and fulfil their mission.

Its wicked men, to plot (And burrow) therein: But they only plot Against their own souls, And they perceive it not.

<sup>946.</sup> Besides the teaching in God's Word, and the teaching in God's world, of nature and history and human contacts, many Signs come to the men of God, which they humbly receive and try to understand; and many Signs also come to the ungodly, in the shape of warnings or otherwise, which the ungodly either do not heed, or deliberately reject. The Signs in the two cases are not the same, and that becomes one of their perverse arguments against Faith. But God's working will be according to His own Will and Plan, and not according to the wishes or whims of the ungodly.

<sup>947.</sup> God's Universal Plan is the Qodha wo Qodr, which is so much misunderstood. That Plan is unalterable, and that is His Will. It means that in the spirtual world, as in the physical world, there are laws of justice, mercy, grace, penally, etc., which work as surely as anything we know. If, then, a man refuses Faith, necomes a rebel, with each step he goes further and further down, and his pace will be accelerated; he will scarcely be able to take spiritual breath, and his recovery,—in spite of God's mercy which he has rejected,—will be as difficult as if he had to climb up to the skies. On the other hand, the godly will find, with each step, the next step ensier. Jesus expressed this truth paradoxically: "He that hath, to him shall be given; but he that hath not, from him shall be taken away even that which he hath": Mark. Iv. 25. John (vi. 65) makes Jesus say: "No man can come unto me, except it were given unto nim of my Father."

We have detailed the Signs For those who Receive admonition.

127. For them will be a Home Of Peace in the presence Of their Lord: He will be Their Friend, because They practised (righteousness).

128. One day will He gather Them all together, (and say): "O ve assembly of linns.!" Much (toll) did ye take Of men." Their friends Amongst men will say : "Our Lord I we made profit 900 From each other : but (alas !) We reached our term-Which Thou didst appoint For us," He will say: "The Fire be your dwelling-place: You will dwell therein for ever. Except as God willeth." 851 For thy Lord is full Of wisdom and knowledge.

C. 81.—God punishes not mere shortcoming:
(vi.130-150)

There are degrees in good and evil
Deeds. God is Merciful, but
His Plan is sure, and none
Can stand in its way. We must Avoid all superstition, and all excess,
And humbly ask for His guidance.

<sup>950.</sup> It is common experience that the forces of evil make an alliance with each other, and seem thus to make a profit by their mutual log-rolling. But this is only in this material world. When the limited term expires, their unboly bargans will be exposed, and there will be nothing but regrets.

<sup>951.</sup> Eternity and infinity are abstract terms. They have no precise meaning in our human experience. The qualification, "except as God willeth," makes it more intelligible, as we can form some idea—however madequate—of a Will and Plan, and we know God by His attribute of Mercy as well as of fustice.

<sup>953. &</sup>quot;Apostles from amongst you." This is addressed to the whole gathering of men and Jinns. Are the Jinns, but disembodied spirits of evil men?

<sup>954.</sup> On good and evil there are infinite degrees, in our deeds and motives: so will there be degrees in our spiritual position. For everything is known to God, better than it is to ourselves.

<sup>955.</sup> God is not dependent on our prayer or service. It is out of His Mercy that He desires our own good. Any race or people to whom He gives chances should understand that its failure does not affect God. He could create others in their place, as He did in times past, and is doing in our own day, if only we had the wit to see it.

956. Both the good news and the warning which God's aposiles came to give, will be fulfilled Nothing can stop God's Universal Plan See n, 947 to v. 125

957. In so far as this is addressed to the Unbelievers it is a challenge. "Do your ulmost; adding will deter me from my duty; we shall see who was in the end." Passing from the perficular occasion, we can undestand it in a more openal sense, which is true for all time. Let the evit ones do their worst. Let those who believe do all they can, according to their opportunities and abilities. The individual must do the straight duty that lies before him. In the end God will judge, and this judgment is always true and just.

938. There is scathing sarcasm here, which some of the Commentators have missed. The Pagans have generally a big Pantheon, though above if they have a vague dea of a Supreme God. But the material benefits too to the goldings, the fancied "patiners" of God; for they have temples, prests, dedications, etc., while the true and supreme God has only lip-worship, or at best a share with numerous "partners". This was so in Araba also. The shares assigned to the "partners" who were many and clamorous for their rights. The share assigned to God possibly went to the post-but more probably went to the prests who had the cult of the "partners", in the Supreme God had no separate priests of His own. It is also had that when heaps were thus laid out, if any portion of God's heap fell into the heaps of the "partners", the prests greefilly and promptly appropriated it, while in the contract case, the "partners," prests were careful to reclaim any portion from what they called "God's heap". The absurdity of the whole thing is indicated. God created every thing: how can be have a shore?

137. Even so, in the eyes
Of most of the Pagans, **
Their "partners" made alluring.
The slaughter of their children,
In order to lead them
To their own destruction,
And cause confusion
In their religion.
If God had willed,
They would not have done so:
But leave alone
Them and their inventions.

138. And they say that Such and such cattle and crops **
Are taboo, and none should Eat of them except those Whom—so they say—We

Cattle forbidden to yoke **
Or burden, and cattle
On which, (at slaughter),
The name of God is not **

Against God's name: soon
Will He requite them

139. They say: "What is

And forbidden to our women;
But if it is still-born,
Then all have shares therein. ***

<sup>939</sup> The false gods and idols—among many nations, including the Arabs—were supposed to require human sacrifices. Ordinarily such sacrafices are revolting to man, but they are made "alluring"—a sacred: nite—by Pagan custom, which falsely arrogates to tivelf the name of religion. Such customs, if allowed, would do nothing but destroy the people who practise them, and make their religion but a confused bundle of revolting superstitions.

<sup>960</sup> A taboo of certain foods is sometimes a device of the priesthood to get special things for itself. It has to be enforced by pretending that the prohibition for others is by the Will of God. It is a file of invention against God. Most superstitions are:

<sup>961.</sup> Cattle dedicated to heathen gods may be reserved from all useful work; in that case they are a dead loss to the community, and they may, besides, do a great deal of damage to fields and crops.

<sup>962.</sup> If meat is killed in the name of heathen gods, it would naturally not be killed by the solemn rite in God's name, by which alone the killing can be justified for food. See n. 698 to v. 5.

v 963. These are further Pagan superstitions about cattle. Some have already been noted in v. 106, which may be consulted with the notes,

881

For their (false) attribution (Of superstitions to God), He will soon punish them: For He is full Of wisdom and knowledge.

<sup>956. &</sup>quot;Waste act, want not," says the English proserb. Here the same wisdom is preached from a higher motive. See what magnificent means God provides in nature for the sustenance of all His creatures, because He loves them all. Enjoy them in moderation and be grateful. But commit no excess, and commit no waste: the two things are the same from different angles of vision. If you do, you take away something from other creatures and God would not like your selfshness.

<sup>967.</sup> Superstition kills true religion. We come back to the Arab Pagan superstitions about cattle for food. The horse is not mentioned, becausehor a flesh was not an article of diet and there was on superstitions about it. Sheep and goats, camels —nd oxen were the usual sources of meat. Sheep and goats were not used as beasts of burden, but camels (of both sexes) were used for carrying burdens, and oxen for the plough, though cows were mainly used for milk and meat. The words "some for burden and some for meat" do not differentiate whole species, except that they give you the first two and the last two as cattegories.

Eat what God bath provided For you, and follow not The footsteps of Satan: For he is to you An avowed enemy.

970. <code>Zujur</code> may mean claw or hoof; it is in the singular number; but as no animal has a single claim, and there is no point in a division of claws, we must look to a hoof for the correct interprelation. In the jewish Law (Levilicus, xi. 3-5), "whatsoever parteth the hoof, and is cloven-footed, and cheweth the cud, among the beasts" was lawful as food, but the camel, the coney (rabbit), and the hare were not lawful, because they do not "divide the hoof". "Undivided hoof" therefore is the correct interpretation. These three animals, unlawful to the jews, are lawful in Islam. Cf. iv. 150.

971. In Leviticus (vii. 23) it is laid down that "ye shall eat no manner of fat, of ox, or of sheep, or of goat." As regards the exceptions, it is to be noticed that priests were enjoined (Leviticus, vii. 6) to eat of the fat in the trespass offering, which was considered holy, oiz., "the rump" (back and bone) "and the fat that covereth the inwards" (entrais), (Leviticus, vii. 3).

C. 82.-God's commands are not irrational (vi. 151-165,) Taboos, but based on the moral law, And conformable to reason. His Way

<sup>972.</sup> As used by the Pagans, the argument is false, for it implies (a) that men have no personal responsibility, (b) that they are the victims of a Determinism against which they are helpless, and (c) that they might therefore go on doing just what they liked It is also inconsistent, for if (b) is true, (c) cannot be true. Nor is it meant to be taken seriously.

<sup>973.</sup> On the other hand, the argument cuts true and deep, as from God to His creatures. God is Omnipotent, and can do all that we can conceive. But He, in His Plan, has given man some responsibility, and some choice in order to train man's will. If man fails, he is helped in various ways by God's mercy and grace. But man cannot go on sinning, and in a state of sin, expect God to be pleased with him (vi. 147).

<sup>974.</sup> The Pagan superstitions were of course baseless, and in many cases harmful and debasing, If God's name was taken as supporting them, no true man of God could be taken in, or join in support simply because God's name was taken in vain.

<sup>975,</sup> Cf. vi. 1. God, who created and who cherishes and cares for all, should have the first claim on our attention. Those who set up false gods fail to understand God's true governance or their own true destiny.

976. Instead of following Pagan superstitions, and being in constant ferror of imaginary taboes and prohibitions, we should study the true moral law, whose sanction its God's Law. The first step is that we should recognise that He is the One and Only Lord and Cherisher. The mention of goodness to parents immediately afterwards suggests: (i) that God's love of us and care for us nany—on an infinitely higher plane—be understood by our ideal of parental love, which is purely unsolish; (3) that our first duty among our fellow creatures is to our father and mother, whose love leads us to the conception of divise love. Arising from that is the conception of our converse duties to our children. God provides sustenance (material and spiritual) not only for us but for them; hence any custom like the Pagan custom of sacrificing children to Moloch stands condemned. Then come the moral prohibitions against lewdness and all unseemly acts, relating to see or otherwise, open or secrets. This is followed by the prohibition of killing or fighting. All these things are conformable to our own interest; and therefore true wisdom from our own point of view.

<sup>977.</sup> For the comprehensive word $aqq I have used the two words "justice and law": other significations implied are: right, truth, what is becoming, etc. It is not only that human life is sacred, but all life is sacred. Be seen in killing animals for food, a dedicatory formula," in the name of God" has to be employed, to make it lawful: see n. 698 to v. 5, and n. 952 to v. 138.

Even if a near relative Is concerned; and fulfil The Covenant of God: <sup>978</sup> Thus doth He command you, That ye may remember.

<sup>979.</sup> Note again the triple refrain with variations, in vi. 151, 152, and 153. In verse 151, we have the moral law, which it is for our own good to follow: "Thus doth He command you, that ye may learn wisdom." In verse 152, we have to deal justly and rightly with others; we are apt to think too much of ourselves and forget others: "Thus doth He command you, that ye may remember." In verse 153 our attention is called to the Straight Way, the Way of God, the only Way that leads to righteousness: "Thus doth He command you, that ye may be righteous."

<sup>960.</sup> The revelation to Moses went into the details of people's lives, and thus served as a practical guide to the Jews and after them to the Christians. Admittedly the Message delivered by Christ dealt with general principles only and in no way with details. The message of Islam as in the Qur-da is the next complete guide in point of time after that of Moses.

<sup>988.</sup> Cf. ii. 30 and n., where I have translated "Khalifa" as "Vicegerent", it being God's Plan to make Adam (as representing mankind) His vicegerent on earth. In C. I I have construed the same word by the word "Agent." Another idea implied in "Khalifa" is that af "successor, heir, or inheritor," i.e., one who has the ultimate ownership after the present possessors, to whom a life-tenancy has been given by the owner, have passed away. In xx. 23 occurs the striking word "heire (wārrithūn) as applied to God: "We give life and death, and We are the Heirs (or Inheritors)." The same idea occurs in iii. 180, where see n. 485. The translation here attempts to express both the ideas which I understand from the original.

INTRODUCTION TO SCRA VII (A'ra/)

This Sura is closely connected, both chronologically and in respect of the argument, with the previous Sura. But it expounds the doctrine of revelation and man's spiritual history by illustrations from Adam onwards, through various Prophets, and the details of Moses's struggles, to the time of the Apostle Muhammad, in whom God's revelation is completed.

Summary.—The note, "learn from the past," is struck from the very beginning. The opposition of Evil to Good is illustrated by the story of Adam and Iblis. Arrogance leads to rebellion; the rebel is jealous and tempts the natural man, who is warned against deceit and all excess (vii. 1-31, and C. 83).

If the warning is not heeded, the future penalties are indicated, while the privileges and the bliss and peace of the righteous are shown in a picture of the Hereafter, as well as in the power and goodness of God in the world that we see around us (vii. 32-58, and C. 84).

The story of Noah and the Flood, and the stories of Hūd, Ṣāliḥ, Lot, and Shu'aib, all point to the lesson that the Prophets were resisted and rejected, but truth triumphed in the end, and evil was humbled, for God's Plan never fails (vii. 59-99, and C. 85).

The story of Moses is told in greater detail, not only in his struggles with Pharaoh, but in his preparation for his mission, and his struggles with his own rebellious people. Even from the time of Moses the coming of the unlettered Apostle was foreshadowed (vii. 100-157, and C. 86).

But the people of Moses frequently lapsed from God's Law as promulgated to them, and transgressed God's Covenant, and they were scattered through the earth in sections (vii. 158-171, and C. 87).

The children of Adam have multiplied, but many of them have rejected truth and go by degrees to destruction in ways that they do not realise. The righteous listen to the Message of God, and serve Him in humility (vii. 172-206, and C. 88),

C. 83.—Revelation should ease the difficulties
(viv. 1-31.) Of heart and mind, for it tells
The story of man's spiritual past,
And teaches the end of good and evil.
Iblis fell from jealousy and arrogance,
And Adam fell because he listened
To his deceit. But God did grant
In His Mercy gifts and guidance
To men, warned them against excess,
And taught them moderation and justice.

989. This is a combination of four Abbreviated Letters. For Abbreviated Letters generally, see Appendix I (at the end of S0ra II). The combination here includes the three letters A. L. M., which occurred at the beginning of S0ra II, and are discussed in n 25 to ii, I.

The additional letter 84d occurs in combination here and in Stra xix, and by itself at the beginning of S. xxxviii, and nowhere else. The factor common to S. vii, S. xix, and S. xxxviii, is that in each case the core of the Stra consists in the stories (qiqaq) of the Prophets. In this Stra we have the stories of Nbah, Hdd, §8lih), Lot, Shu'aih, and Möses, leading up to Muḥammad, and in S. xxxviii, he stories of David Solomon, and Job similarly lead up to Muḥammad, cocypring three out of the five sections. Stra xix consists almost entirely of such stories. Can we understand §8d to stand for qiaqa, of which it is the most characteristic letter? In this Stra vii. we have also the spiritual history of mankind traced—the Beginning, the Middle, and the End, which, as explained in n. 25, might be represented symbolically by A. L. M. If so, this Sūra, dealing with the Beginning, Middle, and End of man's spiritual story, and illustrating it by the stories of the Prophets, might well be represented symbolically by 4the letters Alif, Läm, Mim, Şād. But no one can be dogmatic about these symbols. We must accept them as symbols with a mystic meaning.

990. Heart: in the original, breast. I have used the word most appropriate to the English idiom. The meaning is that Muralfa is consoled for all the difficulties which he encountered in his mission, with the fact that he had clear guidance in the Book for his preaching.

991. This is added in order that men might not be pulled up with most little knowledge as they possessed, for there are great heights to be scaled in the spiritual kingdom.

  Those whose scale (of good)
  Will be heavy, will prosper:
- Those whose scale will be light, Will find their souls In perdition, for that they Wrongfully treated Our Signs.

  On earth, and provided
  You therein with means
  For the fulfilment of your life: 989

992. The spiritual story of man begins with a prelude. Think of the towns and nations ruined by their iniquity. God gave them, many opportunities, and sent them warners and teachers. But they arrogantly went on in their evil ways, till some decadul calamity came like a their in the night and wiped out their traces. In a warm climate the disturbance in the heat of the midday rest is even more than the disturbance at night. It was when the catastrophe came that the people realised their sins, but it was too late.

993. In the final reckoning, the watners and teachers will give evidence of their preaching the truth, and the wicked will themselves have to acknowledge the truth. We picture it like a court scene, when the story is related, but the lidge knows all, even more than the parties can tell.

994. God is never absent from any place or at any time, for Time and Place are relative conceptions for our limited natures, while He.is the Absolute, independent of such relative conceptions.

995. That is, all the material things which are-necessary to sustain, beautify, and refine life, as which as all those powers, faculties, and opportunities which are instrumental in bringing up life to a higher plane and preparing man for his high spiritual destiny.

- 11. Et is We Who created you And gave you shape; ***
  Then We bade the angels Bow down to Adam, and they Bowed down; not so Iblis; He refused to be of those *** Who bow down.
- 12. (God) said: "What prevented Thee from bowing down When I commanded thee?" He said: "I am better Than he: Thou didst create Me from fire, and him from clay."

- 14: He said: "Give me respite Till the day they are Raised up."
- 15. (God) said: "Be thou Among those who have respite." 1000

995. Skape or form must be interpreted not only to refer to the physical form, which changes day by day, but also the various forms or shapes which our ideal and spiritual existence may take from time to time according to our inner experiences: C/, lxxxii. 8. The original Form or idea or Pattern, according to Plato's mystic doctrine as developed in his "Republic," may also be compared with the "names" or nature and quality of things, which God taught Adam: Q. it. 3 and 'n. 84; and vi. 94, n. 916. It was after Adam (as standing for all mankind) had been so taught that the angels were saked to bow down to him, for, by God's grace, his status had actually been raised higher. Note the transition from "you" (plural) in the first clause to "Adam" in the second clause: Adam and mankind are synonymous: the olural is reverted to in vii. 16-18.

997. Iblis not only refused to bow down: he refused to be of those who bowed down. In other words he arrogantly despised the angels who bowed down, as well as man to whom they bowed down; and he was in rebellion against God for not obeying His order. Arrogance, jealousy, and rebellion were his triple crime.

998. Notice the subtle wiles of fblis: his egolism in putting himself above man, and his falsehood in ignoring the fact that God had not merely made man's body from clay, but had given him spiritual form,—in other words, had taught him the nature of things and raised him above the angels,

. 999. "This": the situation as it was then,—a rebellious creature impertinent to His Creator. At every step lbits falls lower: arrogance, jealousy, disobedience, egotism and untruth.

1000. Are there others under respite? Yes, iblis has a large army of wicked securcers, and those may not here it dupes. For though degradation takes effect at once, its appearance may be long delayed.

344

- 16. He said: "Because thou Hast thrown me out ""

  Of the Way, lo! I will Lie in wait for them

  On Thy Straight Way:
- 17. "Then will I assault them
  From before them and behind them,
  From their right and their left:
  Nor wilt Thou find,
  In most of them,
  Gratitude (for Thy mercies)." 1002
- 18. (God) said: "Get out From this, disgraced And expelled. If any Of them follow thee,— Hell will I fill With you all.
- 19. " Adam! dwell thou woll And thy wife in the Garden, And enjoy woll tis good things) As ye wish: but approach not This tree, or ye run Into harm and transgression."
- 20. Then began Satan 1005 to whisper Suggestions to them, bringing Openly before their minds All their shame 1008

® قَالَ فَيَّآ أَغْـوَٰئِنَى لَأَفْعُدَكَ كَمُنْهُ صِرَاطَكَ ٱلْسُـنَفِية

لَمْنَا مَا وُرِدِي عَنْهُمَا مِن سَد

1001. Another instance of Iblis's subtlety and falsehood. He waits till he gets the respite. Then he breaks out into a lie and impertinent defiance. The lie is in suggesting that God had thrown him out of the Way, in other words misled him; whereas his own conduct was responsible for his degradation. The defiance is in his setting snares on the Straight Way to which God directs men. bblis now falls a step lower than the five steps mentioned in n. 999. His suth step is defiance,

1002. The assault of evil is from all sides. It takes advantage of every weak point, and sometimes even our good and generous sympathies are used to decoy us into the snares of evil. Man has every reason to be grateful to God for all His loving care, and yet man in his folly forgets his gratitude and does the very opposite of what he should do.

1003. Now the story turns to man. He was placed in a spiritual Garden of innocence and bliss, but it was God's Plan to give him a limited faculty of chore. All that he was forbidden to do was to approach the Tree of Evil, but he succumbed to Satan's suggestions.

1004. Enjoy: literally, "eat." Cf. the meaning of pa'ama in vi 14, n, 847 and akala in v. 69, n. 776.

1005. The transition from the name "Iblis" to the name "Satan" is similar to that in ii. 30, where it is explained in n. 54.

1006. Our first parents as created by God (and this applies to all of us) were innocent in middle made and the same and th

That was hidden from them (Before): he said: "Your Lord Only forbade you this tree, Lest ye should become angels Or such beings as live for ever."

- 21. And he swore to them Both, that he was Their sincere adviser,
- 22. So by deceit he brought about Their fall: when they Tasted of the tree, Their shame became manifest To them, and they began To sew together the leaves Of the Garden over their bodies, And their Lord called Unto them: "Did I not Forbid you that tree, And tell you that Satan Was an avowed Enemy unto you?"
- 23. They said: "Our Lord |
  We have wronged our own souls:
  If Thou forgive us not
  And bestow not upon us
  Thy Mercy, we shall Certainly be lost."
- 24. (God) said: "Get ye down, With enmity between yourselves. On earth will be your dwelling-place And your means of livelihood,— For a time."
- 25. He said: "Therein shall ye Live, and therein shall ye Die; but from it shall ye Be taken out (at last)." 1009

<sup>1007.</sup> Cf. this whole passage about Adam with the passage in it, 20-39, and with other passages in subsequent Stras. In places the words are precisely the same, and yet the whole argument different. In each case it exactly fits the context. In S. ii, the argument was about the origin of man. Here the argument is a prelude to his history on earth, and so it continues logically in the next section to address the Children of Adam, and goes on afterwards with the story of the various apostles that came to guide mankind. Truth is one, but its apt presentment in human words shows a different facet in different contexts.

1008. There is a double philosophy of clothes here, to correspond with the double signification of verse 20 above, as explained in n. 1006. Spiritually, God created man "bare and alone" (vi. 94): the soull in its naked purity and beauty knew no shane because it knew no guilt: after it was touched by guilt and soiled by evil, its thoughts and deeds became its clothing and adornments, good of bad, honest or meretricious, according to the inner motives which gave them colour. So in the case of the bady: it is pure and beautiful, as long as it is not defiled by misuse: its clothing and ornaments may be good or meretricious, according to the motives in the mind and-character: if good, they are the symbols of purity and beauty: but the best clothing and ornament we could have comes from righteousness, which covers the nakedness of sin, and adorns us with virtues. In secular literature, the philosophy of clothes is the theme of Carlyle's "Sarior Resertes." but it is strong meat to the novice in literature.

1009. That is, by fraud and deceit,—by putting you off your guard and telling lies. Adam a story, here becomes an introduction to the later spiritual history of mankind: vii, 20-22. In the Garden Statan's decent stripped off their raiment of honour and innocence. In this life on a lower plane he seeks to strip, us, of the raiment of rightpousness. And he can take up positions on a vantage ground of worldly power or influence or riches, in which he and his confederates are not seen in their true colours. They may assume a fair-seeming disguise of disinterested friendship or high motives of patriotism or public spirit, or loyalty to ancestors, when beneath it there is nothing but soit and selfshiness.

Commands what is shameful: Do ve say of God What we know not?"

- 29. Sav: "My Lord hath commanded Justice; and that ye set Your whole selves (to Him) 1010 At every time and place Of prayer, and call upon Him, Making your devotion sincere As in His sight: Such as He created you ion In the beginning, so Shall ye return.
  - 30. Some He hath guided: Others have (by their choice) Deserved the loss of their way : 1012 In that they took The Evil Ones, in preference To God, for their friends And protectors, and think That they receive guidance.
  - 31. O Children of Adam ! Wear your beautiful apparel,1013 At every time and place Of prayer : eat and drink : But waste not by excess, For God loveth not the wasters.

1010. For wajh, see ii. 112 and n 114. Our devotion should be sincere, not as in other men's sight, but by presenting our whole selves, heart and soul, to God. Even so, it may not be enough; for the sight of our heart and soul may be faulty. We should call upon God to give us the light, by which our sincerity may commend itself to Him as true sincerity "as in His sight"

1011. Cf. vi. 94. Our sincerity should be real sincerity, as in God's sight; for when we return to Him, we shall be stripped of all pretence, even such self-deception as may satisfy us in this life.

1012. Guidance is for all. But in some it takes effect; in others the doors are closed against it, because they have taken Evil for their friend. If they have lost their way, they have richly deserved it; for they deliberately took their choice, even though, in their self-righteousness, they may think that their sin is their virtue and that their Evil is their Good.

1013. Beautiful apparel: senat: adomments or apparel for beautiful living: construed to mean not only clothes that add grace to the wearer, but toilet and cleanliness, attention to hair, and other small personal details which no self-respecting man or woman ought to neglect when going solemnly even before a great human dignitary, if only out of respect for the dignity of the occasion. How much more important it is to attend to these details when we solemnly apply our minds to the Presence of God, though He is always present everywhere! But the caution against excess applies: men must not go to prayer in silks or ornaments appropriate to women. Similarly sober food, good and wholesome, is not to be divorced from offices of religion; only the caution against excess applies strictly. A dirty, unkempt, slovenly Faqir could not claim sanctity in Islam.

<sup>1014.</sup> Asceticism often means the negation of art and beauty. It has no necessary sanctity attached to it

<sup>1015.</sup> The beautiful and good things of life are really meant for, and should be the privilege of, the with faith in God. If they do not always have them in this life, and if there is sometimes the semblance of others having them who do not deserve them, let us at least consider the matter in another light. Our Faith in God's wisdom is unsnaken and we know that these are but fleeting and mixed types of the things in the spiritual world. Their pute counterparts in the spiritual world will be only for those who proved, in all the trials of this world, that they had faith.

<sup>10.16.</sup> The forbidden things are described in four categories: (i) what is shameful or unbecoming; the sort of things which have also legal and social sanctions, not of a local but of a universal kind; they may be called offences against society; (2) sins against self and trespasses or excesses of every sort; these are against truth and reason; here would come in indiscipline, failure in doing intangible duties not clearly defined by law; selfishiness or self-aggrandisement, which may be condoned by custom and not punished by law, etc.; (3) erecting fetishes or false gods; this is treason against the true God; and (4) corrupting religion by debasing superstitions, etc.

If so, it would refer to the Time-Spirit, for it affects a whole number of people living c -ntemporaneously, and while we deal grammatically with a group, we really have in midd the incividuals composing the group. Anyway, the lesson is what is suggested in the following verses. There is only a limited time for an individual or for a group of people. If they do not, make good during that time of probation, the chance is lost, and it cannot come again. We cannot retard or advance the march of time by a single hour or minute. ("Hour" in the test expresses an indefinite but short period of time)

They will get the portion allotted to them, including the good things of life and the chance of repentance and reformation, during their probablionary period on this earth. During that period they will have a full rin. After that period expires, they will be called to account. They will themselves see that the false things in which they put their trust, were false, and they will confess their sin, but it will be too late.

<sup>1019</sup> The earlier generations committed a double crime: (1) their own sina, (2) the bad example they set for those that followed. We are responsible not only for our own misdeeds, but for those which our example and our teaching to our juniors may induce them to commit. But it does not lie in the mouth of the juniors to the for a double punishment for seniors: the motive is not justice, but pure spite, which is itself a sin. Farther, the later generations have to answer for two things: (1) their own sins, and (2) their failure to learn from the past, from the experiences of those who preceded them. They should have an advantage in this respect, being "in the foremost files of Time," but they did not learn. Taus there was nothing to choose between the earlier and later generations in the matter of guit. But how few people understand this?

In vi. 160, we were told that good was rewarded tenfold, but evil was punished according to its guilt, in perfect justice. This verse is in no way inconsistent with it. Two crimes must have a double penalty. But we must understand "ten times" and "double "figuratively, and not quantitatively.

<sup>1020.</sup> Wrong-doers have really no sense of honour towards each other. "Honour among thieves" is an exceptional, not an ordinary, experience. In real life, guilt and crime are apt to indulge in mean spite and bitter recriminations segainst accomplices.

1021. A man who may have suffered or been disappointed may have a lurking sense of injury at the back of his mind, which may spoil his enjoyment on account of past memory intruding in the midst of felicity. In such cases memory itself is pain. Even sorrow is intensified by memory: as Tennyson says, "A sorrow's crown of sorrows is remembering happier things." But that is in this our imperfect life. In the perfect felicity of the righteous, all such feelings will be blotted out. No "heartaches" then and no memories of them! The clouds of the past will have dissolved in glorious light, and no past happiness will be comparable with the perfect happiness which will have then been attained. Nor will any sance of envy or shortcoming by possible, in that perfect bliss.

1022. Jesus said: "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth": Matt. v. 5. Here we are told: blessed are the righteous, for they shall inherit the kingdom of heaven. The stress here is on actual practical deeds of righteousness: whether they find their rewards on earth or not is immaterial; their attention is directed to an infinitely greater reward, the kingdom of heaven. In the Sermon on the Mount this is promised to the "poor in spirit": Matt. v. 3.

1023. The Companions of the Fire can only answer a single word. "Yes," such is their state of misery. Even so, their voice is drowned in the voice of the Crier, who explains their state: they are in a state of curse, that is, deprivation of the grace and mercy of God. Such deprivation is the highest misery that souls can suffer.

1024. The unrighteous reflect their own crooked minds when the path of God is before them, nastead of going straight, they try to find something in it that suits their own crooked ideas. Frankly they have no faith in the final Goal, the Hereafter.

1035. This is a difficult passage, and Commentators have interpreted it in different ways. Three distinct schools of thought may be discerned in the interpretation. (1) One school thinks that the men on the Heights are angels, or such men of exalted spiritual dignity (e.g., the great apostles), as will be able to know the souls at sight as regards their spiritual worth: the Heights will be their exalted stations, from which they will welcome the righteous with a salutation of peace, even before the righteous have entered heaven; the salutation of peace being itself an assurance of salvation to those whom they salute. (2) Another school of thought thinks that the men on the Heights are such souls as are not decidedly on the side of merit or decidedly on the side of sin, but evenly balanced on a partition between heaven and hell. Their case is yet to be decided, but their salutation to the righteous is a wistful salutation, because they hope for God's Mercy. (3) The third line of interpretation, with which I agree, is close to the first, with this exception, that the partition and the Heights are Sequrative. The higher souls will reloice at the approaching salvation of the righteous

1026. Their ayes: according to interpretation (2) of the last note, "their" would refer to the people when fate has not yet been decided, and the speech would be theirs; accoding to interpretations (1) and (3) in that note, "their" would refer to the Companions of the Carden, who would realise the terrible nature of hell, and express their horror of it. I prefer the latter. Then the mention of the "men on the Heights" and their speech in verse 48 comes in naturally as a different kind of speech from a different kind of men.

1027. This speech is in three parts::(1) the last lines of this verse are addressed to the Companions of the life, reminding them (as a bench of judges might speak to a prisoner) of the fullity of their wealth and riches and arrogance in their earthly life; (2) the second part, in the first half of verse 49, recalls to their minds how false was their contempt of the good but lowly men who are now to be the inheritors of heaven; and (3) the latter part of verse 49, "enter ye the Garden" is addressed to the Blessed, to give them a welcome to their state of felicity.

<sup>1028.</sup> The Companions of the Fire will threat for water and not get it, and for sustenative which will not be theirs, while the Companions of the Garden will have the refreshing rain of Gud's Mercy and the crystal waters of the springs and rivers of God's pleasure, and they will enjoy the biss of God's Countenance, which will be their supreme nourishment and the fruit of their life of probation and seeking. These things will not be transferable Cf also xxxvii.41-47,62-67.

<sup>1029, &</sup>quot;Forgetfulness" may be involuntary, from a defect of memory, or figuratively, a deliberate turning away from, or ignoring of, something we do not want, as when we say in an argument, "you conveniently forget that so-and-so is so-and-so." Here the latter kind is meant. If men deliberately ignored the Hereafter in spite of warnings, can they expect to be received by God, Whom they themselves rejected?

<sup>1030.</sup> If those without Faith want to wait and see what happens in the Hereafter, they will indeed learn the truth, but it will be too late for them to profit by it then. All the false ideals and false gods which they put their trust upon will leave them in the lurch. If they thought that the goodness or greatness of others would help them, they will be underevived on the day, when their personal responsibility will be enforced. There will be no salvation except on their own record. How they will then wish that they had another chance! But their chance will be gone.

Be sent back? Then should we Behave differently from our Behaviour in the past." In fact they will have lost Their souls, and the things They invented will leave Them in the lurch.

SECTION 7.

54. Your Guardian-Lord Is God. Who created The heavens and the earth 1631 In six Days, and is firmly Established on the Throne 1031 (Of authority): He draweth The night as a veil O'er the day, each seeking The other in rapid succession: He created the sun. The moon, and the stars, (All) governed by laws Under His Command. Is it not His to create And to govern? Blessed Be God, the Cherisher And Sustainer of the Worlds!

55. Call on your Lord
With humility and in private: 1033

نُمَةُ فَغَصَلَغَبُرُ الَّذِي كَنَّ الشَّمَلُ قَدُّ خَيْرُوا أَفْسُهُمْ وَصَلَعَنْهُمَ مَثَاكَانُوا فَهْ نَرُونَ

@ أدْعُوا رَبْكُ مُ نَفَرُّكَ ا وَخُفَيَهُ *

1031. A sublime verse, comparable to the Throne Verse, ii. 255. The Creation in six Days is of centre metaphorical. In six, 4, the "Days of God" refer not so much to time as to the growth in us of a spiritual sense, a sense of sin and a sense of God's Mercy. In xxii. 47, we are told that a Day in the sight of God is silks a thousand years of our reckoning, and in lix. 4, the comparison is with 50,000 of our years. In the history of our material earth, we may reckon six great epochs of evolution. The significance of the figure six will be discussed in connection with xii.9-12, where the matter is referred to in more detail.

1032. Throne (arsh) is of course metaphorical, a symbol of authority, power, and vigitance, as Karsi (zest, throne), was in it. 1255. Kurst perhaps refers to majesty, while caris refers to power; and the slightly different shades of meaning throw light on the two passages. Here, we are told of the greation of the heavens and the earth in six days, Bul lest we should be obseated with the Jewish idea that God rested on the seventh day, we aire told that the Creation was but a prelude to God's work: for His authority is exercised constantly by the laws which He establishes and enforces in all parts of His Creation. The beautiful imagery of night and day seeking out each other in rapid succession is still further enforced in the Arabic by the double accusative of the verb yagsh; showing the metiral interactions of the day and the night, each covering the other in turn. The heavenly bodies show an order which is evidence of His continut care and government. Not only that, but it is only He Who creates, maintains, and governs, and no one eige.

1633. In prayer, we must avoid any arrogance or show or loudness, or vanity of requests or words. If excess is condemned in all things, it is specially worthy of condemnation when we go humbly before our Lord,—we poor creatures before the Chmippotent Who knoweth all.

For God loveth not Those who trespass beyond bounds.

- 56. Do no mischief on the earth. After it hath been 1914 Set in order, but call On Him with fear 1031 And longing (in your hearts): For the Mercy of God is (always) near To those who do good.
- 57. It is He Who sendeth The Winds like heralds Of glad tidings, going before 1034 His Mercy: when they have Carried the heavy-laden Clouds. We drive them To a land that is dead. Make rain to descend thereon. And produce every kind Of harvest therewith: thus Shall We raise up the dead: Perchance ve may remember.
- 58. From the land that is clean And good, by the Will Of its Cherisher, springs up Produce, (rich) after its kind: 1037

(٧) سورة الاعراف

رِّجْتُ اللّهُ وَكُ تِنَ الْمُنْتِ اللّهِ عَنِي الْمُنْتِ مِنْ الْمُنْتِ مِنْ الْمُنْتِ مِنْ الْمُنْتِ مِن

@ وَٱلْسَلَدُ ٱلطَّنْ يَغْنُحُ نَسَالُهُ

1034. The man who prays with humility and earnestness finds the ground prepared by God for his spiritual advancement. It is all set in order, and cleared of weeds. He does not, like the wicked, upset that order, to introduce evil or mischief into it,

1035, Fear and longing: the fear of God is really a fear lest we should diverge from His Will, or do anything which would not be pleasing to Him; unlike ordinary fear, it therefore brings us nearer to God, and in fact nounshes our longing and desire for Him.

1036. The Parable is complete in its triple significance. (1) In the physical world the winds go like heralds of glad tidings; they are the advance guard, behind which is coming a great army of winds driving heavily laden clouds before it; the wise Providence of God is their General, who directs them towards a parched land, on which the clouds deliver their gladdening showers of mercy, which convert the dead land into a living, fertile, and beautiful land bearing a rich harvest. (2) In the spiritual world, the winds are the great motive forces in the mind of man, or in the world around him, that bring the clouds or instruments of God's Mercy, which descend and fertilise souls hitherto spiritually dead. (3) If we can see or experience such things in our life here below, can we doubt the resurrection of our souls after we die here?

1037. The triple parable explained in the last note is here continued. (1) In the physical world, the fertilising showers of rain yield a rich harvest on good soil, but bad soil yields little or nothing, (2) In the spiritual world, also, God's Mercies evoke no response in some souls which have chosen evil. (3) In the final reckoning, though all will be raised, not all will achieve the juffiment of their Hves.

But from the land that is Bad, springs up nothing But that which is niggardly: Thus do we explain the Signs By various (symbols) to those Who are grateful.

C. 85 .- Noah's warning was rejected by his (vii. 59-99.) Generation, and they were destroyed In the Flood. Hild was defied By his own people 'Ad, but they were Swept away by a terrible blast, Their successors, the Thamud, were puffed up With pride and injustice, but behold I An earthquake buried them for their sins After Salih had warned them from God. With a rain of brimstone and fire Were overwhelmed the Cities of the Plain For their unexampled lusts, against which Lot did warn them. The people of Midian Were given to mischief and fraud : Shu'aib Did warn them, but they heeded not. And perished in an earthquake. God's punishment is sure for wickedness and sin.

  He said: "Omy people!
  Worship God! ye have
  No other god but Him,
  I fear for you the Punishment

1038. These take are grateful are those who joyfully receive God's Message, and respond to it by deeds of holiness and righteousness.

1039. The story of Noah in greater detail will be found in xi. 25-49. Here the scheme is to tall briefly the stones of some of the Prophets between Noah and Moses, and lead up this to a fession for the contemporaries of the Apostle Muhammad himself. When Noah attacked the wickedness of his generation, he was laughed at for a madman, for he mentioned the Great Day to come in the Hereafter. God's retribution came soon afterwards—the great Flood, in which his unbelieving people were drowned, but he and those who believed in him and came into the Ark were saved.

61. He said: "O my people!

No wandering is there
In my (mind): on the contrary
I am an apostle from
The Lord and Cherisher
Of the Worlds!

62. "I but fulfil towards you
The duties of my Lord's mission:

Something that ye know not.

63. "Do ye wonder that
There hath come to you
A message from your Lord,

People, to warn you,—
So that ye may fear God
And haply receive His Mercy?"

64 But they rejected him, And We delivered him, And those with him, In the Ark: But We overwhelmed In the Flood those Who rejected Our Signs. They were indeed A blind people!

1000, The 'Ad people, with their prophet HIIId, are mentioned in many places. See especially xivi. 123-140, and xivi. 121-6. Their story belongs to Arabian tradition. Their epon, mous ancestor 'Ad was fourth in generation from Nosit, having been a son of 'Aus, the son of Aram, the son of Sam, the son of Nosit, They occupied a large tract of country in Southern Arabia, extending from 'Ummain at the mouth of the Persian Gulf to it adjustment and Yemen at the southern end of the Red Sen. The people were tall in statute and were great builders, Probably the long, winding tracts of sands (slogtl) in their dominions (xiv). 21) were irregated with canals. They Jorstook the true God, and oppressed their people. A three years famine visited them, but yet they took, no warming. At length a terrible blast of wind destroyed them and their land, but a remnanly, known as the second 'Ad or the Thamild (see below) were saved, and afterwards suffered a similar fate for their sins.

The tomb of the Prophet, Hud (gabr Nabi Hiid) is still traditionally shown in Hadhramaut, latitude 16 N. and longitude 49 E, about 90 miles north of Mukalla. There are ruins and inscriptions in the neighbourhood. There is an annual pijicrimage to it in the month of Rajab. See "Hadhramaut, Some of its Mysteries Unveiled," by D. van der Meulen and H. von Wissmann, Levden. 1932.

SECTION 10.

73. We the Thamud people 1012 (We sent) Salih, one

1011. The past tense may be understood in three ways. (1) A terrible famine had already afflicted the 'Ad as a warning before they were overwhelmed in the final blast of hot wind (see the last note). (2) The terrible insolence and sin into which they had fallen was itself a punishment. (3) The prophicio past is used, as much as to say: "Behold I see a dreadful calamity: it is already on you!"

1042. Why dispute over names and imaginary gods, the inventions of your minds? Come to relities. If you ask for the punishment and are waiting in insolent defiance, what can, I do but also wait?—in fear and trembling for you, for? I know that God's punishment is sure!

1043. The Thamud people were the successors to the culture and civilisation of the 'Ad people. for whom see n. 1040 and vis. 65 above. They were cousins to the 'Ad, apparently a younger branch of the same race. Their story also belongs to Arabian tradition, according to which their eponymous ancestor Thamud was a son of 'Abir (a brother of Aram), the son of Sam, the son of Noah. Their seat was in the north-west corner of Arabia (Arabia Petræa), between Medina and Syrla. It included both rocky country (kirr, xv. 80), and the spacious fertile valley (Wadi and plains country of Qura, which begins just north of the City of Medina and is traversed by the Hijaz Railway. When the holy Apostle in the 9th year of the Hijra led his expedition to Tabük (about 400 miles north of Medina) against the Roman forces, on a reported Roman invasion from Syna, he and his men came across the archaeological remains of the Thamud. The recently excavated rock city of Petra, near Ma'an, may go back to the Thamud, though its architecture has many features connecting it with Egyptian and Græco-Roman culture overlaying what is called by European writers Nabatican culture Who were the Nabatæans? They were an old Arab tribe which played a considerable part in history after they came into conflict with Antigonus I in 312 B.C. Their capital was Petra, but they extended their territory right up to the Euphrates. In 85 B.C. they were lords of Damascus under their king Baritha (Aretas of Roman history). For some time they were allies of the Roman Empire and held the Red Sea littoral. The Emperor Trajan reduced them and annexed their territory in A D 105. The Nabatæans succeeded the Thamud of Arabian tradition. The Thamud are mentioned by name in an inscription of the Assyrian King Sargon, dated 715 B.C., as a people of Eastern and Central Arabia (Encyclopædia of Islam). See also Appendix IX to S. xxvi.

With the advance of material civilisation, the Thamud people became godless and arrogant, and were destroyed by an earthquake. Their prophet and warner was Sähh, and the crisis in their history is connected with the story of a wonderful she-camel: see next note.

Of their own brethren:
He said: "O my people!
Worship God; ye have
No other god but Him.
Now hath come unto you
A clear (Sign) from your Lord!
This she-camel of God
Is a Sign unto you:
So leave her to graze
In God's earth, and let her
Come to no harm,
Or ye shall be seized
With a grievous punishment.

74. "And remember how He Made you inheritors
After the 'Ad people
And gave you habitations
In the land: ye build
For yourselves palaces and castles
In (open) plains, and carve out
Homes in the mountains;
So bring to remembrance
The benefits (ye have received)
From God, and refrain
From evil and mischief
On the earth."

75. The leaders of the arrogant
Party among his people said

قَالَ يَشَّوْمِ أَعْهُ دُوا اللهُ مَا لَكُمْ ثَنُ إِلَّهِ عَنْرُهُ قَدْ جَآءَتُكُمْ بَيْنَةٌ ثَن زَين كُرُّ عَدْدِه مِنا مَذَا لَقَوْلَكُمْ اللَّهُ فَذَرُوهِ مَا تَأْكُلُ قِ أَرْضِ اللَّهُ وَلَا تَسْفُوهِ الْمِسْوَعِ تَبَاغُذَنَكُ خَدْ مَناكِ آلِيثُهُ

@ قال آلكادُ الذين المنتخمَدُوا

<sup>1044.</sup> The story of this wonderful she-camel, that was a Sign to the Thambd, is variously told in tradition. We need not follow the various versions in the traditional story. What we are told in the Qurān is: that (I) she was a Sign or Symbol, which the prophet Bálli used for a warning to the haughty oppressors of the poor; (2) there was scarcity of water, and the arrogant or privileged classes tried to preven the access of the poor or their cattle to the springs, while Bálli intervened on their behall (xxvi 155, liv. 88); (3) like water, pasture was considered a free gift of nature, in this particular she-camel was made a test case (Iv. 27) to see if the arrogant ones would come to reason; (3) the arrogant ones, instead of yielding to the reasonable rights of the people, ham-strong the poor she-camel and slew her, probably secrety (xxi. 14, liv. 29); the cup of their inquities was full, and the Thambd people were destroyed by a dreadful earthquake, which threw them prone on the ground and buried them with their houses and their fine buildings.

To those who were reckoned Powerless—those among them 1003 Who believed: "Know ye Indeed that Salih is An apostle from his Lord?" They said: "We do indeed Believe in the revelation 1008 Which hath been sent Through him."

- 76. The arrogant party said:
  " For our part, we reject
  What ye believe in."
- 77. Then they ham-strung
  The she-camel, and insolently
  Defied the order of their Lord,
  Saying: "O Salih 1 bring about
  Thy threats, if thou art
  An apostle (of God)!"
- 78. So the earthquake took them 1049 Unawares, and they lay Prostrate in their homes In the morning!

مِن فَرْمُهِ وَ لَانِ آَ أَسْعُنْ مِنْ أَلَّ الْمُنْ الْمَنْ الْمَنْ الْمَنْ الْمَنْ الْمَنْ الْمَنْ الْمَنْ ال مِنْ مُنْ أَنْسَلُونَ أَنْ صَلِيمًا مُنْ اللَّهِ الْمُنْ الْمِنْ الْمَنْ الْمَنْ الْمَنْ اللَّهِ اللَّهُ الْمُنْ اللَّهُ الْمُنْ اللَّهُ اللَّهُ اللَّهُ اللَّهُ الْمُنْ اللَّهُ اللَّهُ اللَّهُ اللَّهُ الْمُنْ الْ

وَأَخَذَنْهُ وَالْخِعَةُ وَأَصْبَعُوا فِي عَالِيمِةً
 خَيْشِينَ

1045. As usually happens in such cases, the Believers were the lowly and the humble, and the oppressors were the arrogant, who in selfship keeping back nature's gifts (which are God's gifts) from the people, were deaf to the dictates of justice and kindness. Balth took the side of the unprivileged, and was therefore humself attacked.

1046. Notice the relation between the question and the answer. The godless chiefs wanted to discredit Nålib, and put a personal question, as much as to say," is he not a liar?" The Believers took back the issue to the higher plane, as much as to say, "We know he is a man of God, but look at the justice for which he is making a stand: to resist it is to resist God." The answer of the godless was to reject God in words, and in action to commit a further act of cruelty and injustice in ham-stringing and killing the she-camel, at the same time hurling defiance at Nålib and his God.

1047. The retribution was not long delayed. A terrible earthquake came and buried the people and destroyed their boasted civilisation. The calamity must have been fairly extensive in area and intense in the terror it inspired, for it is described (1.v. 31) as a "single niighty blast" (sor)das wähidatas), the sort of terror-inspiring noise which accompanies all big earthquakes.

79. So Salih left them, 1008
Saying: "O my people!
I did indeed convey to you
The message for which
I was sent by my Lord:
I gave you good counsel,
But ye love not good counseilors!"

82. And his people gave No answer but this: They said, "Drive them out Of your city: these are 1048. Nath, was saved by God's opency as a just and righteous man. His speech here may be either a parting warning, or it may be a solitoque lamenting the destruction of his people for their sin and folly.

100). Lit is the Lot of the English Bible. His story is biblical, but freed from some shameful features which are a bibl on the biblical narrative, (c.g., see Gen, xir. 30-36). He was a nephew of Abraham, and was sent as an injostle and warner to the people of Sodom and Gongorrah, cities utterly destroyed for their unspeakable ans. They cannot be exactly located, but it may be supposed that they were somewhere in the plann east of the Dead Sea. The story of their destruction is told in the 19th chapter of Genesis. Two angels in the shape of handsome young men came to Lot in the exacing and became his guesties by might. The inhabitants of Sodom in their lust for unnatural crime invaded Lot's house but were repulsed. In the morning, the angels warned Lot to eccape with his family. "Then the Lord rained upon Sodom and upon Gomorrah brimstone and are from the Lord out of heaven; and He overthrew those cities, and all the plain, and all the inhabitants of the critics, and that which grew upon the ground. But his wife looked back from behind him, and she became a pullar of sail." (Gen xix 24-26)

Note that Lot's people are the people to whom he is sent on a mission. He was not one of the consumption of the people as his brethen (I, 13), as a man of God always does.

1030. An instance of the withering sarcasm that hardened sinners use against the righteous. They would with words, and follow up the insult with deeds of injustice, thinking that they would bring the righteous into disgrace. But God looks after His own, and in the end, the wicked themselves are overthrown when the cup of their injury is full.

1031, In the biblical narrative she looks back, a physical act (see n. 1049); here she is a type of those who lag behind, i.e. whose mental and moral attitude, in spite of their association with the righteous, is to hark back to the glitter of wickedness and sin. The righteous should have one sole objective, the Way of God. They should not look behind, nor yet to the right or the left.

1052 The shower is expressly stated in Q. xi. 82 to have been of stones. In xv. 73-74, we are 106 that there was a terrible blast or noise (paibed) in addition to the shower of stones. Taking these passages into consideration along with Gen. xix. 24, (see n. 1049 above). I think it is legitimate to translate: "*x shower of brimstone."

1033. "Madyan" may be identified with "Alidian." Midian and the Midianlies are frequently mentioned in the Old Testament, though the particular incident here mentioned thelongs to Arab rather than to Jewish tradition. The Midianites were of Arab race, though, as neighbours of the Canaxanites, they probably intermixed with them. They were a wandering tribe; it was Midianite merchanst to whom Josseph was sold into slavery, and who took him to Expts. Their principal territory in the time of Moses was in the north-east of the Sinai Pennsula, and east of the Amalekites. Under Moses the Israelites waged a war of extermination against them: they slew the kings of Midian, slaughtered all the males, burnt their cities and castles, and captured their cattle (Num. Xxxi. 7-11). This sounds like total extermination. Yet a few generations afterwards, they were so powerful that the Israelites for their sins' were delivered into the captivity of the Midianites for seven years; both the Midianites and their camels were without number: and the Israelites hid from them in "dess...cavex, and strongholds" (Judges vii. 1-6). Gideon destroyed them again, (Judges vii. 1-15), say about two centures after Moses. "As the-decisive battle was near the hill of Morch, not far south of Mount Tabor, we may localise the Midianites on this occasion in the northern parts of the Jordan valley, at least 200 miles north of the Sanai Penhinsula.

This and the previous destruction under Moses were local, and mention no team of Midian. In later times there was a town of Madyan on the east side of the Gulf of 'Aqaba. It is mentioned in Josephux, Eusebius, and Prolemy: (Encytolpedia of Islam). Then it disappears from geography. In Muslim times it was a revived town with quite a different kind of population, but it never flourished. The Midianites disappeared from history.

1054. Shu'aib belongs to Arab rather than to Jewish tradition, to which he is unknown. His identification with Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses, has no warrant, and I reject it. There is no similarity either in names or incidents and there are chronological difficulties (see n. 1064 below). If, as the Commentators tell us, Shu aid was in the fourth generation from Abraham, being a great-grandson of Madyan (a son of Abraham), he would be only about a century from the time of Abraham, whereas the Hebrew Bible would give us a period of four to six centuries between Abraham and Moses. The mere fact that Jethro was a Midianite and that another name, Hobah, is mentioned for a lather-in-law of Moses in Num z. 29, is slender ground for identification. As the Midianites were mainly a nomad tribe, we need not be surprised that their destruction in one or two settlements did not affect their life in wandering sections of the tribe in other geographical regions. Shu'aib's mission was apparently in one of the settled towns of the Midianites, which was completely destroyed by an earthquake (vii 91). If this happened in the century after Abraham, their is no difficulty in supposing that they were again a numerous tribe three or five centuries later, in the time of Moses (see last note). As they were a mixed wandering tribe, both their resilience and their eventual absorption can be easily understood. But the destruction of the settlement or settlements (if the Wood or Aika was a separate settlement, see n. 2000 to xv. 78) to which Shu'aib was sent to preach was complete, and no traces of it now remain,

The name of the highest mountain of Yemen. Nabl Shu'aib (11,000 ft.) has probably no connection with the greographical territory of the nomad Middanites, unless we suppose that their wanderings entended so far south from the territories mentioned in the last note, 1055. The Midianites were in the path of a commercial highway of Asia, riz., that between two such opulent and highly organised nations as Egypt and the Mesopotamian group comprising Asyria and Babylonia. Their besetting sins are thus characterised here: (1) giving short measure or weight, whereas the strictest commercial probity is necessary for success, (2) a more general form of such fraud, deptiving people of rightful dues. (3) producing mischief and disorder, where peace and order had been established (again in a literal as well as a metaphorical sense); (6) not content with upsetting settled life, taking to highway robbery, literally as well as (5) metaphorically in two ways, riz., cutting off, people from access to the worship of God, and abusing religion and plety for crooked purposes, i.e., exploiting religion, itself for their crooked ends, as when a man builds houses of prayer out of unlawful gains or estentiationally gives charity dut of money which he has obtained by force or fraud, etc. After setting out this catalogue of besetting sins Shu'alb makes two appeals to the past; (1) You began as an insignificant tribe, and by God's favour you increased and multiplied in numbers and resources; do you not then owe a duty to God to fulfil His Law? (2) What was the result in the case of those who fell into sin? Will you not take warning by their example?

So Shu'aib began his argument with faith in God as the source of all virtue, and ended it with detruction as the result of all sin. In the next verse he pleads with them to end their controversies and come to God.

1056. Madyan is torn by internal conflict. Shu'aib comes as a peace-maker, not in virtue of his own wisdom, but by an appeal to the truth, righteounness and justice of God. As we see later, the real motives of his opponents were selfshness, arrogance, volence, lawiesaness, and injustice. But he appeals to their better nature, and is prepared to argue on the basis that the parry which wants to suppress those who believe in God's Message and in righteousness, has some sincere mental difficulty in accepting Shu'aib's mission. "If," he says to them, "that is the case, do you think it justifies your intolerance, your violence, or your persecution? On the contrast, events will prove by thenselves who is right and who is wrong." To the small band who believe in his mission and follow his teaching, he would preach patience and perseverance, this argument to them would be: "You have faith; surely your faith is strong enough to sustain you in the hope that God's truth will triumph in the end; there is no cause for despite."

How exactly these past experiences fit the times of our holy guide Muhammad! And it is for that analogy and that lesson that the stories of Noah, Had, Salily, LR, and Shi'aib are related to us,—all different, and yet all pointing to the great lessons in Muhammad's life.

1037. See the argument in the last note. God's decision may come partly in this very life, either for the same generation or for succeeding generations, by the logic of external events. But in any case it is bound to come spiritually on a higher plane eventually, when the rightness will be comforted and the sinners will be convinced of sia from their own inner conviction.

10.58 The gentle, all-persuasive arguments of Shu'aib feil on hard hearts. Their only reply was: "Their nim out:—bim and his people." When courtesy and a plea for toleration are pitted against higority, what room is there for logic? But bigotry and unrighteousness have their own crooked ways of pretending to be tolerant. "O yes!" they said, "we are very tolerant and long-suffering! But we are for our country and religion. Come back to the ways of our fathers, and we shall graciously forgive you!" "Ways of their fathers!"—they meant injustice and oppression, high-handedness to the poor and the weak. Iraud under cover of religion, and so on! Perhaps the righteous were the poor and the weak. Were they likely to love such ways? Perhaps there was implied a bibe as well as a threat. "If you come back and wink at our iniquities, you shall have scraps of prosperity thrown at you. If not, out you go in disgrace!"

1639. The answer of the righteous is threefold. (1) "Coming back is all very well. But do you mean that we should practise the vices we detest?" (2) "You want as to lie against our conscience and our God, after we have seen the evil of your ways." (3) "Neither bribes nor threats, nor specious appeals to patriotism or ancestral religion can move us: the matter rests with God, Whose will and pleasure we obey, and on Whom alone we rely. His knowledge will search out all your specious pretences."

Note). This, of course, does not mean that any one can ever return to evil ways with God's consent. Such has already emphatically repudiated the idea of returning "to your ways after God hath rescued us therefrom." But even if their ways had been good, the human will, he goes on to say, has no data to rely upon, and he and his followers would only be guided by God's Will and Plan.

1061. Having answered the insincere quibblers among the godless, the righteous turn to God in entert prayer. The endless controversies in this world about abstract or speculative things never end even where both sides are succes in their beliefs. The decision must be taken to God, Who sits on the throne of Truth, and Whose decisions will, therefore, be free from the errors and imperfections of all human judgment. The sincere have nothing to fear in the appeal to Him, as their motives are pure.

In truth, for thou Art the best to decide."

1062. The answer of the Unbelievers is characteristic. As all their bribes and subtleties have falled, they resort to threats, which are worse than the argument of the stick, "All right," they say, "there is nothing but ruin before you!" That means that the Believers will be persecuted, held up to obloquy, ostracised, and prevented from access to all means of honourable livelihood; their families and dependants will be insulted, reviled, and tortured, if they could but be got into the enemy's power; their homes destroyed, and their names held up to ridicule and contempt even when they are gone. But, as verse 92 says, their wicked designs recoiled on themselves: it was the wicked who were ruined and biotted out.

1064. Can we get any idea of the chronological place of the destruction of the Midianites? In n. 1033 (vii. 83) we have discussed the geographical aspects. The following considerations will help us in getting some idea of their period. (1) The stories of Noah, Held, Sillb, Ltq. and ShiYabi seem to be in chronological order. Therefore Shu'abi came after Abraham, whose nephew Ltq was (2) If Shu'abi was in the fourth generation from Abraham, (see n. 1990 to xi. 89), it would be impossible for him to have been a contemporary of Moses, who came many centuries later. This difficulty is recognised by In Kathir and other classical commentators. (3) The identification of Shu'abi with Jethro the father-in-law of Moses is without warrant; see n. 1034 (vii. 83). (8) Shu'abi must have been before Moses: see vii. 103, (3) The Midianites who were destroyed by Moses and by Gideon after him (n. 1033) were local remmants, as we may speak of the laws at the present day; but their existence as a nation in their original home-lands seems to have ended before Moses: "they became as if they had never been in the homes where they had fourshed" (vii. 92), (6) Josephus, Eusebius, and Prolemy mention a town of Madyan, but it was not of any importance (n. 1033). (7) After the first centuries of the Christian era Madyan as a town appears as an unimportant place resting on its past.

1065. Man was originally created pure. The need of a prophet arises when there is some corruption and iniquity, which he is seat to combat. His coming means much trial and suffaring, especially to those who join him: in his protest against wrong. Even so peaceful a prophet as Jesus said: "I came not to send peace but a sword" (Matt. x. 34). But it is all in God's Plan, for we must learn humlity if we would be worthy of Him.

1066. God gives enough rope to the sinful. They grow and multiply, and become scornful. Neither sußering nor affluence teaches them the lessons which they are meant to learn, otc. patterne and humility, gratitude and kindness to others. They take adversity and prosperity alike as a matter of chance. "O yes!" they say, " such things have happened in all ages! Our fathers had such experience before us, and our sons will have them after us. Thus goes on the world for all time!" But does it? What about the Plan of the Architect? They are found napping when Nemesis overtakes them in the midst of their impious tomfoolety!

C. 86.-While the story of the prophets who preached .

(vil. 100-157.) In vain to their people pre-figures The struggles in the early careers Of all apostles, the story of Moses,-His struggles, with an alien and arrogant People, his final deliverance Of his people from foreign domination. And his leading them within sight Of the Promised Land, in spite Of the forces that resisted, -- pre-figures The early struggles and eventual triumph

1067, This and the two following verses should be read together. They furnish a commentary on the story of the five prophets that has already been related. God's wrath may come by night or by day, whether people are arrogantly defying God's laws or are sunk in lethargy or vain dreams of unteality. Who can escape God's Plan, and who can feel themselves outside it except those who are seeking their own ruin?

Of Muhammad the Holy Apostle of God.

1068. This closes that chapter of the narrative which deals with apostles who were rejected by their own people, but who stood firm on God's message and were able to rescue a remnant who believed. In each case there were special circumstances and special besetting sins, which have been explained in the notes. The nations which as a body could not be won over to God's Law periahed. So far we have been dealing with the corruptions and iniquities within each nation. In the story of Moses we have first a struggle against the bondage of Egypt, one of the foremost powers then in the world, the rescue of the Israelites and their wanderings, and their proving themselves unworthy and being left to wander in a new sense when they rejected the new Prophet (Muhammad) who came to renew God's Message,

1069. The stories which have been related should give a warning to present and future generations which have inherited the land, the power, or the experience of the past. They should know that if they fall into the same sins they will meet with the same fate: when through their contumney their hearts are hardened, they do not listen to the advice that falls on their ears.

1070. Those who have heard the Message and rejected it find it more difficult afterwards to retrace their steps. Evil has blocked the channels of God's grace to them. It begins with their breaking their Covenant with God; with each step afterwards they fall deeper and deeper into the mire.

1071. The story of Moses is told in many places in the Holy Qu-fan, with a special lesson in each context. In it. 49-71, the story is an appeal to the Jews from their own scripture and traditions, to show their true place in the religious history of mankind, and how they forfeited it. Here we have an instructive parallelism in that story to the story of Muhammad's mission,—how both these men of God had to fight against (1) a foreign foe, arrogant, unjust, faithless, and superstitious, and (2) against the same class of internal foe among their own people. Both of them won through in the case of Moses, the foreign foe was Pharaoh and his Egyptians, who boasted of their earlier and superior civilisation; in the case of the Prophet Muhammad the foreign foes were the Jews themselves and the Christians of his day. Moses led his people nearly to the Land of promise in spite of rebellions among his own people; Muhammad succeeded completely in overcoming the resistance of his own people by his own virtues and firmness of character, and by the guidance of God. What was a hope when these Meccan verses were revealed became an accomplishment hefore the end of his life and mission on earth.

1072. "Pharaoh" (Arabic, Fir'awa) is a dynastic title, not the name of any particular king in Egypt. It has been traced to the ancient Hieroglyphic words, Par-Sa, which mean "Graat House." The nidal is an "infirm" letter added in the process of Arabisation. Who was the Pharaoh in the story of Moses? If the Inscriptions had belped us, we could have answered with some confidence, but unfortunately the Inscriptions fail us. It is probable that it was an early Pharaoh of the XVIIIth Dynasty, say Thothmes I, about 1540 B.C. See sppendix IV, on Egyptian Chronology and Israel, printed at the end of this Sara.

1073. Notice that Moses, in addressing Pharaoh and the Egyptians, claims his mission to be not from his God, or his people's God but from "year Lord," from "the Lord of the Worlds." And his mission is not to his people only: "I come unto yea (Egyptian people) from year Lord." The spirit of our version is entirely different from the spirit of the same story as told in the Old Testament (Exod. chapters i. to xv.). In Exod. iii, 18, the mission of Moses is expressed to be as from "the Lord God of the Hebraws."

The essence of the whole Islamic story is this. Joseph's sufferings and good fortune were not merely a story in a romance. Joseph was a prophet; his sufferings and his subsequent rise to power and position in Egypt were to be a lesson (e.) to his vicked brothers who sold him into slavery, (b) to his people who were stricken with famine and found a welcome in Egypt, and (c) to the Egyptians, who were arrogant over their high material civilisation, but had yet to be taught the pure faith of Abraham. Israel prospered in Egypt, and stayed there perhaps two to four centuries. (Renan allows only one century.) Times changed, and the racial bigotry of the Egyptians showed its head again, and Israel was oppressed. Moses was raised up with a threefold mission again (a) to learn all the learning of the Egyptians and preach God's Truth to them as one who had been brought up among themselves, (b) to unite and reclaim his own people, and (c) to receut them and lead them to a new world, which was to open out their spiritual horizon and lead them to the Psalms of David and the grories of Solomon.

 ١٥٠ مُرِيدُ أَن مُخْرِجِكُ مِنْ أَنْفِيكُمْ قَانَا

1074. The antuing dialogue shows the psychology on the two sides. Pharach is sitting in his Darbar, with his ministers and chiefs around him. In their arrogance they are only amused the effontery and apparent revolt of the Isabellie leaders, and they rely upon their own superior worldly power, aided by the magic which was a part of the Egyptian religion. Confronting them stand two men, Moses with his mission from God, and his brother Aaton who was his levitenant. They are confident, not jn their own powers, but in the mission they had received. The first thing they have to do is to act on the subjective mind of the Egyptians, and by methods which by God's miracle show that Exputian magic was nothing before the true nower of God.

1075. The serpent played a large part in Egyptian mythology. The great sun-god Ra won a great victory over the serpent Apophis, typifying the victory of light over darkness. Many of their gods and goddesses took the forms of sankes to impress their foces with terror. Moses's rad as a type of a serpent at once appealed to the Egyptian mentality. The contempt which the Egyptians had entertained in their mudos before was convicted into terror. Here was some one who could control the reptile which their great god Ra himself had such difficulty in overcoming!

1076. But the second Sign displayed by Moses was even more puzzling to the Egyptians. Mosederew out his hand from the folds of the garments on his breast, and it was white and shuring as with divine light! This was to counter any suggestions of evil, when the serpent might have created. This was no work of evil,—of black magic, or a trick or illusion. His hand was transfigured—with a light which no Egyptian socreters could produce. In Islam the "white hand" of Moses has passed into a proverb, for a symbol of divine glory dazzling to the beholders.

107. The two Signs had the desired effect on the Egyptians. They we're impressed, but they judged them by their own standards. They thought to themselves, "These are ordinary sorceres: let us search out our best sorceres and show them that they have superior power." But like all worldly people, they began to lear for their own power and possessions. It was far from Moserés intention to drive out the Egyptians from their own land. He merely wanted to end the Egyptian oppression. But the Egyptians had a guilty conscience, and they provided other people's motives by their own. They discussed the matter in Council on quite wrong premise.

<sup>1078.</sup> The advice of the Council to Pharaoh shows a misreading of the situation. They were in a panic about what the magic of this evidently powerful sorceter could do against them. So they advised the Pharaoh to summon their most powerful sorceters from all over the country, and in the meantime to hold Moses and Aaron in suspense,—neither to yield to them nor definitely to oppose them. The men of God could well afford to wait. Time is always in favour of Truth.

<sup>1079.</sup> The most noted sorcerers of Pharaoh came Their art was built up on trickery and imposture, and the first thing they could think of was to make a selfish bargain for themselves. The Pharaoh and his Council would in their present state of panic agree to analything. And so they did. Pharaoh not only promised them any rewards they desired if they foiled the strange power of these men, but he also promised them the highest dignities round his own person. And so the contest begins, with due observance of the semnities observed by combatants before they come to close grips.

<sup>1080.</sup> Moses and his brother Aaron were pitted against the most skilful magic-men of Egypt, but they were calm and confident and let the magic-men have their innings first. As is usual in this world, the magicians' trickey made a great impression on the people, but when Moses three whis rod, the illusion was broken, and the falsehood was all shown up. In the Old Testament story (Exod. vii, 10-12) it was Aaron that threw the rod, and he threw it before the magicians. Aaron's rod became a serpent. Then the magicians threw their rods, and they became serpents, but Aaron's rod swallowed up their rods. The story given to us is more dramatic and less literal. We are told in general terms that Moses first allowed the magic-men to play their tricks. The rod of Moses was the symbol of his authority. It must have been a simple shepherd's crook with which he used to feed his flocks. With God's grace behind him, he was able to expose all false trickery and establish the Truth.

- 117. We put it into Moses's mind By inspiration: "Throw (now) Thy rod ": and behold! It swallows up straightway All the falsehoods Which they fake!

1081. The proud ones of the Court—Pharach and his chiefs—were hard-hearted, and the exposure of the imposture only made them wreak their rage on those whom they could read: On the other hand the effect on the humbler ones—those who had been made the dupes and instruments of the imposture—was quite different. Their conscience was a wakened. They fell down to the ground in adoration of the Lord of the Worlds, and confessed their fails.

1082. Pharaoh and his Court were doubly angry: first because they were made to look small when confronted by the power of God, and secondly, because their dupes and instruments were matched away from them. These fines, the sorceren, at once recognised the Signs of God, and in their case the mission of Moses and Aaron was fulfilled. They turned back on their past life of imposture, make-believe, false worship, and oppression of the weak, and confessed the One true God. As usually happens, hardened sinners resent all the more the saving of any of their companions from sin and error. Judging other people's motives by their own, they accuse them of duplicity, and if they have the power, they take cruel revenge. Here the Pharaoh threatens the repentant sunners with the extreme punishment for treason and apostay (cytting off of hands and feet, combined with an ignominious death on the tross, as in the case of the worst madelactors). But they remained him, and prayed to God for patiente and constancy. Probably their influence spread quietly in the commonally. Ultimately it appeared on the Throne itself, in the person of Amenophis It's about five or six generations afterwards. See Appendix V, on Egyptian Religion, printed at the end of this Sära.

1083. These Egyptians, by their patience and constancy, show that their repentance was true, Thus in their case the mission of Moses was fulfilled directly, and their number must have amounted to a considerable figure. They were martyrs to their faith, and their martyrdom affected their nation in two ways. In the first place, as they were the pick of those who practised the false superstition in Egypt, their conversion and disappearance dealt a staggering blow to the whole system. Secondly, the indirect effect of their martyrdom on the commonalty of Egypt must have been far greater than can be measured by numbers. The banner of God was planted, and the silent spiritual fight must have gone on ever since, though history, in recording outward events, is silent on the slow and gradual processes of transformation undergone by Egyptian religion. From a chaotic pantheon of animals and animal gods, the worship of the sun and the heavenly bodies, and the worship of the Pharaoh as the embodiment of power, they gradually came to realise the oneness and mercy of the true God. After many glimpses of Monotheism on Egyptian soil itself, the Gospel of Jesus reached them, and eventually Islam.

@ وَلَقَدْ أَخَذْنَا ۚ مَالَ فِرْعَ وَنَّ بِالنَّهِ بِينَ

1084. Pharaoh's order against the sorcerers was drastic enough. But his Council is not satisfact. What about Mores and the Iracelites? They had a seeming victory, and will now be more mischievous than ever. They appeal to Pharaoh's vanity and his superstition and sense of power. "If you leave them alone," they say, "where will be your authority? You and your gods will be defied!" Pharaoh has a ready answer. He was really inwardly cowed by the apparent power of Moses. He dared not openly act against him. But he had already, before the birth of Moses, passed a cunning order to destroy the whole people of Israel. Through the instrumentality of midwives (Exod., 15) all the male children were to be destroyed, and the females would then be for the Egyptians: the race of Israel World with the stat amend. This grete was still in force, and would remain in force until the despised race was absorbed. But Egyptian cunning and wickedness had no power against God's Plan for those who had faith. See verse 199 below.

1065. Notice the contrast between the arrogant tone of Pharaoh and the humility and faith taught by Moses. In the end the arrogance was humbled, and humility and faith were protected and advanced.

1086. There is a slight note of querulousness in the people's answer. But Moses allays it by his own example and courage, and his vision of the future: which was amply fulfilled in time. See verse 137 below

1087. The Israelites, despised and enslaved, were to be rescued and made rulers in Palestine. David and Solomon were great kings and played a notable part in history. But the greatness of Israel was conditional; they were to be judged by their deeds. When they fell from grace, other people were given honour and power. And so it came to be the turn of the Arab race, and so on. God gives His gifts to those who are righteous and obey His Law.

1088. Their superstition ascribed the punishment of their own wickedness to some evil omen. They thought Moses and his people brought them ill-tuck. They did not look within themselves to see the root of evil, and the cause of their punishment! So it happens in all ages. People blane the righteous for something which they do, different from other men, instead of searching out their own lapses from recittude, which are punished by God.

1091. In xvii. 101, the reference is to nine Clear Signs. These are: (1) the Rod (vii. 107), (2) the Radiare Hand (vii. 108), (3) the years of drought or shortage of water (vii. 130), (4) short crops (vii. 130), and the five mentioned in this verse, vis., (5) epidemics among men and beasts. 1092. The demand of Moses was two-fold: (1) come to God and cease from oppression, and (2) let me take Israel out of Egypt. At first It was laughed at and rejected with scorn. When the Plagues came nor pointshment, each time the Egyptians suffered, they promised amendment and begged Moses to intercede and cause the plague to cease. But every time it ceased, they went back to their vial attitude, until the final retribution came. This is a type of the sinner's attitude for all times.

1093. The Intercession of Moses was limited to prayer. Each plague or penalty had its appointed term in God's decree. That term was suby fulfilled before the plague ceased. God's law is firm: it does not vacilitate like the human will. Fibe intercession only meant two things: (1) that God's name was invoked and His presence duly brought home to the mind and heart of the sinner who promised repentance, and (2) that the sinner was given a further chance if the prayer was accepted. This again is a universal truth.

1004. When at last Pharaoh let Israel go, they selected, not the highway to Ganaan, along the Mediterranean and hy Gaza, because they were unarmed and would have encountered immediate opposition there, but by way of the wilderness of Sinai. They had to cross the marshy end of the Red Sea, which they did, while Pharaoh's host which came in purpuit was frowned. (f), ii. 50.

1093. Where was the Council of Phatabh held in which Moses addressed Phatabh? Egyptip primary capital in the XVIIIth Dynasty was Thebes (=No-Ammon), but that was more than 400 miles to the south of the Delta, in whose corner Israel dwelt. Stemphis, on the apex of the Delta, a little south of where Cairo is now, was also over 100 miles from Israel's habitations. The interview must have been either in a Palace near Coshen, where the Israelites dwelt, or in Zoan (=Tanis), the Deltaic capital built by a former dynasty, which was of course still available for the reigning dynasty, and which was not far from the Israelite settlement.

1006. Israel, which was despised, became a great and glorious nation under Solomon. He had goodly tertitory, and was doubly blest. His land and people were prosperous, and he was blessed with wisdom from God. His sway and his fame spread east and west. And thus God's promise to Israel was fulfilled. Note that Syria and Palestine had once been under the sway of Egypt. At he same time the proud and rebellious Pharach and his people were brought low. The splendid monuments which they had erected with so much skill and pride were mingled with the dust. Their great cities—Thebes (or No-Ammon), Memphia (or Noph, sacred to the Bull of Osiris), and the other splendid cities, became as if they had not existed, and archaeologists have had to dig up their ruins from the sands. The splendid monuments—templee, palaces, tombs, statues, columns, and statly structures of all kinds—were buried in the sands. Even monuments like the Great Sphinz, which seem to defy the ages, were partly buried in the sands, and owe their rescue to the comparatively recent researches of archieologists. As late as 1743 Richard Pocoke in his Travels in Egypt (p. 41), remarked: "Most of those pyramids are very much ruined."

The contrast between Egypt and Israel is one part of the story in the march of time. Israel also was found unworthy, and in course of time the Arabs, whom they despised as Ishmaelites, became their masters. The Jews in their Gheifros in Europe suffered much persecution. Nor are they out of the wood yet. If the Pogroms of the Siavs against them have ceased, their fate in Nazi Germany is the talk of the world. Nor had the Arabs or Turks or any nation a perpetual lesse of power from God. The test is righteousness and the Muslim virtues taught in the Universal Religion of faith and right confluct, 1097. Who were these people? We are now in the Sinai Peninsula. Two conjectures are possible. (1) The Amalekises of the Sinai Peninsula were at perpetual war with the Israelites. They were probably an idolatrous nation, but we have very little knowledge of their cult. (2) From Egyptian history we know that Egypt had worked from very ancient times some copper mines in Sinai, An Egyptian settlement may have been here. Lite all mining camps it contained from the beginning the dregs of the pcrulation. When the mines ceased to be worked, the settlement, or what remained of it, must have degenerated further. Cut off from civilisation, its cult must have become still narrower, without the refining influences which a progressive nation applies even to its idolatry. Perhaps Apis, the sacred build of Memphis, lost all its allegorical meaning for them, and only gross and superstitious rites remained among them. The text speaks of "seme idola tkey had," implying that they had merely a detached fragment of a completer religion. This was a snare in the path of the Israelites, whom many generations of slavery in Egypt had debased into ignorance and supersition.

142. A e appointed for Moses Thirty nights, and completed (The period) with ten (more): Thus was completed the term (Of communion) with his Lord. 1100 Forty nights. And Moses Had charged his brother Aaron (Before he went up):

@ فَالْ أَغَمُّ اللَّهُ أَيْسَكُمُ الْأَ فَصَلَكُمْ عَلَى ٱلْعَكْلِينَ

1096. If conjecture 2 in the last note is correct, this idolatrous worship was but the fragment of a ruin from Egypt, and Moses's reproach is biting : "You, who have been rescued from the bondage of living Egypt,-do you hanker after the bondage of a dead cult debased even from that from which you have been rescued?"

Mutabbar-broken in pieces, smashed into fragments, destroyed.

1099. This is God's reminder to Israel through the mouth of Moses. There was a double trial : (1) while the hondage lasted, the people were to learn patience and constancy in the midst of affliction; (2) when they were rescued, they were to learn humility, justice, and righteous deeds of prosperity.

1100. There is much mystic doctrine in this section, and the parallel between Israel and Islam continues throughout. The forty nights' communion of Moses with God on the Mount may be compared with the forty days' fast of Jesus in the wilderness before he took up his ministry (Matt. tv. 2), and with the forty years of Musiafa's preparation in life before he took up his Ministry. In each case the Apostles lived alone apart from their people, before they came into the full blaze of the events of their Ministry. The forty is divided into thirty and ten, pre-figuring the thirty days of the Ramadhin fast, and the ten days of the Zul-Bajj pilgrimage in Islam.

And Moses fell down In a swoon. When he Recovered his senses he said . "Glory be to Thee! To Thee I turn in repentance, and I Am the first to believe." 1104 1101. When for any reason the man of God is absent from his people, his duty of leadership (shifted) should be taken up by his brother—not necessarily a blood-brother, but one of his society or brotherhood. The deputy should discharge it in all humility, remembering three things: (1) that he is only a deputy, and bound to follow the directions of his Principal. (2) that right and justice are of the essence of power, and (3) that mischiel gets its best chance to raise its head in the absence of the Principal, and that the deputy should always guard against the traps laid for him in the Principal's absence.

1102. Even the best of us thay be betrayed into overweening confidence or spiritual ambition not yet justified by the stage we have reached. Aloses had already seen part of the glory of God in his Radiant White Hand, that shone with the glory of Divine light (vil. 108.n. 1076). But he was still in the feeth, and the mission to his people was to begin after the Covenant of Sinai. It was premaying of limit to sak to see God.

1103 But God—the Cherisher of all His creatures—treats even our foolish requests with mercy, compassion, and understanding. Even the reflected glory of God is ton great for the grosser, substates of rematter. The peak on which it shone became as powder before the inefable glory, and Mosse could only live by being taken out of his bodily senses. When he recovered from his swoon, he saw the true position, and the distance between our grosser bodily senses and the true splendeur of God's glory. He at once turned in penitence to God, and confessed his faith. Having been blidded by the excessive Glory, he could not see with the physical-eye. But he could get a glimpse of the reality through faith, and he hasteined to proclam his faith.

1104 "First to believe." Cf. the expression "first of those who bow to God in Islam" in vi. 14 and 163. "First" means here not the first in time, but most healous in faith. It has the intensive and not the comparative meaning.

1105 "Above (other) men"; i.e., among his contemporaries. He had a high mission, and he had the honour of speaking to God.

1106. God's reveilation is for the benefit of His creatures, who should receive it with reverence and graitude While Moses was having these great spiritual experiences on the Mount, his people below were ungrateful enough to forget God and make a golden call for worship (vii.) 47).

1107. The Tablets of the Law contained the essential spiritual Truth, from which were derived the positive injunctions and prohibitions, explanations and interpretations, which it was the function of the prophetic office to hold up for the people to follow. The precepts would contain, as the Shari'at does, matters aboutletly prohibited, matters not prohibited but disapproved, matters about which there was no prohibition or injunction, but in which conduct was to be regulated by circumstances; matters of positive and universal duty, matters recommended for those whose zeal was sufficient to enable them to work on higher than minimum standards, and matters which were sought by persons of the highest spiritual eminence. No soul is burdened beyond its capacity; but we are asked to seek the best and highest possible for us in conduct.

1108. Notice the transition from the "We" of authority and honour and impersonal dignity, to the "1" of personal concern in specially guiding the righteous.

1109 There are two meanings one literal and the other figurative. Literally, the homes of the wicked, both individuals and nations, hie desolate, as in the case of the ancient Egyptians, the 'Ad, and the Themud. Figuratively, the 'home' shows the inner and more initiants condition of people if you are duzzled by the outward prosperity of the ungodly, examine their inner anguish and lear and insecurity, and you will thank God for His gracious guidance.

Of right—them will I Turn away from My Signs: he was from My Signs: the law in the signs, They will not believe in them; And if they see the way Of right conduct, they will Not adopt it as the Way; But if they see the way Of error, that is The Way they will adopt. For they have rejected his Our Signs, and failed To take warning from them.

147. Those who reject Our Signs And the Meeting in the Hereafter,— Vain are their deeds: Can they expect to be rewarded Except as they have wrought?

1110. The argument may be simplified thus in paraphrase. The right is established on the earth as God created it: Nature recognises and obeys God's law as fixed for each portion of Creation. But man, because of the glift of Will, sometimes upsets this balance. The root-cause is his arrogance, as it was in the case of blist. God's Signs are everywhere, but if they are rejected with scorn and biasphemy, God will withdraw His grace, for sin hardens the heart and makes it impervious to the truth. Want of faith produces a kind of blindness to spiritual facts, a kind of deafness to the wars ings of a Day of Account, when the best of us will need fils Mercy for our Salvation, which may be described spiritually as our "Seeing God." If we had contumaciously rejected faith, can we hope for anything but justice, —the just punishment of our sins?

1111. Rejected Our Signs: again a return to the Plural of impersonal Dignity and Authority, from the singular of personal concern in granting grace and guidance to the righteous.

1112. The making of the golden calf and its worship by the Israelites during the absence of Moses on the Mount were referred to in it. 51 and some further details are given-in xx, 85-97. Notice how in each case only those points are referred to which are necessary to the argument in hand. A narrator, whose object is mere narration, tells the story in all its details, and is done with it., A consummate artist, whose object is to enforce lessons, brings out each point in its proper place. Master of all details, he does not ramble, but with supreme literary skill, just adds the touch that is necessary in each place to complete the spiritual picture. His object is not a story but a lesson. Here notice the contrast between the intense spiritual con munion of Moses on the Mount and the simultaneous corruption of his people in his absence. We can understand his righteous indignation and bitter grief (vii. 150). The people had melted all their gold orgaments, and made the image of a calf like the bull of Osiris in the city of Memphis is the wicked Egypt that they had turned their backs upon.

The image of a calf, (for worship): "113 It seemed to low: did they ill's Not see that it could Neither speak to them, nor Show them the Way? They took it for worship And they did wrong.

149. When they repented, and saw That they had erred, They said: "I four Lord Have not mercy upon us And forgive us, we shall Indeed be of those who perish."

150. When Moses came back
To his people, angry and grieved,
He said: "Evil it is that ye.
Have done in my place
In my absence: did ye ""
Make haste to bring on
The judgment of your Lord?"

1113. Image of a Call: Jased is literally a body, especially the body of a man according to Khalil quoted by Rigib. In xxi. 8 it is used obviously for the human body, as also in xxxviii. 34; but in the latter case, the idea of an image, without any real life or soul, is also suggested. In the present passage I undestand many suggestions: (1) that it was a fivre image, without life; (2) as such, it could not low; therefore the appearance of lowing, mentioned immediately afrewards, was a fraud; (3) unlike its prototype, the bull of Osirs, it had not even the symbolism of Osiris behind it; the Osiris myth, in the living religion of Egypt, had at least some etuical principles behind it.

1114. The lowing of the golden calf was obviously a deception practised by the Egyptian promoters of the cult. Lytton in his "Last Days of Pompeii" exposes the deception practised by the priests of list. Men hidden behind images imposed on the credulty of the commonatty.

1113. Did ye make kaste...? "In your impatience, could you not wait for me? Your lapse into idolatry has only hastened God's wrath. If you had only waited, I was bringing to you in the Tablets the most excellent teaching in the commands of God." There is subtle irony in the speech of Moses. There is also a play upon words: "if "all'; and "ejila" to make haste: no translation can bring out these niceties.

1116. Put down the Tablets: we are not told that the Tablets were broken; in fact vii. 154 (below) shows that they were whole. They contained God's Messenger. There is a touch of disrespect iff not blasphemy in supposing that God's Messenger broke the Tablets in the incontinent rage, as is stared in the Old Festament: "Moses's anger waxed hot, and he cast the tablets out of his hands, and brake them beneath the Mount." (Excol. xxxii. 10.) On this point and also on the point that Araro (in the Old Testament story) ordered the gold to be brought, made a mollen calf, fashioned it with a graving tool, and built an altar before the calf (Exod. xxxii. 25), our version differs from that of the Old Testament. We cannot believe that Araro, who was appointed by God to assist Moses as God's Messenger, could descend so low as to seduce the people into idolatry, whatever his human weak-nesses might be.

Seized his brother by (the hair Of) his head, and dragged him"? To him. Aaron said: "Son of my mother! The people Did indeed reckon me As naught, and went near To slaying me! Make not The enemies rejoice over My misfortune, nor count thou Me amongst the people Of sin." "B

<sup>1117.</sup> Moses was but human Remembering the charge he had given to Aaron (vii. 142) he had a just grievance at the turn events had taken. But he did not wreak his vengeance on the Tablets of God's law by breaking them. He laid hands on his brother, and his brother at once explained.

<sup>1118</sup> Aaron's speach is full of tenderners and regret. He addresses Moses as "son of my mother,"

-an affectionate term. He explains how the turbulent people nearly killed him for resisting them,
And he states in the clearest terms that the idolatry neither originated with him nor had his consent, in xx 83 we are told that a fellow described as the Sāmiri had led them astray. We shall discuss this when we come to that passage.

<sup>1119.</sup> As Moses was convinced that his brother was guiltless, his wrath was turned to gentleness. He prayed for forgiveness—for himself and his brother: for himself because of his wrath and for his brother because he had been unable to suppress idolatry among his people. And like a true leader that he is, he identifies himself with his licutenant for all that has happened. Even more, he identifies himself with his whole people in his prayer in verse 155 below. Herein, again, is a 4ype of what the Holy Prophet Muhammad did for his people.

<sup>1120.</sup> The consequences were twofold: (1) spiritual, in that God's grace is withdrs wn, and (2) even in the present life of this world, in that godly men also shun the sinner's company, and he is isolated.

They were to be silent witnesses, but their faith was not yet complete, and they dared to say to Moses: "We shall hever believe in thee until we see God-in public? (id. 53), They were dazed with thunder and lightning, and might have been destroyed but for God's mercy on the interession of Moses."

<sup>1122.</sup> Rajfat: violent quaking, earthquake. I take it to refer to the same event as is described by the word Sa'iqat in ii. 55, the thunder and lightning that shook the mountain-side.

Old on their heald. He recognises that it was a trial, in which some of his people failed to stand the test. Such failure was worthy of punishment. 1125. God's mercy is in and for all things. All nature subserves a common purpose, which is for the good of all His creatures. Our faculties and our understandings are all instances of His grace and mercy. Each unit or factor among his creatures benefits from the others and receives them as God's mercy to itself; and in its turn, each contributes to the benefit of the others and is thus an instance of God's mercy to them. His mercy is universal and all-pervasive; while His justice and punishment are referved for those who swerve from His plan and (to use a medieval juridical formula) go out of His Peace.

1126. The personal grace and mercy—and their opposite—are referred to the singular pronoun "In while the impersonal Law, by which God's Signs operate in His universe, is referred to the plural pronoun of authority and dignity. "We".

1127. In this verse is a pre-figuring, to MoJes, of the Arabian Apostle, the last and greatest of the apostles of God. Prophecies about him will be found in the Taurit and the lojit. In the reflex of the Taurit as now accepted by the Jews. Moses asys: "The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a Prophet from the midst of thee. of thy brethren, lis unto me "(Deut, xwiil, 15); the only Prophet who brought a Shari't at like that of Moses was Mulpammad Muşafa, and he came of the house of lams 10 the brother of Isaac the father of Israel. In the reflex of the Gospel as now accepted by the Christians, Christ promised another Comforter (John xw. 16); the Greek word Paraclete which the Christians interpret as referring to the Holy Spirit is by our Doctors taken to be Paridyte, which would be the Greek form of Apamd, See Q. Ixi. 6.

1128. Agial: plural of guilten, a yoke, an iron collar. In the formalism and exclusiveness of the lews there were many restrictions which were removed by Islam, a religion of freedom in the faith of God, of universality in the variety of races, language, manners and customs.

1129, Light takith as sent denes with him; the words are "with him", not "to him", emphasizing the fact that the Light which he brought illumines every one who has the privilege of joining his great and universal Fellowship.

1130. Falab,—prosperity in its general sense as well as in its spiritual sense. In the general sense it means that right conduct is the only door to happiness and well-being. In the spiritual sense it means that Faith and its fruits fright conduct) are the only gates to salvation.

1131. Our attention having been directed to various aposites, who were sent with missions to their several peoples, and in each of whose careers there is some pre-figurement of the life of the last and greatest of them, we are now asked to listen to the proclamation of Muhammad's universal mission. We contemplate no longer, after this, partial ruths. It is not now a question of saving listal from the bondage of Egypt, nor teaching Midian the ethics of business, nor reclaiming the people of Lot from sexual sin or Thamful from the sin of opposition in power, or Ad from arrogance and ancestor worship. Now are set forth plaintly the issues of Life and Drath, the Message of the One Universal God to all markind.

1132. "Unlettered," as applied to the Prophet here and in verse 157 above, has three special significations. (I) He was not versed in human learning; yet he was full of the highest wisdom, and had a most wonderful knowledge of the previous Scriptures. This was a proof of his inspiration. It was a miracle of the highest kind, a "Sign", which every one could lest then, and every one can test now. (2) All organised human knowledge tends to be crystalized, to acquire a partial bias or flavour of some "school" of thought. The highest Teacher had to be free from any such taint, just as a clean slate is necessary if a perfectly clear and bold message has to be written on!, (3) In vii. 20 and Ixiv. 2, the epithet is applied to the Pragan Arabs. because, hefree the advent of Islam, they were unlearned. That the least and greatest of the Prophets should arise among them, and they and their language be made the vehicle of the new, (viii, and universal light, has also a meaning which is evolution of the prophets of the

<sup>1133.</sup> We now come to some incidents in Jewish history, which have been referred to in ii. 57-60. Here they have special reference to their bearing on the times when early Islam was preached. The Twelve Tribes and the parable drawn from them have been explained in n. 73 to ii. 60. II34. Cf. ii. 57 and n. 71.

<sup>1136,</sup> Cf. 11, 38-59, and n. 72. The story is here told by way of parable for the times of Islam. Hence we have a few verbal changes: e.g., "dwell in this town" instead of "enter this town," etc.

1137. Cf. ii. 65 and n. 79. Fishing, like every other activity, was prohibited to Israel on the Sabbath day. As this practice was usually observed, the fish used to come up with a sense of security to the water channels or pools openly on the Sabbath day, but not on other days when fishing was open. This was a great temptation to the law-breakers, which they could not resist. Some of their men of plety protested, but it had no effect. When their transgressions, which, we may suppose, extended to other commandments, passed beyond bounds, the punishment came. They were despised among their own occupied, and became like anes, without law and without order or decency

1138. There are always people who wonder, no doubt sincerely, what good it is to preach to the wided. The answer is given to them here: (I) every man who sees svil must speak out against it; it is his duty and responsibility to God; (2) there is always a chance that the warning may have effect and save a precious soul. This passage has a special meaning for the times when our Holy Prophet was preaching in Mecroa, apparently without results. But it applies to all times.

1140. See Deut, xi, 28: "A curse if ye will not obey the commandments of the Lord your God but turn aside out of the way which I command you this day"; also Deut, xiviii. 49; "The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from afar, from the end of the earth, as swift as the eagle flieth; a nation whose tongue thou shall not understand"; and many other passages.

1141. The dispersal of the Jews is a great fact in the world's history. Nor has their persecution ended yet, nor is it likely to end as far as we can foresee.

1142, Merely inheriting a Book, or doing lip service to it, does not make a nation righteous. If they surcumb to the temptations of the world, their hypocrisy becomes all the more glaring, "High finance" is one of these temptations. Cf, also is 80: "the Fire shall not touch us except for a few numbered days": and ii, 88, about their blasphemous self-sufficiency.

172. Then thy Lord drew forth 1146
From the Children of Adam-

@ قادْ أَخَاذَ رَبِئُلُ مِنْ بَيْتِ اَلْعَرَ

<sup>1145,</sup> Therein -in the Book or Revelation, in "what We have given you".

<sup>1146.</sup> This passage has led to differences of opinion in interpretation. Does it mean that each individual, in the posterity of Adam had a separate existence from the time of Adam, and that a Covenant was taken from all of them, which is binding accordingly on each individual? That question really does not arise. The words in the text refer to the descendants of the Children of Adam. 16, to all humanity, born or unborn, without any limit of time. Adam's seed carries on the existence of Adam, and succeeds to his spiritual heritage. Humanity as such has a corporate aspect, Humanity has been given by Ond certain powers and faculties, whose possession creates on our side special spiritual obligations which we must faithfully discharge; see v. 1, and n. 681. These obligations must be a succeeded to the spiritual policy of the preceding verse vii 1711a reference was made to the implied Covenant of the Jewish nation. Now we consider the implied Covenant of the whole of humanity, for the Holy Apostles mission was world-wide.

From their loins...
Their descendants, and made

"Am I not your Lord (Who cherishes and sustains

They said: "Yea!
We do testify!" "" (This), lest
Ye should say on the Day
Of Judgment: "Of this we Were never mindful":

173. Or lest ye should say:
"Our fathers before us
May have taken false gods,
But we are (their) descendants
After them: wilt Thou then
Destroy us because of the deeds
Of men who were futile?" 1144

- 174. Thus do We explain
  The Signs in detail;
  And perchance they may turn (Unto Us).
- 175. Relate to them the story 149.
  Of the man to whom
  We sent Our Signs,
  But he passed them by:

مِن طَهُ ُودِهِمْ ذُنَيَّاهُمْ وَأَنْصَدَهُمْ عَلَى الْفَشِيهِدِ ٱلْسَنْتُ يَرَيَّهُمْ قَا الْوَا بَلْ نَهَبِ ذُنَا أَنْ تَعَثَّوْلُوا ثِيْمَ الْفِيْبَةِ وَإِنَّا كُنِنَا عَنْ هَا فَالْوِلِينَ

﴿ أَوْتَصْوُلُواْ إِنِّمَآ أَشَرَكَ ءَابَآؤُنَا مِن فَصُلُ وَكِحُنَا ذَرْبَعَةً مِنْ بَشَدِوثِرْ أَفَهُلِكُكَ بِمَا نَصَّلُ ٱلتَّلِيلُونَ

وَلَّهُ اللَّهُ نَفْضَلُ الْآیَنِ وَلَعَلَهُمْ
 بَرْجِعُمُونَ

وَانْتُلْ عَلَيْمِيهُ نَبَأُ الَّذِيثَ النَّيْسُهُ
 النِيْسُا فَانسَلَحَ مِنْهَا

1447. The Covenant is completed in this way. We acknowledge that God is our Creator, Cherisher, and Sustainer: therefore we acknowledge our duty to Him: when we so testify concerning ourselves, the obligation is as it were assumed by us; for it follows from our very nature when it is pure and uncorrupted.

1146. The latent faculties in man are enough to teach him the distinction between good and evil, to warn him of the dangers that beest his life. But to awaken and stimulate them, a personal eppeal is made to each individual through the "still small voice" within him. This in its uncorrupted state acknowledges the truth and metaphorically awears its Covenant with God. There is, therefore, no excuse for any individual to say, either (1) that he was unmindful, or (2) that he should not be punished for the sins of his fathers, because his punishment (if any) comes from his personal responsibility and is for his own rejection of faith and the higher spiritual influences.

1149. Commentators differ whether this story or parable refers to a particular individual, and if so, to whom. The story of Balaam the seer, who was called out by Israel's enemies to curse Israel, but who blessed Israel instead, (Num. xxii., xxiii. xxii.) is quite different. It is better to take the parable in a general sense. There are men, of talents and position, to whom great opportunities of spititual insight come, but they prevresely pass them by. Satan sees his opportunity and catches them up. Instead of rising higher in the spiritual world, their selfsh and worldly desires and ambitions pull them down, and they are lost.

So Satan followed him up, And he went astray.

We should have elevated him

1150. Notice the contrast between the exalted spiritual honours which they would have received from God if they had followed His Will, and the earthly desires which eventually bring them low to the position of beasts and worse.

1151. The dog, especially in the hot weather, tolls out his tongue, whether he is attacked and pursued and is tired, or he is left alone. It is part of his nature to slobber. So with the man who rejects God. Whether he is warned or left alone, he continues to throw out his dirty saliva. The injury he will do will be to his own soul. But there may be infection in his evil example. So we must protect others. And we must never give up hope of his own armendment. So we must continue to warn him and make him think.

1152. Those who reject God will be deprived of God's grace and guidance. His Mercy is always open for sincere repentance. But with each step downwards, they go lower and lower, until they perish.

In the opening Stra, we have these indicated in a few comprehensive words, such as Repharia (nost Gracius), Rehim (most Merciul), Rehim (Rehim) and Cherisher and Sustainer of the worlds). Our bringing such names to remembrance is part of our Prayer and Praise. 1156, Mubin; perspicuous. The reason why I have not used a simpler word, such as "plain" or "clear" is explained in a 716 to v. 17. Mustala's sermons were not polite reminders, with an eye to the flattery of weaknesses in high places or national vanities or crowd passions. They brought out every foible into the glarie of light, by a flery eloquence fed by inspiration from God.

1157. An appeal to God's most wonderful universe should at once convince a thinking mind of man's nothingness, and God's power, glory, and goodness. Man's term here is fleeting. If he is not warned by the great Signs, and the Messages which call his attention to them, is he capable of any faith at all?

1158. C/ ii. 15. If God's light is removed, the best of them can only wander hither and thither, like blad men, in distraction.

It would be a heavy burden to us. Our duty is to be prepared for it at all times. It will come when we least expect it. In the present Gosnels Jesus says the same thing; he does not know the Hour, but it will come suddenly. "But of that day and that Hour knowsth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father. Take we head, watch and f_*av: for ye know not when the time is." <sup>1160.</sup> Hafs is usually construed to mean: "eager or anxious in search of": the preposition following here is 'an econcerning, about. Some commentators (including Ragib) understand it in this passage to mean "well-acquainted." In xix, 47, with the preposition bi following it, it signifies "well-disposed to" "favourable to, good to, kind to"

@ أَيْشَكِوُنَ مَا لَا يَغْلُقُ شَيْئًا وَهُر يُغْلَفُونَ

1165. When the child is born, the parents forget that it is a precious gift of God,—a miracle of Creation, which should lift their minds up to the higher things of God. Instead, their gradual familiarity with the new life makes them connect it with many superstitions ideas or rites and ceremones, or they take it as a matter of course, as a little plaything of the material world. This leads to idolatory or false worship, or false standards, in derogation of the dignity of God.

1166. When false worship takes root, the teacher of Truth finds much to discourage him. As far as he is-concerned, it seems as if he has produced no effect. Yet his duty is to continue his work, in the spirit of verse 199 below, forgiving all opposition, teaching what is right, and not joining the ignorant in their attitude of doubt and indecision.

1167. False gods, whether idols or deified men, or ideas and superstitions, have no existence of their own, independent of God's creation. They are God's creatures, and like servants are subject to this authority. Deified men are not real men, but false ideas of men. They cannot help themselves: how can they help others?

Or eyes to see with? Or ears to hear with? Say: "Call your 'god-partners'," Scheme (your worst) against me, And give me no respite!

1168. Here is a test and a challenge. If the false gods had any power or even existence, collect them all together, and, says the man of God, "Let them do their worst against me," They cannot; because the whole thing is based on a superstition and a chimera.

1169. The beauty and righteousness of Musiafa's life were acknowledged on all hands, until he received the mission to preach and to fight against evit. What happened then? Evil erected barricades for itself. It had vers, but it refused to see. It had ears, but it refused to hear. It had along the it refused to hear, It had intelligence, but it blocked up its channels of understanding. Even now, after thirteen centuries and a half, a life of unexampled purity, probity, justice, and righteousness is seen in false lights by blind detractors!

1170. God comforts the Apostle and directs his mind to three precepts: (1) to forgive injuries, insults, and persecution; (2) to continue to declare the faith that was in him, and not only to declare it, but to act up to it in all his dealings with friends and fores; (3) to pay no attention to ignorant fools, who raised doubts or difficulties, hurled taunts or reproaches, or devised plots to defeat the furth: they were to be ignored and passed by, not to be engaged in fights and fruitless controversies, or concluded by compromises, <sup>3</sup>

1171. Even a man of God is but human. He might think that revenge or retaliation, or a little tactful, sinence when evil stalks abroad, or some compromise with ignorance, might be best for the cause. He is to reject such suggestions. 401

@ وَإِذَا فَرِينَ ٱلْعُرُوانُ فَأَسْتَهِ عُوا كُثُر

1172. God protects His own, as no one else can. He is the sure refuge—and the only one—for men of faith. If we are confused or angry, being blinded by this world, He will open our eyes, 1173. We go back to consider the ungodly, whom we left at verse 198, in order to be taught our behaviour towards evil. The forces of evil never relax their efforts to draw their "brethren" (those who go into their family) deeper and decore into the mire of sin and destruction.

1174. "Ayat" here, I think, means specially an Ayat of the Holy Qur.ān. The infidels did not believe in revelation, and used to taunt the Holy Apostle, as much as to say that he used to put logether words and promulgate them as revelation. The answer is contained in the sentence that follows. No human composition could contain the beauty, power, and spiritual insight of the Qurān. Without inspiration it is impossible to suppose that a man, with or without literary and philosophic training, could produce such a book as the Qurān.

1175. "Lighta": eyes, faculty of spiritual insight. The revelation is for us (1) spiritual eyes, (2) guidance, and (3) mercy. (1) is the highest in degree; just as a blindman, if he is given eyes and the laculty of sight, is at once removed into an entirely new world, so those who can reach the stage of spiritual insight pass into and become citizens of a wholly new spiritual World. (2) is next in degree; the man of the world can act up to the teaching about right conduct, and prepare for the Hereafter. (3) is the Mercy of God, free to every one, saint and sinner, who sincerely believes and puts his trust in God.

APPENDIX IV.

Egpytian Chronology and Israel (see vii. 104, n. 1072)

In order to get some idea of the comparative chronology of Egypt and Israel, we must first consider what data we have for Egyptian chronology. Israel's surviving records date from a time many centuries later than Israel's contact with Egypt. On the other hand Egypt's records in monuments, inscriptions, tombs, etc., are rich and absolutely reliable as far as they go.

Of the surviving old civilizations, Egypt and China go back furthest in time with historical material. Egypt has the more interest for us, because geographically she was centrally situated, and she influenced and was influenced by almost every important cultural movement in Asia, Europe, and Africa. Nothing happened in Mediterranean history that had not some points of contact with Egypt.

The first broad division in Egyptian chronology is between the pre-Dynastic and the Dynastic periods. The pre-Dynastic period is all pre-history. But recent researches have thrown a great deal of light on the culture of that period, and we know many more details about the arts and tools of that period in Egypt than we do for the corresponding periods of pre-history in other countries.

With the first Egyptian Dynasty of rulers begins the Dynastic period. What were the Egyptian Dynasties, and why is so much prominence given to them in Egyptian chronology? The reason is that though we can form a graphic idea of the sequence of events and in many cases of the details of events, arts and crafts, manners and customs, cults and ceremonies, and social and economic conditions in the Dynastic period, we are not yet able, except for occasional and isolated glimpses, to give any accurate figures of early dates to connect them with our chronology B.C. On the other hand we have abundant materials to justify us in placing certain events or personages or ideas in some division of the Dynastic scheme. We can say that such and such ideas held sway under the 18th Dynasty or that such and such invasion, outwards or inwards, took place at the close of the 14th Dynasty.

The Dynastic scheme rests mainly on the lists and fragments preserved from the writings of one Manetho, an Egyptian priest and annalist, who lived under Ptolemy I and Ptolemy II (B.C. 313-246), the inheritors of the Egyptian portion of Alexander's, Empire. For his Egyptian history in Greek he had access to Egyptian records. His scheme of Dynasties therefore supplies a rough chronological frame-work into which can be fitted our ever-increasing detailed knowledge derived from Egyptian monuments, tombs, and excavations. His first Dynasty begins with the unification of Upper and Lower Egypt, but its actual dage B.C. has been placed at between such wide margins as 5500 B.C. and 3300 B.C.

The two Egypts may be considered distinct ethnical and perhaps geographical divisions, which tend to assimilate when they are united politically, but whose physical characteristics are different, as also their outlook when there is political division. Lower Egypt looks to the Mediterranean, and its population is mixed, containing almost all the Mediterranean and Arab elements, while Upper Egypt looks to interior Africa (Nubia, Sudan, Abyssinia, etc.), and its population tends to have more and more African characteristics. The whole of Egypt has had a ribbon development, the population and cultivation being confined to the banks of the Nile. Without the Nile Egypt would be just a desert forming a link in the long chain of tropical and sub-tropical deserts stretching from the Sahara, the Libyan desert, the Arabian deserts, through the Persian, Baluchistan, Sindh, and Rajputana deserts, to the Turki and Gobi deserts in Central Asia. But Upper Egypt is purely a long irregular line along the banks of the Nile, while Lower Egypt has the broad fan-like delta in which the many mouths of the Nile run into a very irregular coast-line extending over about 200 miles. Lower Egypt had (and has) much marsh-land, and its low-lying configuration was subject to many physical changes, in the same way as invasions and foreign immigrations gave its population a less stable character. Its cities, such as Sais and Tanis (Zoan), were also less stable in character, and Memphis (near the site of modern Cairo) had to be just above the Delta. On the other hand the Capitals in Upper Egypt, such as Thebes (or No), with their magnificent temples and tombs were safe above Nile waters in the highest inundations until the modern dam of Asuan was built many miles above them. Even after the union of the two Egypts, the King wore a double crown. The boundary between Upper and Lower Egypt was never clearly defined. because in spite' of frequent interruptions in the unity of the country, the identification of Egypt with the Nile made the unity of Egypt a political and economic necessity. The present boundary of Lower Egypt is just south of Cairo, making Lower Egypt include just the Delta. The tract between Cairo and Assiut is sometimes called Middle Egypt and is distinguished from the rest of Upper Egypt, which is higher up the river.

There being such wide variations in the estimate of ancient dates by competent authorities, the only practicable course is to refer ancient events to Dynasties according to Manetho's scheme. In the later dates it is sometimes possible to express a date in approximate figures B.C., but such figures are uncertain, whereas the sequence of Dynasties may be taken to be a stable fact in Egyptian history, although some of Manetho's material, when it can be tested, has proved to be inaccurate. But we have only Manetho second-hand. The inaccuracies may be due not to Manetho but to his transmitters. Thirty-one such Dynasties are reckoned, and they may be grouped into Periods as follows:—

- I. The Old Kingdom, Dynasties I to VIII, including (a) the first three Dynasties, with a new orientation in Egyptian Art, and (b) Dynasties IV to VI, the Pyramid Period, during which the Great Pyramid and the second and third Pyramids of Ghizeh were built. The capital now came to Lower Egypt, to the site of Memphis, near modern Cairo.
- II. The Middle Kingdom, Dynasties IX to XVII. In Dynasties IX and X the centre of gravity moved from Memphis in Lower Egypt to Middle Egypt. In the XIIth Dynasty many of the great monuments of and near Thebes (Karnak, Luxor, etc.), were constructed. Perhaps the movement higher up the river was necessitated by foreign invasions in Lower Egypt. Dynasties XV to XVII are called the Hyksos Period, when a Syrian Dynasty was established in Lower Egypt, with a sort of lordship over the native Dynasties of Upper Egypt, and international connections in other Mediterranean countries. We shall presently speak of the Hyksos Pharaohs, who have been placed in the 17th, 18th, and even 26th century B.C.

- III. The New Empire, Dynasties XVIII to XX, crowded with events. The dates now begin to be more definite: the period may be placed between about 1580 B.C. and about 1200 B.C. The foreign Hyksos were driven out; the empire was extended to Syria and Nubia; perhaps even the Euphrates was reached. Some of the most wonderful works of Egyptian art date from this period.
- IV. The Dynasties of the Delta, Dynasties XXI to XXXI, including a Dynasty at Sais (on one of the western branches of the Deltaic Niclo. But Assyrian and Persian invasions were now weakening the power of Egypt. The dates now became more certain. The XXIst Dynasty was roughly about 1100 B.C. The XXVIIth Dynasty was ended by the invasion of the Persians under Cambyses in 525 B.C. The Persians held sway (with Egyptian local dynasties under them) until the XXXIst Dynasty, when the last Pharaoh fled to Ethiopia about 340 B.C.
- V. The Egyptian Dynasties have now ended, and we are in firm history; the Macedonian Period after Alexander's conquest, 332 B.C., and the Dynasty of the Ptolemies, 323 B.C., to 30 B.C.; and the Roman Period 30 B.C., to 639 A.D., after which the Arab and Turkish conquests evolved modern Egypt and Muslim Egyptian civilization.

Having cleared the chronological background, we are now in a position to examine the data about Israel's stay in Egypt in order to see if we can get some idea of the time in Egyptian history when the contact took place. We saw that Dynasties XV to XVII were concerned with the Hyksos (or Shepherd) kings. They were foreigners from Asia, but it is not quite clear exactly what race they belonged to. Josephus supposed that they were Israelites, but that theory is untenable. It has been conjectured that they were Phoenicians, or Amalekites, or Hittites. In any case they were Semites. They founded a city called Zoan (Tanis) on one of the eastern branches of the Deltaic Nile, and were in close communication with the Hittite city of Hebron in the south of Palestine. That would be their own city, but their capital would probably be the same as the old Egyptian capital at Memphis when they were well-established, They are credited with having invented the Semitic alphabet of 22 letters, which (through the Phoenician) is the parent of all modern alphabets. Their invention probably helped in the process of converting old Egyptian Hieroglyphics from picturewriting to phonetic writing. As the Hyksos had close relations with Hebron in Palestine, and Abraham and Israel had settled in the Palestine country, a nexus would be established, by which the first Ismelites would be attracted to Zoan in Egypt. It must also be remembered that southern Palestine was a poor country and subject to frequent famines, while Deltaic Egypt was well-watered by the Nile, and suffered from famines only on the rare occasions when the Nile failed to inundate. The attraction of Egypt for the famine-stricken lands of the neighbourhood would therefore be strong. And this is proved in the story of Joseph and his brethren.

App. IV.] 406

Can we form even a rough idea of the dates of the Hyksos occupation? At the latest the Hyksos period ended about 1600 B.C. Renan is therefore probably not far wrong when he places the Hyksos occupation about 2000 B.C. Possibly a dage between 2000 B.C. and 1600 B.C. may be nearer the mark. If we suppose Joseph to have been the Wazīr of one of the Hyksos Pharaohs in the Delta, there is no great violence of probabilities in the suggestion, as Joseph and the Hyksos would be of kindred races. In that case Joseph's date would fall somewhere between the 19th and the 17th century B.C.

No reference to Joseph or Moses has been found in Egyptian records. The solitary reference to Israel (Ysruer, r=1) in a stele of Mer-en-Plah or Mineptah (asbut 1225 B.C.) seems to refer to Israel in Palestine rather than to Israel in Egypt. At this we need not wonder, as the Pharaoh who honoured Joseph was strictly speaking only a foreigner. When the reaction against the Hyksos took place and the Hyksos were overthrown, the Egyptians would not probably be anxious to remember the interrupted period or to preserve its memory. The Pharaoh who "knew not Joseph" looked upon the Israelites as contemptible slaves, not worthy of a thought except when they revolted, and then only as a despised race fit to be punished and kept in its place. It may be noticed, however, that the land of Goshen in which Israel dwelt and multiplied between the time of Joseph and the time of the Exodus, was a frontier tract of Egypt in the neighbourhood of the Hyksos city of Zoan in the Delta.

In seeking the approximate date of Moses, we must again look to the probabilities of Egyptian history. It was formerly the received opinion that Rameses II (say about 1250 B.C.) was the Pharaoh who oppressed Israel in Egypt, and that the exodus may have taken place under his immediate successor Mineptah (say about 1225 B.C.). The vigorous policy of Rameses II and the spirit of his time would be consistent with this view. But this date is almost certainly too late. There are indications pointing to the Israelites having already been settled in Canaan by this time. The Hyksos were turned out by the XVIIIth Dynasty, which established the New Empire in the 16th century B.C. Thothmes I (Tethmosis I, about 1540 B.C.) is more likely, in the first flush of his nationalist campaign, to have oppressed the Israelites and led to the exodus. His date fits in better. And his character also accords with the description in sacred history. He centralised the monarchy and made it a military autocracy. Militarism went with the lust of war and foreign conquest. He carried his arms as far as the Euphrates. Slaves, plunder, and foreign tribute made Egypt opulent and arrogant, and he added many monuments to Thebes. We can imagine him in his splendid Court, scarcely paying any attention to Moses, and viewing all his complaints with amusement mingled with contempt and impatience. But retribution was to come in God's good time. The men who followed God's message-Israel in the time of Solomon (a little after 1000 B.C., and more completely, the Muslims in the time of Hadhrat 'Umar and his successors-became lords of the East and the West (Q. vii. 137), and ancient Egypt's glories were eventually buried in the sands.

It was this same Pharaoh, Thothmes I, who took for his pattner on the Throne his daughter Hatshepshut. If Thothmes was the Pharaoh in Moses's story, we may suppose that it was this same celebrated strong-minded lady, Pharaoh's daughter, who found the child Moses (Exod. ii. 10), and brought him to her mother to be adopted into the family (Q. xxviii. 9). Like her father, she was a great supporter of the national cults. Moses was nurtured in the palace, and learned all the wisdom of the Egyptians, then reputed to be the wisest of the nations. With their own wisdom he foiled them. Thus in God's Plan the enemies of God and the enemies of Israel (Q. xx. 39) were the very ones who were used as instruments for the purposes of God and the salvation of Israel.

APPENDIX V.

Egyptian Religion and its Steps Towards Islam (see vii, 123, n. 1082)

This should be read along with Appendix IV in which a discussion on Egyptian chronology will be found.

God's Plan works silently but surely among all nations and at all times. In the most fantastic forms of religion appear gleams of His Light of Unity, calls to Islam, i.e., man's submission of his will to the Universal Will (see C. 7-10). From that point of view the religious history of Egypt from the most ancient times to the present day is most interesting, as is indeed the religious history of any country for which we have records of thought and development. That of India touches us dearly, but it is not directly relevant in a translation and exposition of the Qur-an. The religious history of Israel is just an earlier chapter of the history of Islam, and our doctors and commentators have written in great detail about it. Sometimes, I think, they have attached exaggerated importance to it. But none of them has paid much attention to Egypt from this point of view. Our people know very little of ancient Egypt and have shown little interest in it. It is a healthy sign that modern Egypt is showing much interest in it, and I hope that it will in time recognise in it a valuable unfoldment of religious ideas leading up to Islam.

The field of Egyptology is vast and is being extended every day by the diligent researches of archæologists and scholars. I do not propose to write an essay on Egyptian religion. But I wish to put forward a few considerations to show how God's Plan and Will worked steadily, in Egypt as elsewhere, towards a greater and greater appreciation, on the part of the people, of God's true nature and the real purpose of religion. The eternal light of Unity and Islam shines in many ways, and its rays give light to the spiritual aspirations of mankind in the darkest periods. With a gifted and artistic people like the Egyptians, their religious sense was led, in spite of many rebuffs, gradually to a purer and purer conception of man's eternal destiny, until Muḥammad's Message was preached to them in the very language in which it was originally preached in Arabia. And that language, Arabic, became and is now the language of the Egyptian people themselves.

In the pre-Dynastic Egypt there must already have been a great deal of development in the religious conceptions which afterwards showed such vitality in Dynastic Egypt. The Old Kingdom, including the Pyramid Period, shows that the Egyptian mind was obsessed with the certainty of life after death. It was also impressed with ideas of grandeur, order, and precision in the universe,—ideas which found eloquent expression in the grand conceptions and mathematical symmetry and simplicity of its architecture. Its massive dignity and repose are also reflected in the faces and poses of the figures in Egyptian statuary and painting. The unending expanse and the mystery of the desert seem to have acted on the Egyptian mind like a soporific and made it less active in mundane affairs and less practical in speculation than that of some other races of similar gifts. What mysteries are typified in the proportions of the Pyramids and their internal galleries and mysterious chambers, we shall probably never know with certainty. But a haunting sense of death and of the other world seems to oppress us in its atmosphere, as it does in the grim scenes of the "Book of the Dead". As Prof. T. E. Peet remarks (Cambridge Ancient History, vol. I, p. 354), "the Egyptian mind closely associated together men, gods, and the dead as merely three species of a single genus." Each of these it considered was subject to an irresistible force called Hibs or Heba: hence the force of Magic, Incantations to the Dead, and Rites and Formularies in daily life.

The Middle Kingdom brings us face to face with fresh ideas. We have no data with which to appraise the influence of foreign cults and foreign ideas during the period. But knowing, as we do, how Egypt acted as a magnet to the world at large and how many points of contact the Euphrates valley civilisations and the Nile valley civilisations had with each other, we may well suppose a broadening of Egyptian culture and civilisation in consequence. The Hyksos may have been Egyptian-ised in Egypt, but they could not have failed in their turn to contribute Syrian and Semitic ideas to Egypt. Among these were Monotheism, a patriarchal organisation of society, and an impatience of priestly or caste domination. These must have contrasted strangely with the chaotic Pantheon of countless deities, the lash-driven slaves living huddled in the cities, and the dedicated priests and richly endowed temples which catered for the privileged few, but lived by the sweat of the brow of the unprivileged many.

The New Empire was the flowering period of Egyptian genius and requires special consideration. The crudities of the old pre-Dynastic chaotic Pantheon had been in process of attrition through the centuries. Local gods tended to be absorbed in general gods. Some sort of rationalisation and spiritualisation had been going on throughout the Dynastic period. A process of systematisation and unification was now consciously undertaken. The primitive worship of animals had gradually been transformed into a system of animal-gods, with human bodies and animal heads. The human bodies represented the anthropomorphic tendencies, while the animal heads became types of qualities. For example, Anubis, with the dog emblem, was the door keeper, the messenger, the custodian of the dead. Apis, or Hapis, the sacred bull of Memphis, symbolised the renewal of life; he was identified with Osiris; there were great rejoicings when a new Apis (a black bull calif was found, and great mourning and costly burial when one died. Thoth, the god of wisdom and magic, was symbolised by an ibis, that stately, mute, mysterious bird of passage in the Nile valley.

In addition to the symbolism of animals, there was the worship of the great phenomena of nature, the Nile, the giver of agricultural bounties to Egypt, and the sun, which, as the god Ra, became the supreme god in Egypt. Then there was the myth of Osiris the good, who came to the earth for the benefit of mankind, was killed by the malice of Set, the power of evil, and reigns, as the judge of the dead in the lower world. His faithful wife Isis and his falcon-eyed son Horus figure in the mysteries. It is possible that the Osiris myth itself arose from a myth of the Nile or the sup.

App. V.] 410

There was a gradual perception of Monotheism, a realisation that God is One and above names. But the picturesque forms, festivals, and representations remained, and as the priests of all grades enjoyed special privileges and monopolised knowledge and learning, the people remained ignorant. They were exploited and practically enslaved. It was in the midst of such conditions that Moses came. He came to rescue his own people from the bondage of Egypt, a task which he performed. But it must not be forgotten that his mission was also addressed to the king of Egypt and to the people of Egypt. Here also he sowed the seed, although he did not reap the fruit. The king, the Pharaoh, was almost looked upon as a god, and looked upon himself as a god. He had to be humbled, and he was humbled. But God's purpose is not merely to humble. It is also to lead from darkness to light. If the particular Pharach was too hard-hearted to respond, his descendant in the fifth or sixth generation made a public confession of the One True God, as we shall see presently. What of the people? The wise men of Egypt, who were confronted with Moses, repented of their deceit, and saw the light by the grace of God, according to the Quranic narrative. Though they were threatened and perhaps martyred, their fate must have opened the eyes of the people and prepared them for the remarkable religious revolution which we shall now proceed to describe.

The Pharaoh of the Exodus was probably Thothmes I (about 1540 B.C.). The Pharaoh Amenophis IV (about 1350 B.C.) adopted the worship of the One Supreme, God as the State religion. He had been a high priest of the Sungod at Heliopolis. but had begun to look upon the multiplicity of gods in the Egyptian Pantheon as a blot on Egyptian religion. His original name had been Amen-hotep ;" Ammon is satisfied") as being devoted to Ammon the great god of the State religion at Thebes. He changed his name to Akhen-Aton ("Pious to Aton") and worshipped the Supreme God under the name of Aton. He abandoned the city of Thebes as being devoted to Ammon and founded a new city near the site of what is now Tel-al-Amarna, between Thebes and Memphis, and dedicated it to Aton the Supreme God. The clay tablets discovered at Tel-al-Amarna in 1887 throw much light on the relations of Egypt with her tributaries in Syria. The alphabet on the tablets is the Cuneiform of Assyria: the language is Semitic, and closely akin to Hebrew. Unfortunately the religious revolution of Amenophis IV did not last. The city was only inhabited twenty years. His second son-in-law and successor, Tutenkh-Aton, carried out a counter-revolution. He went back from Aton to Ammon, changed his own name to Tutenkh-Amen, and restored the temples at Karnak and the cult of Ammon. The recent finds from his tombs show what exquisite skill the artists and artisans of Egypt had then attained. The pure religion remained established on the throne only for two generations, but we need not suppose that it was rooted out of the minds of the people.

The later Dynasties, XXI to XXXI, saw the decay of Egypt as a Power. The Assyrian and Persian invasions ultimately extinguished the freedom of Egypt. With the coming of Alexander the Great (332 B.C.) and the foundation of the city of Alexandria, a new era dawned on the culture of Egypt. It mingled with Greek and other thought, and became cosmopolitan in nature. Already, in the time of Herodotus, the sensitive Greek mind had been impressed with the mystery and wisdom of Egypt. It now made the soil of Egypt cosmopolitan in religion, culture, and philosophy. The 411 [App. v.

Ptolemaic dynasty held a broadly tolerant attitude, and even imported the rites of Serapis from the Black Sea and assimilated him to Apis the Bull of Memphis. The new cult of Serapis spread widely over the East, and later, when Egypt came under the Roman Empire (30 B.C.), into the very heart of that Empire. The Serapion in Alexandria, with its famous library, became for a few centuries the true intellectual centre of the world. The very untavourable picture drawn of Egyptian religion in Lytton's Last Days of Pomphii must be referred to the somewhat hybrid cult of Isis as practised in foreign lands rather than to Egyptian religion generally. What course real Egyptian religion took in this period we have no means of judging accurately. In the light of earlier and later events we may suppose that the steady honest industrious Egyptian peasantry and people went on pursuing the even tenor of their career with the same mystic longing for a practical religion which was preparing them for purer forms of worship and a juster distribution of the fruits of labour.

Alexandria in the first centuries of the Christian era was resounding with the shouts of every kind of philosophy and the teaching of every kind of religious sect, from East and West, North and South, but mainly from the East, which has ever been a nursery of religious ideas. A special quarter was assigned to the Jews in the city. It became the true centre of Hellenised Judaism, and may claim Josephus among its disciples. Noe-Pythagoreanism, Neo-Platonism, Gnoaticism, and Manichæism found a home there. Mithuaism, which was so widely spread in the Roman Empire, especially in the army, in the first three centuries A.D., was probably represented on its philosophic side in Alexandria. Its intermixture of races, creeds, philosophies, and religions, produced an atmosphere of chaos, which was not cleared until the advent of Islam.

But from a religious point of view our greatest interest in Egypt in the first seven centuries of the Christian era is in the development of Christianity itself. It is difficult to say when exactly Christianity began to displace the older Egyptian cults. But when Christianity was well-established, we find Egypt one of its most important centres. But the new Christianity which was evolved out of the ruins of Christ's simple teaching had four distinct attitudes towards organisation, speculative doctrine. asceticism and mysticism. '(1) The native Egyptian or Coptic Church was contemplative, ascetic, and mystical. Monasticism became so rampant that it seriously affected the growth of population and degraded the position of women. (2) The Alexandrian school developed on Greek lines, - political, ambitious, speculative, philosophical, and liable to break up into numerous sects and heresies, each party trying to dominate and put down the others as heretical by the strong arm of the law. (3) The Bishop of Rome, when the seat of the Empire was transferred to Constantinople in 330, gradually developed political power in Italy. He inherited the Roman genius for organisation, and the invasion of the Germanic tribes gave him an opportunity not only of extending the Roman Catholic Church over the whole of Central and Western Europe, but of establishing the Church as superior to the state when the Papacy became an established political power. (4) The Orthodox Eastern Church, and all the sects which it fought in the East, tended ultimately to vanish before the advance of Islam. Had it not been for the vast Slav territories over which it obtained sway, in and around Russia and afterwards in Siberia, the Orthodox Eastern Church would have been reduced to a negligible position like the Coptic Church in Egypt. With pretensions to rule the State, it had yet become, in Kingsley's words in "Hypatia" the "stipendiary slave-official" of the Empire, sharing in all its effete corruption.

App. v.] 412

But we are anticipating. Before the Roman Catholic Church parted from the Orthodox Eastern Church, the united Church fought with and suppressed many so-called "heresies", some of which represented the views of primitive Christianity, and the scence of many of these doctrinal fights was in Egypt. The one that interests ns most is Arianism Arius was an Alexandrian Presbyter early in the fourth century A D, and fought hard for the doctrine of Unity, the simple conception of the Eternal God, as against all the hair splitting and irrational distinctions in the nature and persons of the Godhead, which finally crystallised in the doctrine of the Trinity, propounded and maintained with much personal acrimony by Athanasius. Athanasius himself was born in Alexandria and became Bishop of Alexandria. He may be counted as the father of Orthodoxy (as now understood in Christianity) and the real systematiser of the doctrine of the Trinity-" three in one and one in three." Up to the third century A.D. the Unitarians had been in the majority in the Christian Church, though subtle metaphysicians had started disputes as to the meaning of "God becoming man," the Logos or the Word, the Power of God, whether the Father and the Son were of the same substance or of similar substance, whether the Son could be said to have been created by the Father, and numerous questions of that kind. They do not interest us now, but they rent the Christian world into many jarring sects until the mission of our Holy Apostle dissipated the mists and re-established the doctrine of Unity on a firm and rational basis.

As I have said, the Christian Churches in the East, as well as the Germanic nations which came later into the fold, adhered to Unity although not in the pure form which was made clear in the Holy Qur an. The issue was joined between Arius and Athanasius, and the first General Council of the Christian Church, that of Nicæa (in Bithynia) in 325, decided against Arius and unitarianism. The controversy, however, still continued to rage until 381, when the Council of Constantinople, called by the Emperor Theodosius the Great, confirmed the Nicene doctrine of the Trinity and declared it to be the only Orthodox one. Though controversies, protests, and persecutions continued long afterwards, we may take that date as the date of the fall of Christianity. Even in Western Christianity, as late as 496, Clovis the Frankish king was the only Christian sovereign sophisticated enough to follow the subtle doctrine of the Trinity. The others were brought into line by political power later.

The Christian creed became narrower and narrower, less and less rational, more and more inclined to use earthly weapons to suppress the eternal truth of God. In 415 the Jews were expelled from Alexandria. In the same year and in the same city the beautiful, modest, eloquent philosopher and mathematician. Hypatia, was murdered,—an outrage against both rationalism and the intellectual and religious position of woman in human society. The murder was a particularly brutal one. She was dragged from her chariot in the streets, stripped naked, and suffered a lingering death in a Christian Church. Her body was then cut to pieces and burned. The worst feature of the crime was the complicity of the Patriarch of Alexandria, who was not only the chief religious dignitary of the Orthodox Church in Egypt but the de facto repository of political power. Meanwhile the native Christian community—the Coptic Church,—which had all along clung to the Monophysite doctrine, a corrupt form of Unitarianism, was out of the pale, and its members were held down as a depressed class by their Orthodox brethren. The latter also, basking in official sunshipe, collected power and property into their own hands. As Kingsley remarks in Hypatia, the Egyptian Church "ended as a mere chaos of idolatrous sects, persecuting each other for metaphysical propositions, which, true or false, were equally heretical in their mouths because they used them as watchwords for division." The social conditions produced an amount of discontent, for which the redress came only with the advent of Islam

It was for this reason that the Copts and the inhabitants of Egypt generally welcomed the forces of Islam under 'Amr as deliverers in 639 A.D. The power was taken over by the victorious army of Islam from Cyrus (called Muqauqas in Arabic through the Coptic), the Patriarch of Alexandria, but it was used by the army of deliverance to enlarge the liberties of the Egyptians, to admit them into the universal brotherhood of Islam, and to improve the resources of the country for the benefit of the people. Except a negligible remnant of conservatives the Egyptians as a nation accepted the religion, the language, and the institutions of the Arabs and embarked on a new course of history, which it is unnecessary to follow further in this note.

It should be remarked, however, that what happened in Egypt happened generally in western Asia. The jarring sectarian irrational religions gave place before the triumphant religion of Unity and Brotherhood, and the Byzantine Empire receded and receded until it was swept out of existence. The feeble efforts made by the Emperor Leo the Isaurian in 726-731 to restrict the use of images were a reflection of the puritanical zeal of Islam. But they did not succeed in the area of his authority. and they completely alienated the Papacy from the Eastern Orthodox Church. The Bishop of Rome had been consolidating his power, and in the person of Gregory I (590-604) had already assumed the control of Italy and was seeking the aid and support of the Barbarian invaders who eventually became the pillars of the Papacy. The final and open rupture between the Orthodox Eastern Church and the Roman Catholic Church took place in 1054. But the earlier dates are remarkable. After the birth of the Holy Apostle of Islam the disruption of the Orthodox Christian Church (which had now become an anachronism) began. When Islam was making its triumphant march in the 8th century after Christ, the original (Greek) Church began to take some steps to put its own house in order. But it had lost its mission, and the new Islamic people took its place. The Western Church has since worked on definitely new lines, and its offshoots among the Protestant Churches have, consciously or unconsciously, been influenced by the broad principles of Islam. What the course of future religion may be and how God will unfold His All-Wise Plan it is not given to us mortals to know. In the Islamic Brotherhood many changes have taken place and are taking place. Egypt, in spite of her many vicissitudes in the Islamic period, is in the intellectual forefront among the Arabic speaking nations of Islam. pray that her people may be guided, through their educational, cultural, and religious channels, to work with a new spirit for the progress of Islam and the glory of God. .

INTRODUCTION TO SURA VIII (Anfal)

In the previous Introductions to the Soras we have shown how each Sora is a sten or gradation in the teaching of the Qur-an. The first seven Suras, comprising a little less than one-third of the Qur-an, form a gradation, sketching the early spiritual history of man and leading up to the formation of the new Ummat or Community of the Holy Apostle. Now we begin another gradation, consolidating that Ummat and directing us as to various phases in our new collective life.

In this chapter we have the lessons of the Battle of Badr enforced in their larger aspects: (1) the question of war booty; (2) the true virtues necessary for fighting the good fight; (3) victory against odds; (4) clemency and consideration for one's own and for others in the hour of victory.

As regards booty taken in battle, the first point to note is that that should never be our sim in war. It is only an adventitious circumstance, a sort of windfall. Secondly, no soldier or troop has any inherent right to it. A righteous war is a community affair, and any accessions resulting from it belong to God, or the community or Cause. Thirdly, certain equitable principles of division should be laid down to check human greed and selfishness. A fifth share goes to the Commander, and he can use it at his discretion; for his own expenses, and for the relief of the poor and suffering, and the orphans and widows (viii. 41). The remainder was divided, according to the Prophet's practice, not only among those who were actually in the fight physically, but all who were in the enterprise, young and old, provided they loyally did some duty assigned to them. Fourthly, there should be no disputes, as they interfere with internal discipline and harmony.

These principles are followed in the best modern practice of civilised nations. All acquisitions of war belong absolutely to the Sovereign as representing the commonwealth. In the distribution of booty not only the actual captors but also the "ioint captors" and the "constructive captors" share. See Sir R. Phillimore's International Law (1885), vol. 3, pp. 209-10, 221-24.

As regards the military virtues, which are the types of virtues throughout life, we are shown by an analysis of the incidents of Badr how, against the greatest odds, God's help will give the victory if men are fighting not for themselves but for the sacred Cause of God. And directions are given for the treatment of prisoners and for maintaining the solidarity of the Muslim community.

The date of this Sura is shortly after the battle of Badr, which was fought on Friday, the 17th of Ramadhan in the second year of the Hijra. A short account of the battle is given in n. 352 to iii. 13.

Summary .- All booty is really at the disposal of God's Apostle under directions from God. Men of faith accent and obey these directions with cheerfulness. Victory and the prize of victory come from God, as was proved at Badr (viii, 1-19, and C. 89).

Obedience and intelligent discipline, zeal, faith, and gratitude to God, are the true passports to success and protection from the assaults of evil. Evil will be piled up with evil and destroyed (viii. 20-37, and C. 90).

The battle of Badr was a testing time, and showed how virtue and valour can conquer against odds. Steadfastness and obedience; faith, courage, and fearlessness; due preparation and free expenditure of resources and energy ;-these are expected from you by God, and His help is all-sufficient (viii. 38-64, and C. 91).

Even tenfold odds against you do not count if you are fighting for truth and faith against enemies of truth and faith; but remember clemency and consideration in the hour of victory (viii. 65-75, and C. 92).

C. 89 .- Fight the good fight, but dispute not (viii, 1-19.) About the prize : that is for God To give. Men of faith act and obey. 'Tis nobler to fight for Truth Than to seek worldly gain. To the pure in faith God will give The mind and the resources to conquer. They but fight, with no thought Of ever turning back : the victory Should be ascribed to God, not men.

Stra VIII.

Anfal, or the Spoils of War.

In the name of God, Most Gracious,

- 1. FEhey ask thee "" concerning (Things taken as) spoils of war. Say: "(Such) spoils are At the disposal of God "" And the Apostle: so fear God, and keep straight The relations between yourselves: Obey God and His Apostle, If ye do believe."
- 2. For, Believers are those Who, when God is mentioned, Feel a tremor in their hearts, And when they hear His Signs rehearsed, find Their laith strengthened, And put (all) their trust In their Lord:
- Who establish regular prayers And spend (freely) out of The gifts We have given Them for sustenance: 1200
- 4. Such in truth are the Believers; They have grades of dignity With their Lord, and forgiveness. And generous sustenance;

يَتَكُونَكَ عَنِ الأَمْنَ إِنَّ قُلِ الْأَمْنَ اللَّهُ قُلِ الْأَمْنَ الْ
 يَدِوَا لِرَسُولِ مَا مَنْشُوا اللَّهَ وَأَشْدِلُوا ذَاتَ
 بَيْنِكُمْ وَأَلِيسِهُ وَاللَّهَ وَرَسُولُهُ وَ إِن
 شَخْنُهُ مُ مُؤْمِنِينَ

۞إِنَّنَا ٱلْمُغْيُونَ الَّذِينَ لِذَا دُكِرَاللَّهُ وَمِكَ قُلُونُهُمُ كَاذَا تُسلِينَ عَلَيْهِمْ وَالنَّشُورُ لَادَنْهُمُ أَيْمَنَا وَعَلَى تَرْبُمُ بَنِوَكُلُونَ بَنِوَكُلُونَ

۞ الَّذِينَ مُعَيِمُونَ الصَّلَاقَ وَمَثَا رَزَقْتُنَكُمُّرُ يُنطِعُونَ

۞ اَوْلَتَهِكَ هُوُ ٱلْمُؤْمِنُونَ خَتَا لَّمُوْدَرَجَتُ عِندَرَيْهِمْ وَمَغْفِرَةٌ وَرِنْفَ صَحَرِيهُ

1178. The occasion was the question of the division of the booty after the battle of Badr. See Introduction to this Sūra.

1179. Booty taken in a hawful and just war does not belong to any individual. If he fought for such accessory terwards, he fought from wrong motives It belongs to the Cause, in this case the Cause of God, as administered by His Apostle. Any portion given out to individuals are accessory gifts, windfalls from the bounty of the Commander. The chief thing is to remain staunch to the Cause of God, and have no differences among those who stand for the Cause. Our intermal relations must be kept straight: they must not be disturbed by cupidity or worldly considerations of gain, for any windfalls of this kind should be otitisfe our calculations.

1180. Sustemancs: again in both the literal and the metaphorical sense. The object is to warn offern the love of booty and worldly wealth. Why do we want these? To all true Believers God gives generous sustenance in any case, in both senses, but expectally in the spiritual sense, for it is coupled with forgiveness and grades of dignity before God, in the next verse.

- Just as 181 thy Lord ordered thee Out of thy house in truth, Even though a party among The Believers disliked it,
- 6. Disputing with thee concerning The truth after it was made Manifest, as if they were Being driven to death And they (actually) saw it." 1981
- 7. Behold! God promised you
  One of the two (enemy) parties, "183
  That it should be yours:
  Ye wished that the one
  Unarmed should be yours,
  But God willed
  To justify the Truth
  According to His words,
  And to cut off the roots
  Of the Unbelievers:—
- That He might justify Truth And prove Falsehood false, Distasteful though it be To those in guilt.

كَمَا آفْرَعِكَ رَبُّكَ مِن بَيْدِكَ
 وَيعِكَ مِن الْمُؤْمِنِ مَن الْمُؤْمِنِ مَن اللّهَ الْمُؤْمِن وَمُحْمَ اللّهَ اللّهِ اللّهُ اللّهِ اللّهُ الللّهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ ال

1181, Just as: the comparison takes us back to the first clause in verse 4: " such in truth are the Bellevers"—just as thy Lord also is just and true in ordering thee out to fight against heavy odds, when the alternative was to fight against the unarmed caravan which would have given the abundant booty almost without a fight. To appreciate the full meaning, remember that the word deep, translated "truth" means also "right," "just," what is becoming." The True Belevers believe in truth and do right in obedience to God's command. So God also, in asking them to fight against odds, is not asking them to rush to destruction, but is providing them with an opportunity of vindicating the truth in scorn of worldly advantage. And He made good His promise hy giving them victory.

1182, In verse 6 we have again the word "truth": some of the Believers disputed concerning "the truth": they did not feel sure that the course recommended was the true and right course. They thought it would be certain destruction: they saw death almost staring them in the face.

1183. Just before Badr there were two alternatives before the Muslims in Medina, to save themsolves from being overwhelmed by the Meccan Quraish with all their resources from the rich Syrian trade. One, which had least danger for the time being, and also promised much booty, was to fall upon the Quraish caravan returning from Syria to Mecca richly laden, and led by AbB Sufyan with only 40 men unarmed. From a worldly point of view this was the safest and most lucrative course. The other alternative, which was actually adopted on the recommendation of the Apostle by the guidance of God, was to leave the booty alone and march out bodily against the well-armed and well-equipped Quraish army of 1,000 men coming from Mecca. The Mustims had no more than 300 men, lit-armed, to oppose to this force. But if they could defeat it, it would shake the selfish autocracy which was in possession of Mecca. By God's help they won a splendid victory, and the standard of Truth was established, never to be lowered again.

- Remember ye implored The assistance of your Lord, And He answered you:
   "I will assist you
   With a thousand of the angels, Ranks on ranks," "**
- 10. God made it but a message
  Of hope, and an assurance
  To your hearts: (in any case) 1189
  There is no help
  Except from God:
  And God is Exalted in Power,
  Wise.

SECTION 2.

- 11. The member He covered you With a sort of drowsiness, 118 To give you calm as from Himself, and he caused Rain to descend on you 118 From heaven, to clean you Therewith, to remove from you The stain of Satan, 118 To strengthen your hearts, And to plant your feet Firmly therewith.
- 12. Remember thy Lord inspired
  The angels (with the message):
  "I am with you: give
  Firmness to the Believers:

() إذْ بُوح رَبُكَ إِلَى الْكَاتِ حَسَاءً أَنِي
 مَعْمُ فَتَنِينُوا الّذِينَ امْنُواْ

1184. Cf. iii. 123, 125, 126. The number of angels, a thousand at Badr and three thousand and flund, is probably not to be taken literally, but to express a strength at least equal to that of the enemy.

1185. All help comes ultimately from God. In special cases it may take special forms to put heart into us, and to fit in with our feelings and our psychology.

1186. Cf. iii. 134 for Uhud. Calm (presence of mind) is essential in battle and in all posts of danger. If the mind is too much in a state of excitement, it cannot carry out a well-considered or well-concerted plan. This spirit of calm confidence on the part of the Muslims won against the blustering violence of the Quraish.

1187. The rain was welcome for many reasons. (1) Water was scarce both for drinking and administrations; (2) the Muslim band, without baggage or equipment or comforts, found that their thirst aggravated their fatigue; (3) the sand was loose, and the rain consolidated it and enabled them "to plant their feet firmly."

1188. "State of Satan": both literally and figuratively. Dirt is physically a symbol of evil, and the Muslims were particular about ablutions before prayer. But the rain also refreshed their spirits and removed any lurking doubts in their minds (suggestions of the Evil One) that victory might be impossible in such adverse circumstances.

I will instil terror Into the hearts of the Unbelievers : Smite ye above their necks And smite all their Finger-tips off them," "188

- 13. This because they contended Against God and His Apostle: If any contend against God And His Apostle, God Is strict in punishment.
- 14. Thus (will it be said): "Taste ye Then of the (punishment): For those who resist God, Is the penalty of the Fire."
- 15. ye who believe! When ye meet
  The Unbelievers
  In hostile array, 1000
  Never turn your backs
  To them.
- 16. If any do turn his back
  To them on such a day—
  Unless it be in a stratagem
  Of war, or to retreat
  To a troop (of his own)—
  He draws on himself
  The wrath of God,
  And his abode is Hell,—
  An evil refuge (indeed)!
- 17. It is not ye who Slew them; it was God:

سَأُلْقِ فِهُ قُلُوبِ الْذِنَ كَفَرُوا الرُّعُ فَاضْرِيْوا فَوْقَ الْأَغْنَانِ وَاضْرِيْوا مِنْهُمْ كُلِّ بَنَانِ ٤ ذَلِكَ إِنَّهُمْ شَاقُوا الله وَرَسُولُهُ وَهَن مُنْسَاقِ الله وَرَسُولُهُ وَالْسَلْقَ شَدِيْهِ الله عَرَسُولُهُ وَالْمَلَاقِينَ وَذَلِكُمْ فَدُوفُوهُ وَأَنَّ لِلْكَلِيدِينَ عَنَاتِ النَّارِ وَيَأْتُهُمُ اللَّهِ مِنَ النَّهُمُ اللَّهُ اللَّهُ اللهُ

1189. The vulnerable parts of an armed man are above the neck. A blow on the neck, face, or head, doishes him off. If he has armour it is difficult to get at his heart. But if his hands are put out of action, he is unable to wield his sword or lance or other weapon, and easily becomes a prisoner.

1190 The laws of spiritual fight are exactly similar to those enforced by military virtue and discipline. Meet your enemy fairly and squarely, not rashly, but after due preparation. Zeh/an in the text (meeting in hostile array) implies a slow and well-planned proceeding towards a hostile array. When once in combat, carry it through: there is no room for second thoughts. Death or victory should be the motto of every soldier: it may be death for himself individually, but in he has faith, there is triumph in either case for his cause. Two exceptions are recognised: (1) reculer pour mixes sessier, to go back in order to jump forward; or to deceive the enemy by a feint; (2) if an individual or body is, by the chances of battle, isolated from his own force, he can fall back on his force in order to fight the battle. There is no virtue in mere single-handedness. Each individual must use his fife and his resources to the best advantage for the common cause.

When thou threwest (a handful) 1981 Of dust), it was not Thy act, but God's: In order that He might Test the Believers By a gracious trial 1989 From Himself: for God Is He Who heareth

18. That, and also because God is He Who makes feeble The plans and stratagems Of the Unbelievers.

And knoweth (all things).

19. (O Unbelievers!) if ye prayed For victory and judgment, 199 Now hath the judgment Come to you: if ye desist (From wrong), it will be Best for you: if ye return (To the attack), so shall We. Not the least good Will your forces be to you Even if they were multiplied: For verily God Is with those who believe!

And forgive you your sins and shortcomings.
Ever keep in remembrance His mercies and grace.

They will be hurled together to destruction.

<sup>1191.</sup> When the battle began, the Holy Apostle prayed, and threw a handful of dust or sand at the enemy, symbolical of their rushing blindly to their fate. This had a great psychological effect. Every act in the battle is ascribed to God, as it was in His cause, and it was not undertaken except by His command

<sup>1192</sup> Numerically the odds against the Muslims were three to one. In other ways they were at a disadvantage; of arms and equipment they had but little, while the enemy were well-found; they were inexperienced, while the Quraish had brought their foremost variors. In all this there was a test, but the test was accompanied by gracious favours of countless value; their Commander was one in whom, they had prefect faith, and for whom-they were ready to lay down their lives; the rain refreshed them; their spirit was unshaken; and they were fighting in God's cause. Thus the trial or test became titled a bessign.

<sup>1193</sup> Fath=victory, decision, judgment. The Quraish in Mecca had prayed for victory; they were confident that their superior numbers, equipment, and experience would be decisive. With a play on the word, they are told that the decision had come, and the victory—but not in the sense they had hoped for!

1194. Cf. il. 93.

1196. There are two points to note. (1) Note that after God and His Apostle are mentioned, the pronous and verb in the next clause are singular: everything that God's Apostle put forward as an injunction came by inspiration from God: the Apostle made his will coincide completely with God's will. (2) We are asked actively to give our response in deed and life to the call of duty and conscience, for that call leads to real life, the life eternal, even though it may apparently mean in this world the loss of things that make life dear or the loss of life itself. If we refer this to Jihad, i.e., aghting in and for the Cause, both literally and metaphorically, the meaning becomes quite clear.

1197. If the human heart is refractory and refuses to obey the call of God, that is not the end of the matter. God has to be reckneed with. The refusal may be because there was some pet human scheme which the heart of man was not willing to give up for God's Cause. Will that scheme come to fruition by refusing to serve the higher Cause? By no means. Man proposes, but God disposes. If the scheme or motive was perfectly secret from men, it was not secret from God. The heart is the innermost seat of man's affections and desires; but between this seat and man himself is the presence of the Onnipresent.

- 25. And fear tumult or oppression, which affecteth not in particular (Only) those of you who do wrong: And know that God Is strict in punishment.

  That we might be grateful.

1198. Fitnot has many meanings: (1) the root meaning is trial or temptation, as in ii. 102 and viii. 18; (2) an analogous meaning is trial or punishment, as in v. 74; (3) tumult or oppression, as in ii. 193; and here; and in viii 39; (4) there is here (viii. 25) the further shade of meaning suggested; discord, sedition, civil war.

This warning against internal discord or turnuls was very necessary in the Civil Wars of early Islam, and was never more necessary than it is now. For it affects innocent and guilty alike, 1199. On the immediate occasion the Muslims were reminded that they were a small band in Merca; despised and rejected; living in a state of insecurity for their persons, their lives, their property, and those of their dependants; persecuted and exiled and how by the grace of God they found a safe asylum in Medina, how they found friends and helpers, how their many needs were cared for an how at length they gathered strength and numbers enough to defeat the forces of godlessness, injustice, and oppression.

But for every individual, in some form or other, the lesson applies. His spiritual life begins humbly; he is despised and laughed at, perhaps persecuted and shut out from ordinary privileges open to all; but God gives him strength; friends spring up for him; and he is sustained until his highest spiritual desires are gradually fulfilled.

1200. Trusts may be of various kinds: (1) property, goods, credit, etc.; (2) plans, confidences, secrets, etc.; (6) knowledge, talents, opportunities, etc., which we are expected to use for our fellowmen. Men may betray the trust of God and His Aposile by misusing property, or abusing the conditioner spoosed in them, or the knowledge or talents given to them. On that special occasion, when the plans for the protection of God's worshippers against annihilation were of special importance, the Apostle's trust and confidence had to be guarded with special care. Occasions for scrupiously respecting the trust and confidence of our fellow-men occur every day no uri life, and few of us can claim perfection in this respect. Hence the special distinction of the man of God, who earned the citie of Al-Awis, the one who was true to every trust reposed in him.

And your progeny Are but a trial; tell And that it is God With whom lies Your highest reward.

1201. A big family—many sons—was considered a source of power and strength: iii, 10, 116. So in English, a man with many children is said to have his "quiver full": Cf, Paalms, cxxvii, 45; "As arrows are in the hands of a mighty man, so are the children of thy youth. Happy is the man that hat his quiver full of them they shall not be ashamed, but they shall speak with the enemies in the gate." So with property and possessions: they add to a man's dignity, power, and influence. But both possessions and a large-family are a temptation and a trial. They may turn out to be a source of spiritual downfall, if they are mishandled, or if the love of them excludes the love of God.

1202. Cf. fi. 53 and fi. 185. The battle of Badr is called the Furqān in Muslim theology, becauseit was the first trial of strength by battle, in Islam, between the powers of good and evil. Evil was defeated, and those who had ne fall faith were tested and sorted out from those who had not faith enough to follow the banner of Faith See also viii. 41 and n. 1710.

1203. The plots against Mustafa in Mecca aimed at three things. They were not only foiled, but God's wonderful working turned the tables, and brought good out of evil in each case. (I) They tried to hold the Apostle in subjection in Mecca by putting pressure on his uncles, relatives, and friends. But the more they persecuted, the more the little Muslim community grew in faith and numbers. (2) They tried to injure or slay him. But the wondeful example of his humitty, perseverance, and fearlessness furthered the cause of Islam. (3) They tried to get him and his out of their homes. But they found it new home in Medina, from which they eventually reconquered not only Mecca, but Arabia and the world.

- 33. But God was not going
  To send them a Penalty
  Whilst thou wast amongst them;
  Nor was He going to send it
  Whilst they could ask for pardon
- 34. But what plea have they
  That God should not punish Them, when they keep out
  (Men) from the Sacred Mosque—
  And they are not its guardians?
  No men can be its guardians
  Except the righteous; but most Of them do not understand.
- 35. Their prayer at the House (Of God) is nothing but Whistling and clapping of hands: (Its only answer can be). "Taste ye the Penalty Because ye blasphemed."
- 36. Per Unbelievers spend their wealth
  To hinder (men) from the path
  Of God, and so will they Continue to spend; but
  In the end they will have (Only) regrets and sighs;

ٱلْكُتِّ مِنْ عِنْ مِنْ فَأَمْطِهُ عَلَيْنَا حِيَاتَةً

1205. This was actually a challenge thrown out by the Infidels in Mecca, not seriously but as a taunt. The answer is in the two following verses. God punishes in His own good time, not according to the Inolish and frivolous taunts of the Unbelievers. While the Holy Apostic was with them, by—the Mercy of the Worlds—conferred a certain amount of immunity to them. There were also other Muslims, just men who asked for forgiveness. And God keeps the door of repentance and forgiveness open to all as long as they make it possible. But let them not be pusted up with pride, or think that they have lasting immunity. What became of AND Jahl? He and some of his greatest warriors were slain at Badr. The little autocratic clique that prevented Muslims from access to the Sacred Mosque had their Nemesis not long afterwards. They pretended to be its guardians. But were they? Could they be? Only the rightneous could be true guardians to God's places of worship, and particularly to the Central House of the Ka'ba. It was to be a place of pure worship, while their idolatrous worship was mere mummery—whistling and clapping of hands. All false worship advertises itself by noise and unseemly riot; it is said that the Pagans used to go naked round the Ka'ba.

At length ' will be overcome:
And the I evers will be battle of Badr brought to an issue fight between Truth and Unbelief.

Not for spoils was it won, nor by numbers;
But by courage and planning, union of wills,
And pooling of strength and resources,—
Above all by the help of God,
Whose help is ever all sufficient.

<sup>1206.</sup> It is only when matters are brought to an issue that evil is separated distinctly from the good. Then evil consorts with evil, and good with good. The evil will be piled into a frap. When the crup is full, the punishment will come. There will be no instake about it. The good should not be discouraged, because in fighting against them, all forces of evil join together and pool their resources together. The more they do so, the easier is the final arbitrament. It is all in God's Plan. 1207. Cf. ii. 193 and n.

<sup>1209.</sup> If they case from fighting and from the persecution of truth, God judges them by their actions and their motives, and would not wish that they should be harassed with further hostility. But if they refuse all terms, the rightenus have nothing to fear: God will help and protect them.

1209. The rule is that a fifth share is set apart for the Imam (the Commander) and the rest is divided among the forces. The fifth share reserved is expressed to be for God and the Apostle, and for chartable purposes for those to whom charty is due. Ultimately everything is at the disposal of God and His Apostle: viii 1: but four-fifths are divided, and only one-fifth is retained for the special purposes. The Imam has discretion as to the mode of division. In the Apostle's life time a certain portion was assigned to the Apostle and bit near relatives.

1210. Testing: Furqua: Criterion between right and wrong, decision between the forces of faith and unbelief. The battle of Badr is called by this name. See viii 29 and n. 1202.

1211, God's power is shown in the events detailed in the three verses following (vv. 42-44), leading to the complete victory of the Muslims over the pagan Quraish.

1212. The little Islamic force from Medina went out to meet the big Meccan army, and they met on the two sides of a valley at Badr, while the Quraish caravan was on lower ground towards the sea, about 3 miles from Badr.

1213. They were all at cross purposes. The caravan was making for Mecca, but searcely thought it could get there. The Quraish force was trying to save the caravan and then annihilate the Muslims. The Muslims had decided to let the caravan alone but attack the Quraish army from Mecca, which they thought was going to be small, but which turned out to be big, more than three times their number. Yet the two forces met, precisely at the spot and at the time when a decisive battle should take place and the Muslims dispose of the proteosions of the Meccans. If they had carefully planned a mutual appointment, they could not have carried it out more precisely.

On the Muslim side the few martyrs knew that the victory was theirs and those who survived the battle enjoyed the fruits of the victory. On the pages side, both those who died and those who lived knew fully the issue joined. Even psychologically both sides went in with full determination to decide the issue.

But (thus ye met),
That God might accomplish

That those who died might

Might live after a Clear Sign (Had been given). And verily God is He who heareth And knoweth (all things).

<sup>1214.</sup> The Muslim army, though they knew their worldly disadvantage, did not realise the full odde against them. The Meccans came exulting in any class, and they despised the contemptible little force opposed to them. Even though they thought the Muslim force was twice as great as it was (ii. 13), still that number was contemptible, when taken with its poor equipment. Both these psychological mistakes subserved the main Plan, which was to be first matter to a decisive issue, whether the Pagans of Mecca were to continue their arrogant oppression, or the religion of God was to be established in freedom and honour.

Trust in God brings its own reward: our eyes are opened, and we see how great, good, and wise is the Chersher of the Worlds. Others may sneer and despise. But the blessing of God keeps our minds fresh and our hearts contented.

1219. In contrast to the taunt against those who trust in God, "that their religion has misled them, is shown the terrible punishment, after death, of those who laughed at Faith.

1220. The punishment is shown to be due to their own deeds of wrong, because God is never unjust to the least of His servants.

1221. God bestows His grace freely, but He never withdraws it arbitrarily. Before He changes their state and circumstances, an actual state of rebellion and contumacy has arisen in their own souls, which brings about its inevitable punishment.

1222. These words from the address of the angels are quoted again, in order to add the comment that follows. Note that in verse 51, the words were that they rejected the Signs of God and were pusished: here the words are that they treated the Signs as false and were destroyed;—a higher degree of guilt deserved a severer punishment.

1223. In viii, 22 we were warned against "the worst of beasts in the sight of God", who do not make use of their faculties of hearing, speaking and understanding, in the service of God, and in fact missues their faculties to blaspheme God. The same brute creatures are shone here in another light; they are faithless both to God and man.

1224. The immediate occasion was the repeated treachery of the Banu Quraiga after their treaties with the Muslims. But the general lesson remains, as noted in the two following verses. Treachery in war is doubly wrong, for it endangers so many lives. Such treachery should be punished in such a way that it gets no chance again. Not only the actual perpetrators but those who follow their standard should be rendered powerless. And the broken treaty should be denounced so that the innocent party ran at least fight on equal terms. From actual physical warfare we can carry the same tesson to spiritual warfare. A truce or understanding is possible with those who respect definite principles, not with those who have no principles and are merely out for oppression and wickedness.

- 60. Against them make ready

  Of your power, including 1253

  That hath strengthened thee
  With his aid and
  With (the company of)

- 63. And (moreover) He hath put
  Affection between their hearts:

1225. The immediate occasion of this injunction was the weakness of cavairy and appointments of war in the early fights of Islam. But the general meaning follows. In every fight, physical, moral, or spiritual, arm yourself with the best weapons and the best arms against your enemy, so as to instit wholesome respect into him for you and the Cause you stand for.

1226. There are always lurking enemies whom you may not know, but whom God knows. It is your duty to be ready against all, for the sacred Cause under whose banner you are fighting.

1227. Be always ready and put all your resources into your Cause. You do not do so in vain, God's reward will come in various forms. He knows all, and His reward will always be more generous than you can possibly deserve.

1228. While we must always be ready for the good fight lest it be forced on us, even in the midst of the fight we must always be ready for peace if there is any inclination towards peace on the other side. There is no merit merely in a fight by itself. It should be a joyful duty not for itself, but to establish the reign of peace and righteousness and God's Law.

1229. In working for peace there may be a certain risk of treachery on the other side. We must take that risk: because the man of God has God's aid to count upon and the strength of the united body of the righteous.

Not if thou hadst spent All that is in the earth, Couldst thou have produced That affection, but God Hath done it: for He Is Exalted in might, Wise. 183

SECTION 9.

65. Apostle! rouse the Believers To the fight. If there are Twenty amongst you, patient And persevering, they will Vanquish two hundred: if a hundred, They will vanquish a thousand Of the Unbelievers: for these

Are a people without understanding. 1830

1230. On the immediate occasion, the greatest miracle and most wonderful working of God's grace was the union of hearts produced among the jarring, war-like, excitable elements of Atabia under the gentle, firm, and wite guidance of Muhammad, the Apostice of God. At all times we must pray to God for this gift above all,—union, understanding, and pure and sincere affection among those who take God's name. With it there is build into the strength and success. Without it there is buildiation, slavery, and moral degradation. There may be many causes of difference and, dispute. The reconciliation can only come from the glory and wisdom of God.

1231. The Bellowrs: mere lip-profession of belief, or even the kind of belief that does not result in action, is not enough. To those whose belief is so sincere that it results in complete trust in God and in learless action in Hs service, the consequences on this earth do not matter. God's good pleasure is enough for them.

1232. In a fight, odds of ten to one against any one are appalling. But they do not daunt the men of faith. Whether they personally win or die, their Cause prevaits. They are sure to win: because (1) they have divine aid, and (2) even humanly speaking, those who take up arms against truth and righteousness are fools, and their seeming power is but a broken reed.

- 66. For the present, God
  Hath lightened your (task),
  For He knoweth that there is
  A weak spot in you:
  But (e.e. so), if there are
  A hundred ' you, patient
  And persevering, they will Vanquish two hundred, and if
  A thousand, they will vanquish
  Two thousand, with the leave
  Of God: for God is with those Who patiently persevere.

1233. Given equal conditions, Muslims on account of their faith could win against odds of ten to one. But where their organisation and equipment are weak, as was the case about the time of Badr, they were out a lighter task, and asked to tackle no more than odds of two to one against them. As a matter of fact at Badr they won through against odds of more than three to one.

1234. An ordinary war may be for territory or trade, revenge or military glory,—all "temporal goods of this world." Such a war is condemned. But a Jihād is fought under strict conditions under a righteous Imām, purely for the defence of faith and God's Law. All baser motives, therefore are strictly excluded. The greed of gain in the shape of ransom from captives has no place in such warfare.

At the same time, if there has been heavy loss of life already, captives may be taken, and it would be for the Imām to exercise his discretions as to the time when it was safe to release them, and whether the release should be free or on parole or on a fine by way of punishment. Destruction and slaughter, however repugnant to a gentle soul like that of Muhammad, were inevitable where evil tried to suppress the good. Even Jesus, whose mission was more limited, had to say: "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace but a sword" (Matt. x. 34).

Seventy captives were taken at Badr, and it was decided to take ransom for them. While the general principle of fighting for the purpose of taking captives in order to get their ransom is condemned, the particular action in this case was approved in uv. 68-71.

1235. Though any motive of worldly gain, which may have been in the minds of some among the victorious Muslim army, is condemned as worthy of a severe penaltly, what actually happened is ascribed to the Plan of God, which was pre-ordained. Among the prisoners taken were the Prophet's uncle 'Abbās and Badhrat 'Alt's brother 'Aqil, who afterwards became Muslims. 'Abbās was an ancestor of the founder of the celebrathed 'Abbās (Dynasty which played such a notable part in Islamic history. In his case the promise made in verse 70 was amply fulfilled. In the case of all prisoners, if there was any good in their hearts, their very fight against Islam and their capture led to their being blessed with Islam. Thus does God's Plan work in a marvellous way, and evolve good out of the centing evil.

From God, a severe penalty Would have reached you For the (ransom) that ye took.

1236. Exfor: literally, eat, See vil. 19, n. 1004, and v. 69, n. 776, 1237. This is a consolation to the prisoners of war. In spite of their previous hostility, God will forgive them in His mercy if there was any good in their hearts, and confer upon them a far higher gift; than anything they have ever lost. This gift in its highest sense would be the blessing of Islam, but even in a material sense, there was great good fortune awaiting them, e.g., in the case of 'Abb4s (see n. 1235).

Nota how comprehensive is God's care. He encourages and strengthens the Muslims, at the same time condemning any baser motives that may have entered their minds. He confoles the prisonates of war and promises them better things if there is any good in them at all. And He offers comfort to those who have left their homes in His Cause, and knits them into closer fellowship with those who have helped them and sympathised with them.

1238. If the kindness shown to them is abused by the prisoners of war when they are released, it is not a matter for discouragement to those who showed the kindness. Such persons have in their treachery shown already their treason to God, in that they took up arms against God's Apostle, and sought to blot out the pure worship of God. The punishment of defeat, which opened the eyes of some of their comrades, evidently did not open their eyes. But God knows all, and in His wisdom will order all things for the best. The Believers have done their duty in showing such clemency as they could in the circumstances of war. For them "God sufficient" (viii, 63.)

And fought for the Faith. With their property And their persons. In the cause of God. As well as those Who gave (them) asylum 1239 And aid,-these are (all) Friends and protectors. One of another. As to those who believed But came not into exile. Ye owe no duty Of protection to them Until they come into exile: But if they seek Your aid in religion, It is your duty To help them. Except against a people With whom ye have A treaty of mutual alliance. 144 And (remember) God Seeth all that ve do.

73. The Unbelievers are Protectors, one of another:
Unless ye do this,
(Protect each other),
There would be
Tumult and oppression
On earth, and great mischief. 1842

1239. The reference is to the Muhājirin and the Ansār, the Emigrants and the Helpers, the people who forsook their homes and adopted voluntary exile from Mecca in company with their beloved Leader, and their good friends in Medina, who gave them asylum and every kind of assistance, moral and material. Under the magnetic personality of the Holy Apostla there two groups became like blood-brothers, and they were so thated in matters of inheritance during the period when they were cut off from their kith and kin.

1240. The Believers (Muslims) were entitled to all assistance in matters of religion. But if they were not strong enough to suffer yoluntary exile on behalf of the Cause and make the personal sacrifices which their more ardent brethren in faith made, they could not reasonably ask for political or military assistance or protection, 1241. If a community suffers voluntary exile on account of persecution and oppression, and some of its weaker brethren stay behind, holding fast to faith but not prepared for the higher sacrifice, the exiles have still a duty to help their weaker brethren in matters of religion. The exiles, being at open war against the State which oppressed them, would be free to fight against such State. But if the weaker brethren are in a State in mutual alliance with the Community, the Community cannot in honour interfere with that State, whether it is Muslim or not. Presumably the alliance implies that the grievances of the weaker brethren will be redressed by the State itself. But it is not honourable to embarrass your own ally.

1242, Evil consorts with evil. The good have all the more reason for drawing together and not only living, in mutual harmony, but being ready at all times to protect each other. Otherwise the world will be given over to aggressions by unscrupulous people, and the good will fail in their duty to establish God's Peace and to strengthen all the forces of truth and righteousness.

- 74. Those who believe,
  And adopt exile,
  And fight for the Faith,
  In the cause of God,
  As well as those
  Who give (them) asylum
  And aid,—these are (all)
  In very truth the Believers:
  For them is the forgiveness
  Of sins and a provision
  Most generous.
- 75. And those who
  Accept Faith subsequently, 1846
  And adopt exile,
  And fight for the Faith
  In your company,—
  They are of you.
  But kindred by blood

  Verily God is well-acquainted
  With all things.

@قالَّذِينَ الشُوا قَصَابَرُوا وَجَهُ دُوا فِي سَجِيلِ اللَّهِ وَالَّذِينَ الَّهِ وَ وَنَصَرُّوا الْاَلَتِيكَ مُرُ الْمُؤْمِنُونَ خَا لَنْهُ مَنْفِرَةً ۖ وَرُدُقْ حَجَدِيمٌ

124]. Beliavers who make all sacrifices in the cause of God have given the best possible proof of the Falth by their actions. They have loved God much, and much will be forgiven them. What they sacrificed was, perhaps, judged by oniversal standards, of small value, but its value will be estimated by the precious love behind it, and its reward will be of no ordinary kind. It will not be a reward in the ordinary sense at all for a reward is given once for all. It will be a provision which lasts for ever, and is on the most generous scale.

1244. Those who come into the fold last are none the less brethren in the fullest acceptation of the term. But any special provisions made in the special circumstances of the first martyrs for the Cause will not of course apply to them as the special circumstances which made them necessary have ceased to exist. See next note.

1245. The Book of God, i.e., the Universal Plan, the Eternal Decree, the Preserved Tablet (IXXXX. 23) Blood-relationship and its rights and duties do not depend on special circumstances of a temporary nature. Any temporary rights of mutual inheritance established between the early Emigrants and Helpers (n. 1239) would not apply to later recruits, who would come under entirely different circumstances.

INTRODUCTION TO SURA IX. Tauba (Repentance) or Barāat (Immunity)

Logically this Sura follows up the argument of the last Sura (VIII), and indeed may be considered a part of it, although chronologically the two are separated by an interval of seven years.

We saw that Sūra VIII dealt with the large questions arising at the outset of the life of a new Ummat or organised nation: questions of defence under attack, distribution of war acquisitions after victory, the virtues needed for concerted action, and elemency and consideration for one's own and for enemies in the hour of victory. We pass on in this Sūra to deal with the question: what is to be done if the enemy breaks faith and is guilty of treachery? No nation can go on with a treaty if the other party violates it at will; but it is laid down that a period of four months should be allowed by way of notice after denunciation of the treaty; that due, protection should be accorded in the intervening period; that there should always be open the door to repentance and reunion with the people of God; and that if all these fail, and war must be undertaken, it must be pushed with the utmost vigour.

These are the general principles deducible from the Sūra. The immediate occasion for their promulgation may be considered in connection with the chronological place of the Sūra.

Chronologically, verses 1-29 were a notable declaration of State policy promulgated about the month of Shawwal, A.H. 9, and read out by Hadheat 'Alī at the Pilgrimage two months later in order to give the policy the widest publicity possible. The remainder of the Sūra, verses 30-129, was revealed a little earlier, say about the month of Ramadhan, A.H. 9, and sums up the lessons of the Apostle's Tabūk expedition in the late summer of A.H. 9 (say October 630).

Tabūk is a place near the frontier of Arabia, quite close to what was then Byzantine territory in the Province of Syria (which includes Palestine). It is on the Hijsz Railway, about 350 miles north-west of Medina, and 150 miles south of Ma'an. It had a fort and a spring of sweet water. In consequence of strong and persistent rumours that the Byzantines (Romans) were preparing to invade Arabia and that the Byzantine Emperor himself had arrived near the frontier for the purpose, the Apostle collected as large a force as ha could, and marched to Tabūk. The Byzantine invasion did not come off. But the Apostle took the opportunity of consolidating the Muslim position in that direction and making treaties of alliance with certain Christian and Jewish tribes near the Gulf of 'Aqaba. On his return to Medina he considered the situation. During his absence the Hypocrites had played, as always, a double game, and the policy hitherto followed, of free access to the sacred centre of Islam, to Muslims and Pagans alike, was now altered, as it had been abused by the enemies of Islam.

This is the only Sūra to which the usual formula of Bismillāh is not prefixed. It was among the last of the Sūras revealed, and though the Apostle had directed that it should follow Sūra VIII, it was not clear whether it was to form a separate Sūra or only a part of Sūra VIII. It is now treated as a separate Sūra, but the Bismillāh is not prefixed to it, as there is no warrant for supposing that the Apostle used the Bismillāh before it in his recitation of the Qurān. The Sūra is known under many names: the two most commonly used are (1) Tanba (Repentance), with reference to ix. 104 and (2) Barāat (Immunity), the opening word of the Sūra.

Summary.—Treaties with those Pagans who have treacherously broken their terms are denounced, but four months' time is given for adjustments or repentance. Pagans to be excluded from the sacred Mosques. Infidelity to be fought (ix. 1-29, and C. 93).

The People of the Book have obscured the light of God, but the Truth of God must prevail over all. We must be ready to fight for the Faith that is in us; otherwise we shall be unworthy to uphold God's banner, and He will raise other people in our place (ix. 30-42, and C. 94).

The Hypocrites and their double dealing; their evil ways pointed out. Their punishment will be as sure as the blessings of the righteous (ix. 43-72, and C. 95).

All evil should be resisted, unless there is repentance: falsehood is not content with breach of faith but mocks all good; it should not be envied but shunned (ix. 73.99, and C. 96).

The good pleasure of God is with those who are sincere and make sacrifices in His cause; He will forgive those who do wrong and repent, but not those who intend mischief and foment unbelief and disunion among believers. The Believers by their self-surrender obtain eternal Felicity. God will turn in mercy even to those who, though they waver or fail in duty, turn at last to Him (ix. 100-118, and C, 97).

Those who believe should associate with the righteous and the truthful, actively doing their duty. But if the Community marches out, a part of them should remain behind for the purpose of diligently studying religion and teaching their brethren when they return. Every Sûra increases the faith of those who believe, though those diseased in heart may add doubt to doubt. Trust in God, Lord of the Throne of Glory (ix. 119-120, and C. 98).

C. 93 .- If the Pagans repeatedly break (ix. 1-29.) Their treaties, denounce the treaties, But give them time either to repent Or to prepare for the just punishment Of their treachery. Punish the chiefs Of the treacherous, and destroy them. But if one of them seek asylum. Give it: let him hear the Word Of God and escort him to security. Be true to the true, but fight those Who are false to plighted word And taunt you for your Faith. No one has the right to approach The mosques of God unless He believes in God and follows God's Law, the law of righteousness.

(٩) سورة التربة

أللّه ورَبِّت الديد للَّه الدّاليات

1246, Bargat: usually translated "immunity". I do not think that word correctly represents the Arabic word in this context. I retain it as I cannot think of any single English word as an equivalent. The general sense is explained in the introduction to this Sura. In verse 3 below I use the periphrasis "dissolve treaty obligations," which goes some way to explain the meaning. The Pagans and enemies of Islam frequently made treaties of mutual alliance with the Muslims. The Muslims scrupulously observed their part, but the Pagans violated their part again and again when it suited them. After some years' experience it became imperative to denounce such treaties altogether. This was done in due form, with four months' notice, and a chance was given to those who faithfully observed their pledges, to continue their alliance,

1247, Four Months. Some Commentators understand by this the four forbidden months in which warlare by ancient Arabian custom was unlawful, viz. Rajab, Zul-qa'd, Zul-hajj, and Muharram: See it. 194 n. But it is better to take the signification of the four months immediately following the Declaration. Assuming that the Sura was promulgated early in Shawwal (see Introduction), the four months would be Shawwal, Zul-qa'd, Zul-hajj, and Muharram, of which the last three would also be the customary Prohibited Months.

Know ye that ye cannot Frustrate God. And proclaim A grievous penalty to those Who reject Faith.

- 4. (But the treaties are) not dissolved with those Pagans with whom Ye have entered into alliance And who have not subsequently Failed you in aught, Nor aided any one against you. So fulfil your engagements With them to the end Of their term: for God Loveth the righteous.
  - Are past, then fight and slay has Are past, then fight and slay has The Pagans wherever ye find them, And seize them, beleaguer them, And lie in wait for them.

    In every stratagem (of war);
    But if they repent; has And establish regular prayers And practise regular charity, Then open the way for them:
    For God is Oft-forgiving, Most Merciful.

مَاعَكُوْ أَنْكُمْ غَيْرُمُغِيرِى اللَّهِ وَيَشِيلِ الَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا بِعَلَابٍ أَلِيهٍ ۞ إِلَّا الَّذِينَ عَلَمَتُمْ مِنَّ الْشَرِينَ ثَرَّةً لَرَّ يَنِفُصُومُ كَنَا أَوْلَا يُفَلِغُهُمْ عَلَيْكُمْ أَعَلَيْكُمْ أَعَلَا فَأَيْشُوا لِلْهُمْ عَمَّدُهُمْ إِلَى مُدَيْمٌ أَلِيَّ لَذَ يُحِنُّ الْلَوْمِنَ

نَ فَإِذَا اَسْلَعَ الْأَنْهُوْ الْكُرُو فَاقْتُلُوا الْنَيْرِكِينَ حَبُّ وَجَدَّهُ وَالْمُدُومُ وَخُذُوهُ دُوَا حُمُرُومُ وَالْمُدُولُومُ كُلِّ مُهْدُولُكُمُ وَالْمُدُولُومُ وَالْمُدُولُولُولُومُ الْمُدَّالُولُ السّلَاقَ وَالْوُلُ الْزَّكُوةَ فَخَدُلُوا سَيْمِلُهُ مِنْ اللَّهُ عَنُولٌ تَكِيدٌ

1249. The sacred duty of fulfilling all obligations of every kind, to Muslims and non Muslims, in public as well as private life, is a cardinal feature of Muslim ethics. The question what is to be done with those who abuse this principle by failing in their duty but expect the Nuslims to do their part is not to be solved (in the case of treaties) by a general denunciation of treaties but by a careful consideration of the cases where there has been fidelity and not treachery. There we are enjoined to give the strictest fidelity, as it is a part of righteousness and our duty to God.

1250. The emphasis is on the first clause: it is only when the four months of grace are past, and the other party show no signs of desisting from their treacherous designs by right conduct, that the state of war supervenes—between Faith and Unfaith.

1251. When war becomes inevitable, it must be prosecuted with vigour According to the English paces, you cannot fight with kid gloves. The fighting may take the form of slaughter, or capture, or siege, or ambush and other stratagems. But ever then there is room for repentance and amendment on the part of the guilty party, and if that takes place, our duty is forgiveness and the establishment of peace

1352. The repentance must be sincere, and that is shown by conduct—a religious spirit of true prayer and charity. In that case we are not to bar the gate against the repentant. On the contrary we must do all we can to make their way easy, remembering that God, is, Oft-forgiving, Most. Merciful.

6. If one amongst the Pagans <sup>1853</sup> Ask thee for asylum, Grant it to him, So that he may hear the Word Of God; and then escort him To where he can be secure. <sup>1154</sup> That is because they are Men without knowledge:

SECTION 2.

- 7. Troow can there be a league, Before God and His Apostle, With the Pagans, except those "so With whom ye made a treaty Near the Sacred Mosque? As long as these stand true To you, stand ye true to them: For God doth love the righteous.

1253, Even among the enemies of Islam, actively fighting against Islam, there may be individuals whom be in a position to require protection. Full asylum is to begiven to them, and opportunities provided for hearing the Word, they become Muslims and brethren, and no further question arises. If they do not see their way to accept Islam, they will require double protection: (1) from the Islamic forces openly fighting against their people, and (2) from their own people, as they detached themselves from them. Both kinds of protection should be ensured for them, and they should be safely escorted to a place where they can be safe. Such persons only err through ignorance, and there may be much good in them.

1254. Maaman: place or opportunity of being secure from all harm.

1235. In this section we have the reasons why the treaties with treacherous Pagan loss were denounced. The clause introducing the exception is a parenthetical clause. The word "Pagans" must be connected with verse 8 which follows. In that verse the word haifa resumes the clause introduced by the word haifa at the beginning of verse 7. The exceptional Pagan tribes which remained true to their word were the Band Banza and the Bans Kināna, who swore their treat pear-the Sacred Mosque and faithfully observed it. They were to be given the full benefit of their fidelity even though their kindred tribes were treacherous.

1256. The exceptions having been stated parenthetically in verse 7, the indictment of the general mass of Pagas nties is now ret out briefly but fully and convincingly. After that kind of behaviour how can any treaty be possible with them? The counts are: (1) that whenever they got a slight advantage, they disregarded the ties both of kinship and of covernant as against the Muslims because of their Paith, thus proving doubly trea-herous; (2) that they spoke fair words, but had enom in their hearts; (3) that their attitide was one of rebellion against their plighted word; (4) that they disregarded the solemn Signs of God for "ome miserable worldly gain; (5) that they rivided to prevent other people from coming to the Way of God. The first clause is repeated again as the last clause, to emphasise their double treachery, and round of the argument.

Or of covenant? With (fair words From) their mouths they entice you, But their hearts are averse From you; and most of them Are rebellious and wicked.

- The Signs of God have they sold For a miserable price, And (many) have they hindered From His Way: evil indeed Are the deeds they have done.
- 10. In a Believer they respect not
  The ties either of kinship
  Or of covenant! It is they
  Who have transgressed al!

- 11. But (even so), if they repent, ""
  Establish regular prayers,
  And practise regular charity,—
  They are your brethren in Faith:
  (Thus) do We explain the Signs
  In detail, for those who understand.
- 12. But if they violate their oaths
  After their covenant,
  And taunt you for your Faith,
  Fight ye the chiefs of Unfaith:
  For their oaths are nothing to them:
  That thus they may be restrained.
- ill ye not fight people Who violated their oaths,

وَلَا ذِمَّةُ يُرْضُونِكُمْ إِلْوَلِمِهِمْ وَتَالَىٰ مُلُونُهُمْ وَأَكْثَرُهُمْ مُنْسِفُونَ ۞ اشْتَرُوا عَنْ اللهِ مُتَنَّا قِلْمِلَهُ فَصَدَدُوا عَنْ سَبِّلِوْءً إِلَّهُمْ سَانًا

1258. The catalogue of their sins being set out, it is clear that they were aggressors in the worst possible ways; and war became inevitable.

1259. The chance of repentance and mercy to the worst enemies is again emphasised, in order that people with any understanding may not be misted into thinking that war was an easy or light matter. This emphasis is balanced by the emphasis in the next verse on the causes which made war inevitable for those with any self-respect.

1260. Not only did the enemies break their oaths shamelessly, but they even taunted the Muslims on their Faith and the "simple-minded" way in which they continued to respect their part of the treaty, as if they were afraid to fight!

Plotted to expel the Apostle, 1888 And took the aggressive By being the first (to assault) you? Do ye fear them? Nay, It is God Whom ye should More justly fear, if ye believe!

- 16. Or think ye that ye Shall be abandoned, As though God did not know 1866 Those among you who strive With might and main, and take None for friends and protectors Except God, His Apostle, And the (community of) Believers? But God is well-acquainted With (all) that ye do, 1261. The argument now takes a new turn. An appeal is made to the Muslims on various grounds: (1) the shameless disregard of treaties by the enemy, (2) the under hand plots to discredit the Holy Apostle, and turn him out of Medina as he had been turned out of Mecca, (3) the aggressive taken by the Quraish and their confederates in Medina after the treaty of Budaisbya (A.H. 6, Zwi-qa-d, Feb. 628), (4) the manly attitude that fears God rather than men, and (5) the need to prove our sincere faith by test and trial and struggle and sacrifice (ix. 16).

1262, Heal the breasts of believers, i.e., of wounds that they may have sustained from the assaults, taunts, and cruelty of the enemy.

1263. When the victory comes and the wounds are healed, a great peace comes to the hearts of those who have suffered, striven, and struggled. The fighting was an abnormal necessity forced by injustice and oppression. When God's Law is established, the fire of indignation is quelled, and the true Peace of Islam is attained.

1264. God's mercy is unlimited. When evil is destroyed, many of those who were enticed by evil will come into the fold of truth and righteounerss, and the cessation of war and conflict will bring peace, certainly to those who fought for the right, but also possibly to those whore eyes have been opened to the working of God's Law and who in healing reconciliation become members of the Brotherhood of Peace in [Jahr].

1265. Some translators have taken a different verbal construction of this passage, but the ultimate effect in meaning is the same: we must all be tested and tried, but God knows our immost hearts, and He will support those who strive in His way, out of sincere love for Him, His Apostle, and the body of the true men of faith.

1266. 'A mara as applied to mosques implies the following ideas: (1) to build or repair: (2) to maintain in fitting dignity: (3) to visit for purposes of devotion; and (4) fill with light and file and activity.—what would be called in Urdu Masjid ābād karmā. For brevity I have only used the two words "visit and maintain" in the Translation.

Before the praching of Islam the Pagans built, repaired, and maintained the Mosque, and celebrated Pagan ceremonies in it, including naked dances round the Karba. They made an income out of it. Islam protested, and the Pagans ejected Muslims and their Leader from Mecca, and shut them out from the Karba itself. When the Muslims were strong enough to re-take Mecca (A.H. 8), they purified the Mosque and re-stablished the worship of the true God. The families who previously held control could not after this be allowed in a statisty Pagansism to control the Mosque any longer. If they became Muslims, it was a different matter. The further question arose: should they be allowed to visit it and practise their unseemly Pagan rites? Obviously this would be derogatory to the dignity and honour of the Mosque, and was forbidden. This was the particular occasion to which the verse refers. The general deduction is clear. A house of God is a place of sincere devotion, not a theatre for vulgar rites nor a source of worldly income. Only sincere Believers have a right of entry. Who the sincere Believers are, is explained in the next very.

1267. See the previous note. Sincere Believers are those who have faith in God and the future, and have a spirit of devotion and charity—a true and abiding spirit, not marely, isolated acts now and again. Moreover they must not bow to worldly greed or ambition, which produces (ear of worldly power, 1266. Others may call themselves by what names they like. True guidance is shown by the tests here indicated.

1259 Giving drinks of cold water to thirsty pligrims, and doing material services to a mosque are meritorious acts, but they are only external. If they do not touch the soul, their value is slight. Far greater, in the sight of God, are Faith, Endeavour, and self-surrender to God. Men who practise these will obtain honour in the sight of God. God's light and guidance comes to them, and not to those self-surficient beings who think that a little show of what the world considers piety is enough.

Or the maintenance of The Sacred Mosque, equal To (the pious service of) those Who believe in God And the Last Day, and strive With might and main In the cause of God? They are not comparable In the sight of God: And God guides not Those who, do wrong.

1270. Here is a good description of Jihād. It may require fighting in God's cause, as a form of self-sacriāce. But it sessents consists in (1) a true and sincere Faith, which so fixes its gaze on God. that all selfsh or worldy motives seem pattry and fade away, and (2) an earnest and ceaseless activity, involving the sacrifice (if need be) of life, person, or property, in the service of God. Mere brutal fighting is opposed to the whole spirit of Jihād, while the sincere scholar's pen or preacher's voice or wealthy man's contributions may be the most valuable forms of Jihād.

1271. Those who strive and suffer in God's cause are promised (1) a mercy specially from Himself, (2) His own good pleasure, (3) gardens of perpetual delight, (4) the supreme reward, God's own Presence or nearness. These are in gradation: (1) is a special mercy, higher than flows out to all creatures; (2) is a consciousness of God's good pleasure, which raises the soul above itself; (3) is that state of permanent spriftual assurance, which is typided by gardens of perpetual delight, and (4) is the final bliss, which is the Presence of God Himself, or, in Suß language diddri-i-168hs, the 1272. Man's heart clings to (1) his own kth and kin-parents, children, brothers and sisters, husbands or wives, or other relatives, (2) wealth and prosperity, (3) commerce or means of profit and gain, or (4) noble buildings, for dignity or comfort. If these are a hindrance in God's cause, we have to choose which we love most. We must love God even if it involves the sacrifice of all else.

1273. If we love our earthly ties and comforts, profits and pleasures, more than we love God, and therefore fail to respond to God's cause, it is not God's cause which will suffer. God's purpose will be accomplished, with or without us. But our failure to respond to His will must leave us splritually poorer, brefet of grace and guidance: "for God guides not the rebellious"

This is of universal application. But it was strikingly illustrated in the case of those faithful ones who obeyed the Apostle's call, left the comfort of their homes in Mecca and suffered exile in Medina, gave up their trade and their possessions, stored and fought for God's cause, sometimes against their own kith and kin or their own tribesmen who were enemies of Islam. They won through. Others were not prepared for such sacrifice, but their failure did not stop the accomplishment of God's plan and purpose:

1274. Bunain on the road to Täif from Mecca, and about fourteen miles to the east of Mecca, I the a valley in the mountainous country between Mecca and Täif. Immediately after the conquest of Mecca, (A H, S), the Pagan idolaters, who were surprised and chagrined at the wonderful reception which Islam was receiving, organised a great gathering near Täif to concert plans for attacking the Apostle. The Hawzin and the Thaqti tribes took the lead and prepared a great expedition for Mecca, boasting, of their strength and military skill. There was on the other hand a wave of confident enthusiasm among the Muslims at Mecca, in which the new Muslims joined. The enemy forces numbered about 4,000, but the Muslim force reached a total of ten or twelve thousand, as every one wished to join. The battle was joined at Bunain, as described in the next note.

1275. For the first time the Muslims had at gymain tremendous odds in their favour. But this itself constituted a danger. Many in their ranks had more enthusiasm than wisdom, more a spirit of elation than of faith and confidence in the righteousness of their cause. The enemy had the advantage of knowing the ground thoroughly. They laid an ambush in which the advance guard of the Muslim forces was caught. The country is hilly, in which the enemy concaled himself. As soon as the Muslim vanguard entered the Hunain valley, the enemy fell upon them with fury and caused havoc with their arrows from their places of concealment. In such ground the numbers of the Muslims were themselves a disadvantage. Many were stain, and many turned back in confusion and retreat. But the Apostle, as-ever, was calm in his wisdom and faith. He rallied his forces and inflicted the most crushing defeat on the enemy.

1276. Sahīs: calm, peace, security, tranquillity. Cf. ii. 248. The Apostle never approved of over-weening confidence, or reliance merely upon human strength, or human resources or numbers. In the hour of danger and seeming disaster, he was perfectly calm, and with cool courage relied upon the help of God, Whose standard he carried. His calmness inspired all around him, and stopped the rout of those who had turned their backs. It was with God's help that they won, and their victory was complete. They followed it up with an energetic pursuit of the enemies, capturing their camps, their flocks and herds, and their families, whom they had boastfully brought with them in expectation of an easy victory

1278, Unelean: both literally and metaphorically; because Muslims are enjoined to be strict in abutions and physical cleanliness, as well as in purity of mind and heart, so that their word can be relied upon.

1279 This year of theirs: there is a two-fold meaning: (1) now that you have complete control of Mecca, and are charged with the purity of worship there, shut out all impurity from this year; (2) you have seen how the Pagans have behaved this year; their year of power and misuse of that power may be called their year; it is over, and now you Muslims are responsible.

Approach the Sacred Mosque. And if ye fear poverty, 1800 Soon will God enrich you, If He wills, out of His bounty, For God is All-Knowing, All-Wise.

Fight A straight fight in the cause of Right: Go forth bravely to strive and strongle, And prove yourselves worthy of God.

1280. The concourse in Mecca added to the profits of trade and commerce "But fear not," we are told; "the Pagans are a waning power, bound to disappear, and you should strengthen your own community, that they may more than counter-balance the apparent loss of custon; and God has other means of improving your economic position." This actually happened. The Pagans were extinguished from Arabla, and the concourse of Pligimis from all parts of the world increased the numbers more than a hundred-fold. Here is commonsense, wisdom, and statesmanship, even if we look at it from a outvel human point of view.

1231. Juye: the root meaning is compensation. The derived meaning, which became the technical meaning, was a poll-tax levied from those who did not accept Islam, but were willing to live under the protection of Islam, and were thus tacitly willing to submit to its ideals being enforced in the Muslim State, saying only their personal liberty of conscience as regarded themselves. There was no amount fixed for it, and in any case it was merely symbolical—an acknowledgment that those whose religion was tolerated would in their turn not interfere with the preaching and progress of Islam. Inside Suggests one didar per year, which would be the Arabian gold dians of the Muslim States, equivalent in value to about half a sewretign, or about 5 to 67 rupees. See n. 410 to it. 37. The tax varied in amount, and there were exemptions for the poor, for females and children (according to AbB Banifa), for slaves, and for monks and hermits. Being a tax on-able-bodied males of military age, it was in a sense a commutation for military age service. But see the next note

1282. 'As Yadin (literally, from the band) has been variously interpreted. The hand being the symbol of power and authority, I accept the interpretation "in token of willing submission." The ligray was thus partly symbolic and partly a commutation for military service, but as the amount was insignificant and the exemptions numerous, its symbolic character predominated. See the last note.

1283, In n, 718 to v. 20 I have quoted passages from the Old Testament, showing how freely the expression "sons of God" was used by the Jews. 'A sect of them called 'Uzair a son of God, according to Baidhawi. In Appendix II (Sura v.) I have shown that the constitution of Judaism dates from Uzair (Ezra). The Christians still call Christ the Son of God.

1284, Taking men for gods or sons of God was not a new thing. All ancient mythologies have fables of that kind. Thete was less excuse for such blasphemies after the aposites of God had clearly explained our true relation to God than in the times of primitive ignorance and superstition.

1285, Cf. v. 78.

1286. Aþbär i doctors of haw; priests; learned men: Cf. v. 47, where they are associated with Rabbis. Rwhöse: monks, ascetics, anchorites, men who have renounced the world; where there he a celibate clergy, the term can be applied to them as well as to members of monarite orders. It is also permissible to apply the term to "saints", where they are defleted or credited with divine powers, or where people pray to them as they do in the Roman Catholic Church.

128? Priest worship, and the worship of saints and ascetics is a form of superstition to which men have been prone in all ages. The growth of Jewish superstition is shown in the Talmud, and of Christian superstition in the doctrine of papal infallibility and the worship of saints. The mere idea of a separate order of priesthood to stand between God and man and be the exclusive repository of God's secrets is deregatory to the goodness and all-pervading grace of God. The worship of." lords many and gods many "was not confined only to the Pagans. The defication of the son of Mary is put here in a special clause by steelf, as it held (and still holds) in its thrall a large portion of civilised humanity.

1289. With their mouths: there is a twofold meaning: (1) the old-fashioned open oil lamps were extinguished by blowing with the mouth: the Unbelievers would like to blow out God's Light as it is a cause of offence to them: (2) false teachers and preachers distort the Message of God by the false words of their mouth. Their wish is to put out the light of Truth for they are people of darkness; but God will perfect His Light, i.e., make it shine all the brighter in the eyes of men. His Light in itself is ever perfect, but it will penetrate the hearts of men more and more, and so become more and more perfect for them.

1290. Every religion which commends itself widely to human beings and lasts through some space of time has a glimpse of Truth in it. But Islam is the perfect light of Truth. As the greater Light, through its own strength, outshines all lesser lights, so will Islam outshine all else, in spite of the displeasure of those to whom light is an offence. See also xiviii. 28, n. 4912, and 1xi, 9, x5442.

129]. Bill-biglili—in falsehood. i.e., by false pretences, or in false or vain things. This was strikingly exemplified in the history of Medieval Europe, though the disease's apt to attack all peoples and organisations at all times. Priests got rich by issuing indulgences and dispensations; they made their office a stepping stone to worldly power and possessions. Even the Monastic Orders, which took vows' of powerly for individuals, grew rich with corporate property, until their wealth became a scandal, even among their own nations.

1292. Missuse of wealth, property, and resources is frequently condemned, and in three ways: (1) do not acquire anything wrongfully or on false pretences; (2) do not hoard or bury or amass wealth for its own sake but use it freely for good, whether for yourself or for your neighbours; and (3) be particularly careful not to waste it for idle purposes, but only so that it may fructify for the good of the people.

1293. A very striking metaphor is here used to figure forth the penalty to be suffered by those who missue wealth, for such missue is as much a spiritual sin as any other kind of disobedience to God's Will. Such missued wealth will itself become evidence against us. It will be as if the gold and sliver will be heated to add to the heat of Hell-fire; that it will brand our foreheads as reflecting on our intelligence in thinking that wealth was a good thing in itself instead of a mere means of doing good; it will brand our fanks (the middle part of our body, supporting the stomach, the seat of greed), as showing that the greed produced no real satisfaction; and it will brand our backs, the source of our stability and strength, as showing that the greed produced no real satisfaction; and it will brand our backs, the source of our stability and strength, as showing that stability and strength, destroys, by the missue, our stability and strength,

1294. The voice enforces the moral: "did you expect satisfaction or salvation from the treasures that you misused? Behold! they add to your forment!"

1295. This and the following verse must be read together. They conderm the arbitrary and selfish conduct of the Pagan Arabs, who, because there was a long-established custern of observing four months as those in which gliphing was forbidden, changed the months about or added or deducted months when it suited them, to get an unfair advantage over the enemy. The four Prohibited Months were: Zul-qa'd, Zul-hajj, Muharram, and Rajab. If it suited them they opstoned one of these months, and so a prohibited month became an ordinary month: while their opponents might hesitate to fight, they got an undue advantage. It also upset the security of the Month of Pilgramage. This very ancient brage made for fair dealing all round, and its infraction by the Pagans is condemned.

The question of a solar astronomical year as against the lunar ecclesiastical year does not arise here. But it may be noted that the Arab year was roughly luni solar like the Hindu year, the months being lunar and the intercalation of a month every three years brought the year nearly but not accurately up to the solar reckoning. From the year of the Farewell Pligrimage (A. H. 10) the ecclesiastical year was definitely fixed as a purely lunar year of roughly 354 days, the months being calculated by the actual appearance of the moon. After that, every month of the ecclesiastical year came about 11 days earlier in the solar, year, and thus the ecclesiastical months travelled all round the seasons and the solar year. The lunar year remains the ecclesiastical year.

1296. The Muslims were at a disadvantage on account of their scruples about the Prohibited Months. They are fold not to wrong themselves in this. If the Pagans lought in all months on one pretence or another, they were allowed to defend themselves in all months. But self-restraint was (as always) recommended as far as possible.

All together as they Fight you all together. But know that God Is with those who restrain Themselves.

37. Verily the transposing 189 (Of a prohibited month) Is an addition to Unbelief:
The Unbelievers are led
To wrong thereby: for they make It lawful one year,
And forbidden another year,
In order to adjust the number
Of months forbidden by God
And make such forbidden ones
Lawful. The evil of their course
Seems pleasing to them. 1858
But God guideth not
Those who reject Faith.

SECTION 6.

﴿إِنِّكَا الشِّمَّ: وَيَادَةٌ فِي الْكُفْرِيُعِكُلُهِ الْذِيْنَكَدَرُا لِجُلُونَهُ عَامًا وَهُعَرَمُ وَنَهُ عَامًا لِيُولِطِنُوا عِنَّةً مَا حَرَّمَ اللَّهُ فَكِيلُوا مَا عَرَّمَ اللَّهُ لَٰذِينَ لَمُشْرِّسُوهُ أَضَالِهُمْ وَاللَّهُ لَا يَبْنِي

1297. To meddle with an old-established custom of close time for warfare during Prohibited or Sacred Months was not only a demonstration of the Unbelievers against the Muslims on account of their Faith, but was wrong and unjust in itself, as it abolished a wholeome check on unregulated warfare, and prejudiced the law-abilding side by arbitrary decisions.

1298. Cf. vi. 122 The lawless man thinks he is doing a great thing in getting the better of those what careful to observe a naw they believe in. But the lawless man loses the guidance of Faith, which is a symbol of his being guided by God; he will therefore lists in the end.

139. The immediate reference is to the expedition to Tablic (A.H. 9), for which see the introduction to this Sūra. But the lesson is perfectly general. When a call is made on behalf of a great cause, the fortunate ones are those who have the privilege of responding to the call. The unfortunate ones are those who are so engrossed in their parochial affairs that they turn a deafearto the appeal. They are suffering from a spiritual disease.

1300. The choice is between two courses: will you choose a noble adventure and the glorious printing of following your spiritual leader, or grovel in the earth for some small worldly gain of refear of worldly loss? The people who heastlated to follow the call of Tablek were deterred by (I) the heat of the summer, in which the expedition was undertaken on account of the three to the existence of the little community, and (2) the fear of losing the fruit harvest, which was ripe for gathering.

- 39. Unless ye go forth, 1808
  He will punish you
  With a grievous penalty,
  And put others in your place;
  But Him ye would not harm
  In the least. For God
  Hath power over all things.
- 40. If ve help not (your Leader). (It is no matter): for Gcd Did indeed help him. 1300 When the Unbelievers Drove him out: he had No more than one companion: 1865 They two were in the Cave. And he said to his companion, " Have no fear, for God Is with us ": then God Sent down His peace upon him. 1504 And strengthened him with forces Which ye saw not, and humbled 1303 To the depths the word Of the Unbelievers. But the word of God Is exalted to the heights: For God is Exalted in might, Wise

1301. Tenfirā—go forth, march onward, be ready to strive and suffer. For this is the condition of largers in the spiritual and moral, as well as in the physical, world. According to the bromely English proverb, God helps those who help themselves. Inactivity and lethargy are fatal. No one can rest on his cars. Man is not necessary to God, but God is necessary to man. If a nation receives favours and falls to deserve them, it will be replaced by another: as has so often happened in history. We may take this as a special warning to islamic nations, 1302. The Table expedition was not a failure. Though many heistated, many more joined in, But a more striking example was when the Apostle was hunted out of Mecca and performed his famous Hijrat. His enemies plotted for his life. He had already sent his followers on to Medina, 7hi had volunteered to face his enemies in his house. His single companion was Abl Bakr. They two conceated themselves in the cave of Thaur, three miles from Mecca, for three nights, with the enemy prowing around in great numbers in fruitiess search of them. "We are but two," said Abl Bakr. "Nay," said Mulyammad, "for God is with us." Faith gave their minds peace, and God gave them safety. They reached Medina, and a glorious chapter opened for Islam. The forces that helped them were not seen, but their power was irresistible.

1303. Literally, "the second of two," which afterwards became Abii Bakr's proud title.

1304. Cf. in. 26.

1305. The superlatives in the Arabic I have rendered by the periphrases, "humbled to the depths" and "exalted to the heights," as they accord better with the genius of the English language. The enemies of Islam had boasted that they would root it out: the result showed them up as ridiculous and despicable.

- 41. Go ye forth, (whether equipped) 1000
  Lightly or heavily, and strive
  And struggle, with your goods
  And your persons, in the Cause
  Of God. That is best
  For you, if ye (but) knew.
- 42. If there had been Immediate gain (in sight), And the journey easy, They would (all) without doubt Have followed thee, but The distance was long, (And weighed) on them. They would indeed swear By God, "If we only could, We should certainly Have come out with you:" They would destroy their own souls; loss that they would be they would

C. 95. The Believers do their duty, and make (xz. 43-72.) No excuses,—unlike the Hypocrites,
Who are a burden whether they join you
Or hold back. No help should be accepted
From these last, as they are false and insincere,
And have a slanderous tongue. Alms
Are for the poor and the needy, not for those Who come in hypocrisy and mock
At things solemn. But the Hypocrites
Will be found out and receive due punishment,
While the righteous will be rewarded
With bliss and the good pleasure of God.

<sup>1306</sup> Whether equipped lightly or heavily: to be taken both literally and metaphorically.

All were invited, and they were to bring such resources as they had.—light-armed or heavy-armed, on foot or mounted, experienced men for posts of danger, raw men for duties for which they were fit. All would and should help. Even those who were too old or feeble to go could contribute such money or resources as they had.

<sup>1307.</sup> The arts and excuses of the Hypocrites are here exposed. If there had been booty in sight or an easy walk-over, they would have come. All their oaths are false, and in taking the false oaths they are destroying their spiritual life. Indeed the backsiders are jeopardising their own physical lives in hanging back. If the enring succeeded, they would all suffer.

  Some preparation therefor;
  But God was averse

  So He made them lag behind,
  And they were told,

1308. Literally, "God give thee forgiveness!" But there is no question of fault here, and fmām Rāzt understands the expression to mean an exclamation,—as one might say in English, "God bless you!" In Shakespeare "God save you!" is a simple friendly greeting, without any question of danger: *\varepsilon* in *\text{unch Aod about Nothing." iii. 2. 82. Note that in \text{Q}. iii. 15t, last clause, "forgiveness" is put in juxtanostion to "grace" as having closely allied meanings. What the Holy Apostle had done in the Tablic expedition was that he had been granting exemptions which may appear from a military point of view tool liberal. He was actuated by motives of kindness as weit as policy; *\vertinderss, because, in the urgency of the moment he did not wish any one who had a spolicy; *\vertinderss, because, in the urgency of the moment he did not wish any one who had a real excuse to be refused exemption; and policy, because, if any one did not come with hearly good-will, he would be a burden instead of a help to the army. The policy was justified, because in fact 30,000 men or more followed him. But that did not in any way justify the slackers, and in a review of the position, the slackers and hypocrites are justly condemned.

1309. Doubt takes away all stability of conduct, while Faith makes a man firm in action and cool and collected in mind.

- 49. Among them is (many) a man Who says: "Grant me exemption And draw me not but Into trial." Have they not Fallen into trial already? And indeed Hell surrounds The Unbelievers (on all sides).
- 50. If good befalls thee,
  It grieves them; but if
  A misfortune befalls thee,
  They say, "We took indeed
  Our precautions beforehand,"
  And they turn away rejoicing.

 وَيَتَوَلُوا وَهُ فَرَونَ

1310. Khilāl has more than one meaning, but I follow the interpretation of Ragib and the majority of accepted Commentators, who take it to mean "in your midst"

1311. Evil plotters against Truth are only too glad to get an opportunity of meddling from within with affairs which they want to spoil or upset. They plot from outside, but they like to egi into the linner circle, that their chances of intrigue may be all the greater. They are, however, unwilling to incur any danger or any self-sacnizes. Their whole activities are directed to mischief. Great wisdom is required in a leader to deal with such a situation, and the best of such leaders must need divine guidance, as was forthcoming in this case.

1312. Fitnet, as explained in n. 1198, viii, 25, may mean either trial or temptation, or else tumult, turnoil, or seldition. The Commentators here take the former meaning, and explain that some Hypocrites claimed exemption from service in the Tabilit expedition in the direction of Syria on the plea that they could not withstand the charms of Syrian women and ought best to stay at home. The artwer is: "But you have already fallent into temptation here by refeating service and disobeying the call." But perhaps the other meaning of "turnoil" may also be permissible as a secondary echo: in that case they object to be drawn into the turnoil of way, but they are toold that they are already in a moral turnoil in advancing a disingeauous plea. In using the English word "trial" in the transition, I have also had in my mind the two shades of meaning associated with that word in English.

- 51. Say: "Nothing will happen to us Except what God has decreed For us: He is our Protector"; And on God let the Believers Put their trust.
- 52. Say: "Can you expect for us (Any fate) other than one Of two glorious things—(Martyrdom or victory)? But we can expect for you Either that God will send His punishment from Himself, Or by our hands. So wait (Expectant); we too Will wait with you." "In Just 1997."

  Accepted are: that they reject
  God and His Apostle;
  That they come to prayer
  Without earnestness; and that They offer contributions
  unwillingly
- Let not their wealth Nor their (following in) sons 1315

1313. The waiting of the Unbelievers and that of the Believers are in different senses. The Unbelievers wish for disaster to the Believers, but the Delievers will either conquer or die as marityrs in the Cause, in either case happy in the issue. The Believers expect punishment for the Unbeliever for their infidelity, either through their own instrumentality, or in some other way in God's Plan, and the Unbelievers would not like it in either case. Cy. (v. 158.

1314. The Hypocrites, who secretly plotted against Islam, might sometimes (and they did) make a show of making some contribution to the Cause in order to keep up their pretence. Their contributions were not acceptable, whether they seemed to give willingly or unwillingly, because rebellion and disobedience were in their hearts. Three reasons are specifically given for their rejection, as the next verse: (1) they did not believe; (2) their prayers were not earnest, but for mere show; and (3) in reality their hearts were not behind the contributions which they offered. Nothing is acceptable to God which does not proceed from a pure and sincere beart.

1315. If they appeared to be prosperous, with their purses and their quivers full (metaphorically), they were not to be envied. In reality their wealth and their sons might themselves be a snare: Cf, viil. 28. On this particular occasion this was proved to the hilt. The wealth of the Pagans filled them with pride, darkened their understanding, and led to their destruction. Their sons and followers adopted the Faith which their fathers had fought against, much to the chagrin of the fathers, whose spiritual death was even worse than their discompliture in this world.

  With what God and His Apostle
  Gave them, and had said,
  "Sufficient unto us is God!
  God and His Apostle will soon
  Give us of His bounty:

  (That would have been the right

<sup>1118.</sup> Sadaga = alms, that which is given in God's name, mainly to the poor and needy, and for the cognate purposes specified in the next verse but one. Zahār is the regular and obligatory charity in an organised Muslim community, usually 24 per cent, of merchandise and 10 per cent, on the fruits of the earth. There is a wast body of literature on this subject. The main points may be studied in the Hidāpa di fursi, of Shahā Burhānud-din' Ali.

<sup>1319</sup> Selfish men think that charitable lunds are fair game for raids, but the Islamic standards on this subject are very high. The enforcement of such standards is a lways unpopular, and even the Holy Apostle was subjected to obloquy and slander for his strictness to principle. In doubtful cases, claimants who are disappointed should not blame the principles or those who enforce them, but put their trust in God, whose bountes are unbounded, and are given to all, whether rich or poor, according to their needs and their diserts. For every one it is excellent advice to say: deserve before you desire.

1320. Alms or charitable gifts are to be given to the poor and the needy and those who are employed in their service. That is, charitable, funds are not to be diverted to other use, but the genuine expenses of administering charity are properly chargeable to such funds. Who are the needy? Besides the ordinary indigent, there are certain classes of people whose need is great and should be relieved. Those mentioned here are: (1) nen who have been weamed from hostility, to Truth, who would probably be persecuted by their former associates, and require assistance until they establish new connections in their new environment; (2) those in bondage, literally and figuratively; captives of war must be redeemed; slaves should be helped to freedom; those in the bondage of ignorance or superstition or unfavourable environment should be helped to freedom (evelop their own gifts; (3) those who are held in the grip of debt should be helped to economic freedom; (4) those who are truggling and striving in God's Cause, by teaching or fighting or in duties assigned to them by the righteous finds, who are thus mable to earn their ordinary living; and G3 strangers stranded on the way. All these have a claim to charity. They should be relieved by individual or organised effort, but in a responsible way.

1321. The assonance of the Arabic words "'yw-fwma" and "wfwmum" is of course lost in the Translation. But the sense remains. Detractors of the Prophet said, "OI he listens to everybody!"
"Yes," is the answer, "he listens for their good; he is a mercy and a blessing to all men of Faith, but specially to you (who are addressed)." The general statement is emphasised for the particular people addressed,

- 63. Know they not that for those Who oppose God and His Apostle, Is the Fire of Hell?—

<sup>1322.</sup> The dissection of the motives of the Hypocrites alarmed them. For it meant that they would faal in their policy of having the best of both worlds and undermining the loyalty of the weaker members of the Muslim community. So they turn it off as a jest. But they are sharply rebuked: "Can you make such solemn matters subjects of playful jokes? Fie upon you! You are found out, and your guile is of no effect." In fact many of the Hypocrites turned over a new leaf and became good Believus afterwards, while a few definitely threw in their lot with the open enemies of Islam and shared their false. This is referred to in the next verse but one.

<sup>1324.</sup> Literally, "the Hypocrites...are of each other". The forms of hypocrisy may vary, but they are all alike, and they understand each other's hypocrisy. They hold together.

They enjoin evil, and forbid What is just, and are close the With their hands. They have Forgotten God; so He 1548 Hath forgotten them. Verily The Hypocrites are rebellious And perverse.

- 68. God hath promised the Hypocrites Men and women, and the rejecters, Of Faith, the fire of Hell: Therein shall they dwell: Sufficient is it for them: For them is the curse of God, 1217 And an enduring punishment.—

<sup>1325</sup> The English phrase "close-fisted" would cover only a part of the meaning. The hand is the symbol of power, help, and assistance. This may be snanrial, or it may be in other ways. The Hypocrites pretend a great deal, but are of no use or real help to any one.

In the case of Noah and Abraham, the word I have translated as "people of..." is goars, these prophets were messengers each to his own people or nation, as as was also Hild to the 'Ad people and $4llih to the Tambid people. The word used for the Midianities is $4.950-6.4Medyan, which I have translated "man of Midian" for want of a better word. The Midianities were for the greater part of their finistory nomads, with pasture grounds but no settled territory or town. The town of Madyan on the Guil of 'Aqaba refers to much later times when the Midianites as a people had ceased to count. See n. 1053 to vil. 85.

1332. If men are false to their covenants and words, the natural consequence will be hypocrisy to cover their falsehood. All consequences of our own acts are in Quranic language ascribed to God. Such consequences will last till the Day of Judgment, when they will have to account for their deeds. They may think that they are deceiving men by their hypocrisy, but they cannot deceive God, to Whom all their most secret thoughts and plots and doings are known.

1333. When financial help is necessary for the Cause, every Muslim contributes what he can. Those who can afford large sums are proud to bring them in of their own free-will, and hose who have contribute their mile or their labour. Both kinds of gifts are equally precious because of the faith and good-will behind them, and only cynics will laugh at the scantiness of the one or the lavishness of the other. Sometimes they not only laugh, but attribute wrong motives to the givers. Such conduct is here reprimanded.

1337. On the death of a Muslim, it is the pious duty of every neighbouring Muslim who can, to assist in the simple funeral ceremonies,—the prayer for mercy before the body is consigned to the grave, and the consignment of the body to the grave, by a simple, solemn, and dignified titual, in which the near relatives or friends help with the bier while the rest stand by the grave-side. For those who have shown hostility to Islam, this would not be seemly and is forbidden.

<sup>1339,</sup> Khawālif, plural of Khālifa, those (feminine) who remain behind at home when the men go to war; women. There is a stinging taunt in this, a suggestion that such men were cowards, preferring to remain behind like women when stiff work was to be done by men in defending their homes. They were not only cowards, but fools; as they did not understand their own best interests. If the enemy got the better of their breathren, they would themselves be crushed. "Their hearts are sealed": the habits of cowardice and hypocrisy which they have adopted have become their second nature.

<sup>1340, &</sup>quot;Good things," and "prosperity," are to be understood both in the physical and in the highest spiritual sense as the next verse makes clear,

134]. In this verse there is a reminiscence, but not an exact repitition, of verse 72 above. This balances the parallel repetition or reminiscence in verse 85 above. See n. 1339. The symmetry of the argument is thus completed, as regards the Hypocrites of Medina, before we pass on to consider the case of the Hypocrites among the desert Bedouins in section 12.

1342. Not only had the Hypocrites a nest in Medina, but their tactics affected some of the village or desert Bedouins, who loved war and would have followed a standard of war even if no question of Faith or a pacred Cause was involved. But some of them, though professing Islam, were frightened by the hardships of the Tabbk expedition and the prospect of meeting the trained armies of the great Roman (Byzantine) Empire. They made all sorts of lying excuses, but really their want of faith made them ineligible for being enlisted in a sacred Cause, in the terms of ix. 46-47 and ix. 53-54. Some came to make excuses; others did not even come, but sat at home, ignoring the summons.

1343. Though active service in person or by contributing resources is expected in emergencies of every person who believes in the Cause, there are some who must necessarily be exempted without the least blame attaching to them. Such would be those who are weak in body on account of age, sex, infirmity, or illness. Personal service in their case is out of the question, but they could contribute towards expenses if they are able. But if they are too poor to aflord even such assistance, they are excused. But in all cases the motive must be sincere, and there should be a desire to serve and do such duty as they can. With such motives people are doing good or right in whatever form they express their service: sometimes, in Million's words, "they also serve who only stand and wart." In any case their purity of motive would get God's grace and forgiveness, and we must not criticise even if we thought they might have done more.

Or ill, or who find No resources to spend 7On the Cause), if they Are sincere (in duty) to God And His Apostle: No ground (of complaint) Can there be against such As do right: and God Is Oft-Forgiving, Most Merciful.

- 92. Nor (is there blame) On those who came to thee To be provided with mounts. 1344 And when thou saidst. "I can find no mounts For you, " they turned back, Their eyes streaming with tears Of grief that they had No resources wherewith To provide the expenses.

1344. Hamala, yahmilu, here seems to mean; to provide means of transport, viz., mounts (horses, camels, etc.) for riding, and perhaps beasts of burden for carrying equipment and baggage, suitable to the rank of those concerned. It may possibly mean other facilities for getting about, such as boots and shoes, or provisions: for an army's march depends upon all these things. Where people fight as volunteers for a cause, without an extensive war fund, those who can afford it provide such things for themselves, but those without means, yet anxious to serve, have to be left behind. Their disappointment is in proportion to their eagerness to serve.

1345. Cf. ix, 87, where similar phrases are used for a similar shirking of duty by towns-folk, while here we are considering the desert folk. It is not only a duty, but a precious privilege, to serve a great Cause by personal self-sacrifice. Those who shirk such an opportunity know not what they miss.

- 94. They will present their excuses To you when ve return To them. Say thou: "Present No excuses : we shall not Believe you: God hath already Informed us of the true state Of matters concerning you: It is your actions that God And His Apostle will observe: In the end will ve Be brought back to Him Who knoweth what is hidden And what is open: Then will He show you The truth of all That ve did."

1346. The payments refer to the regular Chanity established by Islam—the obligatory aims. If you look upon them as a fine or a burden, their virtue is lost. If you rejoice that you have there an opportunity of helping the Community to maintain its standards of public assistance and to suppress the unseemly beggary and loathsome importunity whose relief is only governed by motives of getting ind of an advanced obstacles on the way, then your outlook is entirely different. Believe in God and the Last Day,
And look on their payments
As pious gifts bringing them

C. 97.—The vanguard of Faith think nothing
(ix. 100-118) Of self-sacrifice. Their reward is God's Good Pleasure. Even those who do wrong
But repent will obtain His Mercy: not so
Those who persist in Unfaith, Hypocrisy,
And Mischief. God's grace is free and abounding
For the rightcous. Even if they waver
Or fail, He will turn to them in Mercy,
If only they repent and come back unto Him.

SECTION 13.

100. Me he vanguard (of Islam)—1468
The first of those who forsook
(Their homes) and of those Who gave them aid, and (also)
Those who follow them
In (all) good deeds,—
Well-pleased is God with them,
As are they with Him:

© وَالْسَلِعُونِ الْأَوْلُونَ مِنَ الْمُهَاجِ مِن وَالْأَفْسَارِ وَالْأَنِيَ اتَّبَعُوهُ وَلِمُسَانِ رَعِنَى اللَّهُ عَنْهُمْهِ وَرَعَنُوا عَنْهُ

1347. The Mercy of God is always present, as the sun is always shining. But when we have perpared ourselves to receive it, we come to the full enjoyment of it, as a man who was in a shade comes out by his effort into the open, and basks in sunshine.

1348. The vanguard of Islam—those in the first rank—are those who dare and suffer for the Cause and never Binch. The first historical examples are the Multijirs and the Ansar. The Multijirs—those who forsook their homes in Mecca and migrated to Medina, the holy Apostle being among the last to leave the post of danger, are mentioned first. Then come the Ansar, the Helpers, the clitzens of Medina who invited them, welcomed them, and gave them aid, and who formed the pivot of the new Community. Then are mentioned all who follow them in good deeds: not only the early heroes and ordinary men and women who had been Commanions of the Apostle or had seen him, but men and women in all ages who have lived noble lives. In spite of all their sacrifice and suffering they rejoice in the precious gift of the Good Pleasure of God, and their Salvation is the Supreme Pelicity which such Good Pleasure givers, symbolised by the Gardens of Heaver.

For them hath He prepared Gardens under which rivers flow, 130 To dwell therein for ever: That is the supreme Felicity.

101. © retain of the desert Arabs
Round about you are Hypocrites,
As well as (desert Arabs) among
The Medina folk: 1500 they are Obstinate in hypocrisy: thou
Knowest them not: We know
them:
Twice shall We punish them: 1511
And in addition shall they be Sent to a grievous Penalty.

- 102. Others (there are who) have Acknowledged their wrong-doings:
  They have mixed an act
  That was good with another 1934
  That was evil. Perhaps God
  Will turn unto them (in mercy):
  For God is Oft-Forgiving,
  Most Merciful.
- 103. Of their goods take alms,
  That so thou mightest
  Purify and sanctify them;
  And pray on their behalf.
  Verily thy prayers are a source
  Of security for them:
  And God is One
  Who heareth and knoweth.

1349. Note how this symbolism comes in in the descriptions of the final accomplishment of the destiny of man. In mathematical science it would be like a letter or formula which would sum up a long course of reasoning. In the graphic arts it would be like a Lotus in Buddhism, which expresses a whole complex of emotional or religious experiences. In music it would be like the characteristic notes in a Rāga or Rāgint. In this very Sūra it occurs before in ix. 72 and ix. 89, where see n. 1341. We are considering the good and bad Bedouins and rounding up the argument about them.

130. The desert Arabs were not all simple folk. There were cunning hypocrites among them: both among certain tribes encamped round about Medina and certain others in Medina, itself. I understand that both groups are of the A*ab, to whom the context refers, and not of the sertled citizens of Medina, whose Hypocrites were already referred to in previous sections. They might look simple, but they were in their ignorance all the more obstinate and hypocritical.

1351. Their punishment in this world was double, viz., not only in their discomfiture, but because in their obstinate ignorance, they failed to understand the accomplished facts, while oleverer men realised that their hostility to Islam was hopeless. In addition to their discomfiture in this life, they would have to meet the spiritual penalties to come.

1352. There were some whose will was weak and succumbed to evil, although there was much good in them. To them is held out the promise of forgiveness if they would repent and undertake all acts of Muslim charity, which would purify their souls, aided by the prayers of God's Messenger. Then would they get the Peace that comes from purify and right conduct.

104. IK now they not that God
Doth accept repentance from
His votaries and receives
Their gifts of charity, and that God is verily He,
The Oft-Returning, Most Merciful?

105. And say: "Work (righteousness): 1333 Soon will God observe your work, And His Apostle, and the

Believers:
Believers:
To the Knower of what is
Hidden and what is open:
Then will, He show you
The truth of all that ye did."

105. There are (yet) others, Held.in suspense for the command Of God, whether He will Punish them, or turn in mercy <sup>154</sup> To them: and God Is All-Knowing, Wise.

107. And there are those 1381
Who put up a mosque

1353. The repentant should be encouraged, after their repentance, to amend their conduct. The kindly interest of their brethren in them will strengthen them in virtue and blot out their past. When they go back into Eternity, they will understand the healing grace which saved them, just as the evil ones will then have their eyes opened to the real truth of their spiritual degradation (ix, 94). The similar words, in verse 84 and here, clench the contrast.

1334. Three categories of men are mentioned, whose faith was tested and found wanting in the Tabba affair, but their characteristics are perfectly general, and we may here consider them in their general aspects: (i) the deep-dy'ed hypocrites, who when found out make excuses because otherwise they will suffer ignominy; they are unregenerate and obstinate, and there is no hope for them (ix. 101); (2) there are those who have lapsed into evil, but are not altogether evil; they repent and amend, and are accepted (ix. 102-105); and (3) there are doubtful cases, but God will judge them (ix. 106). A fourth category is mentioned in ix. 107, which will be discussed later.

1335. Three categories of Hypocrites having already been mentioned (n 1346), a fourth class of institious evul-doers is now mentioned, whose type is illustrated in the story of the Qubba "Mosque of mischief (db/rā/)." Qubba is a suburb of Medina, about three miles to the south-east. When the Holy Prophet arrived at Medina for Hijrat, he rested four days in Qubba before entering the town of Medina. Here was built the first mosque, the "Mosque of Petry" (Taque'a, or the mosque of the power of Islam \Q\tilde{Q}\tilde{u}\tilde{u}\tilde{u}\tilde{l}\tilde{a}\tilde{m}\tilde{l}\tilde{u}\tilde{l}\tilde{u}\tilde{l}\tilde{u}\tilde{l}\tilde{u}\tilde{l}\tilde{u}\tilde{l}\tilde{u}\tilde{l}\tilde{u}\tilde{l}\tilde{l}\tilde{u}\tilde{l}\tilde{l}\tilde{u}\tilde{l}\tilde{u}\tilde{l}\tilde{l}\tilde{u}\tilde{l}\tilde{l}\tilde{u}\tilde{l}\tilde{l}\tilde{l}\tilde{u}\tilde{l}\ti

By way of mischief and infidelity— To disunite the Believers— And in preparation for one <sup>156</sup> Who warred against God And His Apostle aforetime. They will indeed swear That their intention is nothing. But good; but God doth declare That they are certainly liars.

108. Never stand thou forth therein.

Was laid from the first day
On piety; it is more worthy

- 109. Which then is best?—he that Layeth his foundation On piety to God And His Good Pleasure?—or he That layeth his foundation On an undermined sand-cliff 1589 Ready to crumble to pieces? And it doth crumble to pieces With him, into the fire Of Hell. And God guideth not People that do wrong.
- 110. The foundation of those Who so build is never free

1356. Abū 'Āmir, surnamed the Rākib (Monk), as he had been in touch with Christian monks. See last note.

1357, .The original "Mosque of Piety" built by the holy Apostle himself.

1358. The true Muslim must be pure in body, mind, and heart. His motives should always be sincere, and his religion without any alloy of worldly gain.

1359. A man who builds his life on Piety (which includes sincerity and the purity of all motives) and his hopes on the Good Pleasure of God, builds on a firm foundation of rock that will never be shaken. In contrast to him is the man who builds on a shitting sand-cliff on the brink of an abyss, already undermined by forces which he does not see. The cliff and the foundations all crumble to pieces along with him, and he is plunged into the Fire of misery from which there is no escape.

From suspicion and shakiness 1360 In their hearts, until Their hearts are cut to pieces, And God is All-Knowing, Wise.

SECTION 14.

111. Sod hath purchased of the Believers
Their persons and their goods;
For theirs (in return)
Is the Garden (of Paradise): Livi They fight in His Cause,
And slay and are slain:
A promise binding on Him
In Truth, through the Law,
The Gospel, and the Qur-an. Livi
And who is more faithful
To his Covenant than God?
Then rejoice in the bargain
Which ye have concluded:
That is the achievement supreme.

بنوا ريب في فلونهو مراة الانقطع فَلُونُهُ مُ اللّهُ عَلَيْ مَكِيدً اللّهُ عَلَيْ مَكِيدً اللّهُ عَلَيْ مَكِيدً اللّهُ عَلَيْ مَكِيدً اللّهُ عَلَيْ اللّهُ عَلَيْ اللّهُ عَلَيْ اللّهُ الْمُتَاتَةً اللّهُ اللللّهُ الللّهُ الللّهُ اللللللللّهُ الللللّهُ الللّهُ الللّهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ اللّهُ الللّهُ

1351. In a human bargain both sides give something and receive some advantage. In the divine bargain of God with man, God takes man's will and soul and his wealth and goods, and gives him in return ever-lasting Felicity. Man fights in God's Cause and carries out His will, the Universal Will. All that he has to give up is the ephemeral things of this world, while he gains eternal salvation, the fullfilment of his highest spiritual hopes,—a supreme achievement indeed.

1362. We offer our whole selves and our possessions to God, and God gives us Salvation, i.e., eternal freedom from the bondage of this world. This is the true doctrine of redemption; and we are taught that this is the doctrine not only of the Our-an but of the earlier Revelations,-the original Law of Moses and the original Gospel of Jesus. Any other view of redemption is rejected by Islam, especially that of corrupted Christianity, which thinks that some other person suffered for our sins and we are redeemed by his blood. It is our self-surrender that counts, not other people's merits. Our complete self-surrender may include fighting for the cause, both spiritual and physical. As regards actual fighting with the sword there has been some difference in theological theories at different times, but very little in the practice of those who framed those theories. The Jewish wars were ruthless wars of extermination. The Old Testament does not mince matters on this subject. In the New Testament St. Paul, in commending the worthy fruits of Faith, mentions Gideon. Barak, and other warriors of the Old Testament as his ideals, "Who through faith subdued kingdoms,...waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens..." (Hebrews, xi. 32-34.) The monkisk morality of the Gospels in their present form has never been followed by any selfrespecting Christian or other nation in history. Nor is it common-sense to ignore lust of blood in unregenerate man as a form of evil which has to be combated "within the limits set by God' (Q. ix. 112).

In repentance; that serve Him,
And praise Him; that wander
In devotion to the Cause of God;
That how down and prostrate themselves
In prayer; that enjoin good
And forbid evil; and observe
The limits set by God;—
(These do rejoice). So proclaim
The glad tidines to the Believers.

113. It is not fitting,
For the Prophet and those Who believe, that they should Pray for forgiveness
For Pagans, even though
They be of kin, after it is Clear to them that they
Are companions of the Fire. 1284

For his father's forgiveness
Only because of a promise
He had made to him. 1.45
But when it became clear
To him that he was An enemy to God, he
Dissociated himself from him:
For Abraham was most Tender-hearted, forbearing. 1146

115. And God will not mislead 1860 A people after He hath الغنيمين آلمنيدون ألخيدون
 النتيخ الزكيف آلمنيدون آلأمرون

1363. We are to rejoice that by giving up such small things as ourselves and our possessions we are to be rewarded with such a great thing as the eternal life of felicity. The fruly righteous, whose lives in various aspects are described in this verse, do so rejoice. The good news is to be proclaimed to all Believers, including the weakest among us, so that they may profit by that example.

1364. This is usually understood to refer to the prayers for the dead, (1) if they died unrepentant after Islam was preached to them, (2) if they actively resisted or opposed the Faith to the last, and (3) if the person praying knows that on account of deliberate continuary the deceased may be said to have had the doors of mercy closed to him. How is he to know? The knowledge must come from special commands as declared by the Holy Prophet in his life-time regarding individuals. Where no light is saviable from this source we must follow the best judgment we can.

1365 Abraham and his unbelieving father are referred to in vi. 74. Apparently when Abraham was convinced that the conditions mentioned in the last note applied to his father, he gave up praying for him, as the physical bond was cut off by the spiritual hostility. For the promise to pray for his father, see xix, 47.

1366 Abraham was loyal and tender-hearted, and bore with much that he disapproved, being in this a prototype of Muşafâ, and it must have gone against his grain to cut off relations in that way. But it would obviously be wrong for a human being to entreat God for mercy on people who had finally rejected God.

1367. God's clear commands are given, so that Believers may not be misled by their human frailty into unbecoming conduct.

Guided them, in order that He may make clear to them What to fear (and avoid)— For God hath knowledge Of all things.

116. "CInto God belongeth
The dominion of the heavens
And the earth. He giveth life
And He taketh it. Except for Him
Ye have no protector '
Nor helper."

117. God turned with favour
To the Prophet, the Muhajirs, 1600
And the Anşar,—who followed
Him in a time of distress,
After that the hearts of a part 1700
Of them had nearly swerved
(From duty); but He turned
To them (also): for He is Unto them Most Kind,
Most Merciful.

118. (He turned in mercy also)
To the three who were left
Behind; (they felt guilty) 1390
To such a degree that the earth

مَدَهُمْ حَنَّى يُسَايِفَ كَلْمُ مَمَا يَتَقُونَ اللَّهِ وَاللَّهُ وَاللَّهُ اللَّهُ عَلِيْهُ اللَّهُ وَاللَّهُ اللَّهُ وَاللَّهُ وَالل

1368, Cf. ix. 100. The Muhājirs were the people who originally forsook their homes in Mecca and followed Muḥafā in exile to Medina. The Anaār were the Medina people who received them with honour and hospitallity unto their city. Both these groups were staunch supporters of Islam, and proved their Faith by great sacrifices. But in the difficult days of the Tabūk expedition some of them, not perversely, but out of lethargy and human weakness, had failed to follow the standard. They were forgiven, and they afterwards acquitted themselves with zeal.

1369. Note that the "swerving from duty" was merely an inclination due to the weakness of human nature in the face of new difficulties; that it only affected a part of the men for a time; and that it was overcome even in their case by the grace of God, so that they all did their duty, and were freely lorgiven their incipient weakness, which they conquered. There were three exceptions, which are referred to in the next verse, 1370, Among the Faithful, the largest number consisted of those who were perfectly staunch and ever ready to do their duty. They obtained the love and good pleasure of God. Next Came a few who wavered because their will was weak and they were daunted by the dangers and difficulties that faced them; God's saving grace protected them and they conquered their weakhess, and did not fail in their duty; God forgave them and accepted their repentance. Lastly, in the illustration taken from the Tabbk affair, there were some who actually failed in their duty, not from continuacy or ill-will, but from thoughtlessness, slackness, and human weakhess; they actually failed to obey the Holy Prophet's summons, and were naturally called on to explain, and were excluded from the life of the Community. Their mental state is here described graphically. Though the earth is spacious, to them it was constrained. In their own souls they had a feeling of constraint. In worldly affluence they felt poor in spirit. They realised that they could not fee from God, but could only find solace and reluge in coming back to Him. They freely repented and showed it in their deeds, and God freetly forgave them and took them to His grace. Though illustrated by the particular examples of the Amak, my, Ka'bh, Nark, and Hisl, the lesson is prafectly general and is good for all times.

Seemed constrained to them, For all its speciousness, And their (very) Souls seemed Straitened to them,—
And they perceived that There is no fleeing from God (And no refuge) but to Himself. Then He turned to them, That they might repent:
For God is Oft-Returning, Most Merciful.

عَالَيْكُ قَصَافَ عَلَيْهِ أَنْسُهُمُ وَطَائِزاً أَنَّ لَا مَنْكُمُ وَطَائِزاً أَنَّ لَا مَنْكُمُ وَطَائِزاً أَن لَا مَنْهَا يَتِ اللّهِ إِلَّا إِلَيْهِ ثُمُّ اَبَ مَلِيْمُ لِلْمُونِوُّا إِنْ اللّهُ مُوَالْقُوامُ الْرَحْيُهُ

God's Call: in this is our fullest satisfaction And reward. But our striving should include Study and teaching, for the Brethren's benefit. For God's Message increases our Faith And leads us to love Him and trust Him, The Lord of the Throne of Glory Supreme.

SECTION 15.

119. ye who believe! Fear God And be with those Who are true (in word and deed).

120. It was not fitting
For the people of Medina
And the Bedouin Arabs
Of the neighbourhood, to refuse
To follow God's Apostle,
Nor to prefer their own lives
To his: because nothing
Could they suffer or do,
But was reckoned to their credit
As a deed of righteousness,—
Whether they suffered thirst,
Or fatigue, or hunger, in the Cause
Of God, or trod paths
To raise the ire of the Unbelievers,
Or received any injury <sup>194</sup>

1371. Again, the illustration is that of Tabbk, but the lesson is general. We must not hold our own comfort or lives dearer than that of our Leader, nor dearrt him in the hour of danger. If we have true devotion, we shall hold our own lives or comfort chaep in comparison to his. But whatever service we render to the Cause of God, and whatever sufferings, hardships, or injuries we endure, or whatever resources we spend for the Cause,—all goes to raise our degree in the spiritual world. Nothing is lost. Our reward is far greater in worth than any little service we can render, or any little hardship we can suffer, or any little contributions we can make to the Cause. We "painfully attain to io".

Whatever from an enemy:
For God suffereth not
The reward to be lost
Of those who do good;—

All go forth together:

From every expedition

They could devote themselves
To studies in religion,
And admonish the people
When they return to them,
That thus they (may learn) 1893
To guard themselves (against evil)

123. Ye who believe! Fight The Unbelievers who gird you about, 1896
And let them find firmness

And let them find firmness
In you: and know that God

1372. Cut across a valley: this is specially mentioned in a symbolical way, as denoting an individual act of heroism, dash, or bravery. To march with the troops along valleys, or, spiritually, tread paths of danger along with our Comrades, is good and praiseworthy; but one that dashes across a stream, all alone, for some special deed of bravery where the flam of comradeship does not sustain him, needs special mention. Notice that both the things mentioned in this verse,—the spending of resources and the dashing across a valley—are individual acts, while those mentioned in the last verse are collective acts, which are in some ways easier. The individual acts having been mentioned, the next verse follows naturally

1373. Fighting may be inevitable, and where a call is made by the righteous Imām, it should be obeyed. But fighting is not to be glorified to the exclusion of all else. Even among those who are able to go forth, a party should remain behind—one in each townshipor circle—for purposes of study so that when the fighters return home, their minds may be attuned again to the more normal interests of religious life, under properly instructed teachers. The students and teachers are soldiers of the likadi in their split of obedience and discipline.

1374. When conflict becomes inevitable, the first thing is to clear our surroundings of all evil, for it is only evil that we can rightly fight. To evil we must put up a stout and stiff resistance. Mealy-mouthed compromises are not right for soldiers of truth and righteousness. They are often a compound of cowardice, weariness, greed, and corruptibility.

- 124. Whenever there cometh down has a Stra; some of them say:
  "Which of you has had
  His faith increased by it?"
  Yea, those who believe,—
  Their faith is increased,
  And they do rejoice.

  To their doubt, and they will die
  In a state of Unbelief
- 126. See they not that they
  Are tried every year <sup>187</sup>
  Once or twice? Yet they Turn not in repentance,
  And they take no heed,
- 127. Whenever there cometh down
  A Sora, they look at each other,
  (Saying), "Doth anyone see

  Then they turn aside:
  God hath turned their hearts <sup>LFB</sup>

1375. The incompatibility of Unfaith and Faith are contrasted in this section in respect of revelation and the divine teacher. The Upbelievers laugh at revelation, and say to each other mockingly: "Does this increase your faith?" To the Believer every new aspect of God's truth as revealed increases his faith, and wonder, and gratitude. He rejoices, because he gets added strength for life and achievement.

1376. Cf. ii. 10 and several similar passages. Just as the light, which to healthy eyes gives enlightenment, causes pain to the diseased eye, which emits unclean matter, so to those spiritually diseased, Gody stace is unwelcome, and they put forth more doubts to cover their disease. And they die in their disease, and of their disease. Note the aptress of the metaphor.

1377. Yet, in spite of their infidelity, one or two chances are given them every year. The door is not closed to them. Yet they deliberately turn away, and take no heed of all the warnings which their own nature and the teaching and example of good men should give them.

1378: Even the Unbelievers, in their heart and conscience, feel uncomfortable when they turn aside from Faith and Truth, and therefore their turning aside is figured by furtive glances, such as we may suppose literally to have been cast by the Hypocrites in the assemblies of the holy Apostle. Then they sink away, feeling superior in their minds. And yet, if they only knew it, their contomacy deprives them of God grace and light. They are turning Grace away, and when God withdraws it altogether, they perish utterly.

Yourselves: it grieves him That ye should perish: Ardently anxious is he Over you: to the Believers Is he most kind and merciful.<sup>139</sup>

129. But if they turn away,
Say: "God sufficeth me:
There is no god but He:
On Him is my trust,—
He the Lord of the Throng
(Of Glory) Supreme! " 1800

<sup>1379.</sup> The tender heart of the Teacher is grieved that any among his flock should rush headlong to min. He watches ardently over them, and whenever any of them show signs of Faith, his kindness and mercy surround him and rejoice over him.

<sup>1380.</sup> But if the Message is rejected, he still proclaims the burning Faith of his heart, which is unquenchable. God is all in all. To trust Him is to find the accomplishment of all spiritual desire. His grandeur is figured by a lofty Throne, supreme in gloy 7.

Thus have we been led, through a notable incident in Mustafa's earthly career, to truths of the highest spiritual import,

INTRODUCTION TO STRA X (Yūnus).

Chronologically this Sūra and the five that follow (Sūras xi, xii, xiii, xiv, and xv, are closely connected, and were revealed in the late Mcccan period, as the great event of the Hijrat was gradually approaching down the stream of Time. But their chronology has no particular significance.

On the other hand their arrangement in the gradation of Quranic teaching fits in with the subject-matter. S. viii. and S. ix. were mainly concerned with the first questions that arose on the formation of the new and organised Community of Islam in its conflict with those who wished to suppress or destroy it or use force to prevent its growth and the consolidation of its ideals. See Introductions to those Stras. The present group leads us to the questions that face us when external hostility has been met, and our relations to God have to be considered from shigher stand-point than that of self-preservation. How does revelation work? What is the meaning of divine grace and its withdrawal? How do the Messengers of God deliver their Message? How should we receive it?

All these questions revolve round the revelation of the Qur-an and each Sara of this group except the 13th has the Abbreviated Letters A.L.R. attached to it. S. xiii. has the letters A.L.M.R., and we shall discuss this variation when we come to S. xiii.

As shown in Appendix I (Sipara 3), the Abbreviated Letters are mystic symbols. about whose meaning there is no authoritative explanation. If the theory advanced in n. 25 to ii. I has any validity, and the present group A.L.R., is cognate to the group A.L.M., we have to consider and form some idea in our minds as to the probable meaning of the variation. We took A.L.M. to be a symbol of those Suras that deal with the beginning, the middle, and the end of man's spiritual history,-the origin, the present position, and the things to come in the Last Days (eschatology, to use a theological term). We took A.L. to stand as symbols of the first two, and M. of the last. In the present group of Suras we find hardly any eschatological matter, and therefore we can understand the absence of M., the symbol standing for such matter. In its place comes R., which is phonetically allied to L. L. is produced by the impact of the tongue to the front of the palate, and R. to the middle of the palate. In many languages the letters L. and R. are interchangeable; e.g., in Arabic, al-Rahman becomes ar-Rahman, and R. in imperfect enunciation becomes L., as in Chinese lallations. If L. is a symbol of present day things looking to the future, we may take R. as a symbol of present-day things looking within, i.e., into the interior of the organization of the Ummat. And this symbolism fits in with the subject-matter of the Suras in question. But no one should be dogmatic in speculation about mystic Symbols.

Let us now consider Sûra x alone. The central theme is that God's wonderful Creation must not be viewed by us as a creation of material things only, once made and finished with. Most wonderful of all is how He reveals Himself to men through-

Apostles and Scriptures; how apostles are rejected by men, and the Message disbelieved until it is too late for repentance; and how, as in the case of Yanus (Jonah) and his people, even the rejection (when repentance supervenes) does not prevent God's grace and mercy from working, and how far that working is beyond man's comprehension.

Summary.—The wonderful working of the Spirit of God through man by revelation seems like magic to men; yet they could find Signs and Messages from Him in the sun and the moon and the constantly varying yet regular phenomena of nature, from which man should take a lesson of constancy and Faith (x. 1-20, and C. 99).

All the goodness or beauty that man meets in the life around him proceeds from God. Yet man is blind and will not understand (x. 21-40, and C. 100).

As all things and beings proceed from God, so will they return to Him, and He is ever true. Why then does ungrateful man make untrue phantoms for himself instead of rejoicing in the good news which He sends? (x. 41-70, and C. 101).

God revealed Himself through Noah, but Noah's people rejected him and perished. He spoke through Moses to Pharaoh, but Pharaoh was stiff-necked and arrogant, and when he repented at all, it was too late (x. 71.92, and C. 102).

Everywhere want of faith causes people to perish. But the people of Yanus repented, and God saved them by His wonderful grace. So God will deliver the Believers. When the Truth comes from God, follow it and be patient, for God is the most righteous of Judges (x. 93-109, and C. 103).

C. 99.-Men may wonder that a man

(x. 1.20.) Like unto them should bring a Message From God, but God's Message shines Forth through all nature. and Creation. He guides the human spirit, if only Man will have Faith and put his hope In God. Wonderful are God's relations With man, yet man is ungrateful And runs to fancies and fanciful gods. Glory to the One true God, Who made Mankind as One, and holds alone The secrets of the Unseen in His-Great and good Universal Plan.

- 1. A. E. R. 181
  These are the Ayats 1881
  Of the Book of Wisdom.
- Verily your Lord is God, Who created the heavens And the earth in six Days, 1866

1381. For the Abbreviated Letters generally as mystic Symbols, see Appendix I. For this particular combination see the Introduction to this Sūra, 1382. Āyāl-sājars, or Verses of the Quran. Here both meanings are to be understood. Each verse is a nugget of wisdom. And in the verse is mmediately following. e.g., x. 3.6, examples are given of the wonders of God's material Creation. If the starry heavens impress us with their sublimity as signs of God's wisdom and power, how much more wonderful is it that He should peak to lowly man through this Messengers, in man's own language, so that he can understand?

1383. Is it not still more wonderful that the inspired man should be one of ourselves? The Arabs had known Muhammad in other relations and conditions, and when the mighty Message came through his mouth—the message of Wisdom and Power, such as no man could speak as from himself, least of all a man not instructed in human learning,—they could only in their wonder attribute it to magic and sorcery. They failed to understand that magic and sorcery were projections of their own mind, while here was sold, enduring Truth from God?!

1344. God's Message was and is not all smooth and agreeable. The first thing is to convirce us of our sin and wrong-doing, and warn us of our danger. If we have Faith, we then learn what a high rank we obtain in the sight of God, through His glorious Truth, which makes us pure and free.

1386. Islanca, with the preposition ital after it, means "to design, to set oneself to execute a design; 'hence in it 39, I have translated, ''His design, comprehended the heavens, 'to emphasive the fact that the heavens were not eternal or co-reternal with Him, but were a part of His design and in a sense, as they appuear to man subjectively, a chomplement to the creation of man's Earth. With the preposition 'als after it, as here and in vii 54 and elsewhere, the menning seems to be literally, "to mount or sacend," and figuratively to be firmly established, to sit firm and untahler, beyond question." The Throne of authority represents symbolically many ideas : e.g., (1) that God is high above all His Creation; (2) that He regulates and governs it, as a king does, where authority is unquestionably recognised; (3) that He is not, therefore, like the gods of Greece and paganism, who were imagined to be in a world apart, careless of mankind, or jealous of mankind, but on the contrary. He (4) disposes of their affairs and all affairs continuously and with justice; (4) that he authority of His prophets, ministers, and messengers is derived from Him, and such intercession as they can make is by His will and permission.

1389. Cf. n. 120 to it. 117. God's creation is not a simple act, once done and thrished with. It is continuous, and there are many stages, not the least important of which is the Hereafter, when the fruits of our life will be achieved.

1390. Hamin: boiling fluid; it is associated, as in xxxviii. 57, with gassāq, a dark, murky, or intensely cold fluid; both symbols of the grievous penalty that results from rebellion against God.

139]. The fitting epithet for the sun is dhifat. "splendour and glory of brightness", and for the moon is "a light" (of beauty), the cool light that illuminates and helps in the darkness of the night. But the sun and moon also measure time. The simplest observation can keep pace with the true lunar months and lunar years, which are all that is required by a pastoral people. For agriculture solar years are required, as they indicate the changes of the seasons, but ordinary solar years are never exact; even the solar year of 555 days requires correction by advanced astronomical calculation.

<sup>1392</sup> Everything in God's creation has use and purpose, and fits into a Design. It is true in every sense of the word and it is good and just. It is not merely a matter of sport or freak (xxi, 16), Though so varied, it proclaims God's Unity; though a limited free will is granted to creatures, the results of evil (which is rehellion) are neutralised and harmony is restored. Cf, it, [9].

They are contrasted in x. 9 with the Faith and the Righteousness of those who accept Grace.

<sup>1396</sup> Their Fatth is the cause as well as the instrument of their Guidance,—the Kindly Light which leads them as well as the Jos which fills their Soul. The usual symbols of Gardens and Fire, are again contristed—in earl east the result of Good or Rvii in Aife,

From first to last they realise that it is God Who cherished them and made them grow, and His rays are their Light.

1398. Those who have no spiritual hope for the Future grasp at any temporary advantage, and in their bindness even mockingly ask for immediate punishment for their sins (vin. 32), thus vanily challenging God, in Whom they do not believe. If the beneficent God were to take them at their word, they would have no chance at all. Their doom would be sealed. But even the respite they get they use badly. They energly wander about distractedly like blind men, to and fin. C f = 13.

1399. Not only do men fail to use their respite; even those who have a superficial belief in God call on Him in their trouble but forget Him when He has relieved their trouble. Their Faith is not strong enough to make them realise that all good proceeds from God. But in moments of trouble they use every position, literally and figuratively, to appeal to 11im.

1400. Those without Faith are selfish, and are so wrapped up in themselves that they think every good that comes to them is due to their own ments or cleverness. That is itself a cause of their undoing. They do not see their own faults.

1401. This is addressed to the Quraish in the first instance, for they had succeeded to the Ad and the Thambd heritage. But the application is universal, and was true of the 'Abbast Empire in the time of Harôn-ar-Rashid, or the Muslim Empire in Spain or the Turkish Empire in its palmiest days, and indeed, apart from political power, to the Muslims and non-Muslims of our own days.

1402. Reading: in the Arabic, the word is "Quy-ān", which may mean Reading or in the special seane, the Quy-an. The duty of God's Messenger is to deliver God's Messenge as it is revealed to him, whether it please or displease those who hear it. Selfst men want to read their own desires or fancies into religious precepts, and thus they are often willing to use Religion for their own mends. Most of the corruptions of Religion are due to this cause. But Religion is not to be so prostituted.

1403. It is in God's Plan that He should reveal Himself in certain ways to His creatures, and His Messengers are the instruments that carry out His Will. It is in itself His gracious Mercy that He should thus make His Will known. We should be grateful for His guidance instead of carping at it.

1404. Muhammad Munjafa had lived his whole life of purity and virtue amongst his people, and they knew and acknowledged it before he received his mission. They knew he loved his nation and was loyal to it. Why should they turn against him when he had to point out under inspiration all their sims and wrong-doing? It was for their own good. And he had to plead again and again with timen: "will you not understand, and see what a glorious privilege it is for you to receive true guidance from God?"

1405. When we shut our eyes to God's glory and goodness, and go after false gods, we give some plausible excuse to ourselves, such as that they will indercede for us. But how can stocks and stones intercede for us? And how can men intercede for us, when they themselves have need of God's Mercy? Even the best and noblest cannot intercede as of right, but only with His permission (x. 3). To pretend that there are other powers than God is to invent lies and to teach God. There is nothing in heaven or earth that He does not know, and there is no other like unto Him.

1406. Cf. ii. 213. All mankind was created one, and God's Message to mankind is messence one, the Message of Unity and Truth. But as selfshness and egotism got hold of man, certain differences sprang up between individuals, races, and nations, and in His infinite Mercy. He sent them messengers and messages to suit their varying mentality, to test them by His gifts, and stir them up to emulation in virtue and piety (v. 51).

1407. Here we have again the mystic doctrine of "the Word", Cf. vi 115, ix 40, and iv.171, "Off "Is the Decree of God, the expression of His Universal Will or Wisdom in a particular case When men began to diverge from one autoliter (see last note). God made their very differences subserve the higher ends by increasing their entulation in virtue and piety, and thus pointing back to the ultimate Unity and Reality.

1408. Their demand for a Sign is disingenuous. All nature and revelation furnishes them with inleaves of a book. But they forget that a physical Book is on a wholly different plane from God's Mysteries, and that their physical natures cannot apprehend the mysteries. They must vait. Truth will also wait. But the waiting in the two cases is in quite different senses. Cf. vi. 158 and ix. 32.

1409 Man turns his thoughts in adversity to the spiritual forces outside his ken. But as soon as the trouble is past, he not only forgets them but actually plots against them, as if thiey—and not he himself—had caused his trouble. But such people are poor ignorant creatures, not reshang that the Universal Plan of God is swifter to stop their petty plans, and that though they fail, the record of them remans teterangly against them.

Show our gratitude!" 1980

- 23. But when he delivereth them. Behold! they transgress Insolently through the earth In defiance of right!
  O mankind! your insolence will be against your own souls,—An enjoyment of the life Of the Present! in the end, To Us is your return, And We shall show you The truth of all that ye did.
- 24. Mahe likeness of the life Of the Present is As the rain which We Send down from the skies: 1672 By its mingling arises The produce of the earth-Which provides food For men and animals: (It grows) till the earth Is clad with its golden Ornaments and is decked out (In beauty); the people to whom It belongs think they have All powers of disposal over it: There reaches it Our command By night or by day. And We make it Like a harvest clean-mown. As if it had not flourished

1410. All the great inventions and discoveries on which man prides himself are the fruit of that genus and talent which God has freely given of His grace. But the sprit of man remains petty, as is illustrated by the parable from the sra. How the heart of man repolices when the ship goes smoothly with favourable winds! How in adversity it turns, in terror and helplessness, to God, and makes yows for deliverance! and how those yows are disregarded as soon as the danger is past! C, Yn, 63, 1411. In our insolence and pride we do not see how small and ephemeral is that part of us which is mortal. We shall see it at last when we appear before our Judge. In the meantime our ridiculous pretensions only burt ourselves.

1412. Another beautiful Parable, explaining the natute of our present life. The rain comes down in drops and mingles with the earth. Through it, by God's matchless artistry, the womb of the earth is made fruitful. All kinds of good, useful, and beautiful grains, vegetables, and fruits are produced for men and animals. The earth is covered in its bravery of green and gold and all kinds of colours. Perhaps the "owner" takes all the credit to himself, and thinks that this will last eternally. A halistorm or a blast, a frost or a volcanic eruption, comes and destroys it; or it may be, even normally, that the time of harvest comes, and the fields and orchards are stripped bure ity some blight or disease. Where is the beauty and bravery of yesterday? All that is left is dust and ashes! What more can we get from this physical material life?

Only the day before! Thus do We explain The Signs in detail For those who reflect.

- 25. But God doth call
  To the Home of Peace: 193
  He doth guide whom He pleaseth
  To a Way that is straight.
- 26. To those who do right
  Is a goodly (reward)—
  Yea, more (than in measure)! ""
  No darkness nor shame
  Shall cover their faces! ""
  They are Companions of the Garden;
  They will abide therein
  (For a yee)!
- 27. But those who have earned
  Evil will have a reward
  Of like evil: "" ighominy
  Will cover their (faces):
  No defender will they have
  From (the wrath of) God:
  Their faces will be covered,
  As it were, with pieces
  From the depth of the darkness ""
  Of Night: they are Companions

<sup>1413.</sup> In contrast with the ephemeral and uncertain pleasures of this material life, there is a higher life to which God is always calling. It is called the Home of Peace. For there is no lear, nor disappointment, nor sorrow there. And all are called, and those with be chosen who have sought, not material advantages, but the Good Pleasure of God. Salām, Peace, is from the same root as 102m, the Religenon of Unity and Harmony.

<sup>1414.</sup> The reward of the righteous will be far more than in proportion to their merits. For they will have the supreme bliss of being near to God, and (in Stiff language) "seeing His face".

<sup>1415.</sup> The face is the symbol of the Personality, the inner and real Self, which is the antithesis of the outer and ephemeral Self. It will be illuminated with God's Light, behind which is no shadow or darkness. All its old shortcomings will be blotted out, with their sense of shame, for there will be Perfection, as in God's sight.

<sup>1416.</sup> Note that the evil reward is for those who have "earned" evil, i.e., brought it on themselves by the deliberate-choice of evil. Further, in the justice of God, they will be required with evil similar to, and not greater in quantity or intensity, than the evil they had done,—unlike the good, who, in God's generosity, get a reward far greater than anything they have earned or could possibly earn

<sup>1417.</sup> Night is the negation of Light and metaphorically of joy and felicity. The intensive is indicated by "the depth of the darkness of Night,"

Of the Fire; they will Ahide therein (for ave)!

- 28. One Day shall We gather them All together. Then shall We say To those who joined gods (with Us): "To your place! ye and those Ye joined as 'partners'." We shall separate them, And their "partners" shall say: "It was not us That ye worshipped! [418]
- 29. "Enough is God for a witness Between us and you: we Certainly knew nothing Of your worship of us!" 1886
- 30. There will every soul prove (The fruits of) the deeds It sent before 1000; they will Be brought back to God Their rightful Lord, And their invented falsehoods Will leave them in the lurch, 1011.

1418 The false gods are not real: they are only the figments of the imaginations of those who induged in the false worship. But the prophets or great or good men whose names were vainly taken in competition with the name of God, and the presonified felaces of idols treated in the same way would themselves protest against their names being used in that way, and show that the worship was paid not to them, but to the figorance or superstition or selfash lusts of the false worshippers.

1419. See last note. They did not even know that they were being falsely worshipped in that way.

1420. C/, ii. 95, where the verb used is qaddama. The verb aslafa, used here, is nearly synonymous 1421. Instead of their false ideas helping them, they will desert them and leave them in the lurch. Cf. vi. 24.

1422. Sustenance may be understood in the sense of all the provision necessary for maintaining placed life as well as mental and spiritual development and well-being. Examples of the former are light and rain from heaven and the produce of the earth and facilities of movement on land and sea and in air. Examples of the latter are the mora and spiritual influences that come from our fellow-men, and from the great Teachers and Prophets.

<sup>1423.</sup> Just two of our ordinary faculties, hearing and sight, are mentioned, as examples of the real. All the gifts of God, physical and spiritual, are enjoyed and incorporated by us by means of the faculties and capacities with which He has endowed us.

<sup>1424,</sup> Cf. iii, 27 and n. 371; vi. 95 and n. 920; and xxx. 19.

<sup>1425.</sup> This is the general summing-up of the argument. The government of the whole Creation and its maintenance and sustenance is in the hands of God. How futile then would it be to neglect this true worship and go after false gods?

<sup>1426.</sup> The wonderful handiwork and wisdom of God having been referred to, as the real Truth, as against the false worship and false gods that men set up, it follows that to disregard the Truth must lead us into woeful wrong, not only in our beliefs but in our conduct. We shall err and stray and be lost. How then can we turn away from the Truth?

<sup>1427.</sup> Disobedience to God brings its own terrible consequences on ourselves. The Law, the Word, the Decree, of God must be fulfilled. If we got to false gods, our Faith will be dimmed, and then extinguished. Our spiritual faculties will be dead.

<sup>1428.</sup> The argument is now turned in another direction. The false gods can neither create out of thing nor sustain the creative energy which maintains the world. Nor can they give any guidance which can be of use for the future destiny of mankind: on the contrary they themselves (assuming they were men who were defised) stand in need of such guidance. Why then follow vain fancies, instead of going to the source of all knowledge, truth, and guidance, and worship, serve, and obey the One True God?

35. Say: "Of your 'partners'
Is there any that
Can give any guidance
Towards Truth?" Say: "It is God
Who gives guidance
Towards Truth. Is then He
Who gives guidance to Truth
More worthy to be followed,
Or he who finds not guidance
(Himself) unless he is guided?
What then is the matter
With you? 'How judge ve?'

1431. Tadmil: alucidation, explanation, final fulfilment, Cf. vii. 53. The Message of God not only gives us rules for our every-day conduct, but speaks of high matters of mystic significance, which require elucidation in three ways: (11) by instruction from Teachers of great spiritual experience, (2) by experience from the actual facts of life, and (3) by the final fulfilment of the hopes and warnings which we now take on trust through our Patith. The Unbelievers reject God's Message simply because they cannot understand it and without giving it even a chance of elucidation in any of these ways.

1432 Wrong-doers always came to grief ultimately. The true course of history shows it from a broad standpoint. But they are so beadstrong that they prejudge issues in their ignorance before they are decided.

1433. When the man of God is rejected and charged with faisehood, he does not give up his work, but continues to teach and preach his Message. He can well say to those who interfere with him: "Mind your own business: supposing your charge against mistrue, you incurn or expansibility: I have to answer for it before God: and if I do my duty and deliver my Message, your rejection does not make me liable for your wrong-doing; you will have to answer hefore God."

1436, C.f. vi. 25, 36, 39 and notes. Hypocrites go to bear and see some great Teacher, but they get no profit out of it because they are not sincerely seeking the truth. They are like the blind, or the deaf, or the imbeciles. It is impossible to guide them, because they have not the will to be guided.

1435. God cannot be blamed for man's evil, nor will He deal unjustly with man. He has given him faculties and means of guidance. If man gods wrong, it is because he wrongs himself.

الله المثلث التنسي منزاً ولا منها إلا منها إلا منها الله المنها الله المنها الله المنها المنهاء
1438. The Apostle is assured that the end of evil is evil, just as the end of good is good. Whether this result is made plain before his very eyes in his own life-time or afterwards, makes no difference. The wircked should not repoice if they are given tope and seem to have the upper hand for a time, nor should the righteous lose heart: for God's promise is sure and must come to pass. And in any case, the scales can only be partially, if at all, adjusted in this life. There is the final and complete adjustment on the Day of Judgment, God is All-Knowing, and all truth while before Him.

1439. Every people or generation or nation had its Message or Messenger: God revealed Himself to it in some way or another. If that Messenger was ignored or rejected, or his Message was twisted or misused, the Days of Reckoning will come, when perfect justice will be done and the whole Truth revealed. The Unbelievers mockingly say: "If that is true, pray tell us when that Day will come!" The answer of the Messenger is: "It will come in good hime: no one can either hasten or retard it. If you want me then to save you or if you fear that I shall harm you for your treatment of me, know that this matter is in the hands of God alone, Who will do perfect justice. Even in regard to myself, any harm or good that befalls me is by the command and in the power of God."

1440, Cf. vii. 188.

1441. This repeats vii. 34, but the significance is different in the two contexts. Here the reply is to the Unbelievers' mocking incredulity (seen. 1439) as to whether there is such a thing as a Hereafter: they suggest to the man of God that if his claim of inspiration from God is true, he should get them punished at once for rejecting him. In vii. 34 the reference is to the punishment of iniquity as described in vii 33: sin is not necessarily punished at once; every People or generation gets a chance; when their evern is fulfilled, the final adjustment is space.

- 50. Say: "Do ye see,—
  If His punishment should come
  To you by night or by day,—
  What portion of it
  Would the Sinners
  Wish to hasten?
- 51. "Would ye then believe in it
  At last, when it actually cometh
  To pass? (It will then be said:)
  'Ah! now? and ye wanted
  (Aforetime) to hasten it on!'
- 52. "At length will be said To the wrong-doers: 'Taste ye The enduring punishment! "" Ye get but the recompense Of what ye earned!"
- 53. They seek to be informed By thee: "Is that true?" Say: "Aye! by my Lord! It is the very truth! And we cannot frustrate it!"

SECTION 6.

54. Every soul that hath sinned, If it possessed all That is on earth, Would fain give it in ransom: 1446 فَالْ أَرْمَيْهُمْ الْ أَنْ كُمْ عَنَا بُهُو اللّهِ اللهِ ا

وَلَوْأَنَّ لِكُولِ نَفْسِ طَلْمَتْ
 مَا فِي الْأَرْضِ لَإَفْنَدَتْ بِاللَّهِ

The psychology of the Unbelievers is here analysed and exposed. This particular argument begins at x. 47 and ends at x. 53. It begins with the general statement that every People has had due warning and explanation by means of an Apostle specially sent to them: that Apostle will be a relevant witness at the final Judgment, when the matter will be judged in perfect equity. Then follows a dialogue. The Unbelievers mock and say, "Why not bring on the Punishment now?" The reply to the Unbelievers is, "It will come in God's good time". The Believers are told to watch and see how the sinners would take! if the Punishment were to come at once, Would they not think it too audden? When it actually comes, their panic will be indescribable. "Is that true?" say the Clabelievers. "It is the very truth," is the answer, "and nothing can ward it off."

<sup>1442.</sup> The mockery of Unbelievers will be turned into panic when the wrath of God descends on the little of So suddenly, by night or by day, when they least expect it. Will they then say of any bit of it: "Let it be hastened"?

<sup>1443.</sup> This will be the final doom, and they will themselves have brought it on themselves !

1445. Declars their repeatance: the verb in the original is eserta, which may mean either "declare" or "reveal." or else "conceal" or "hide". The classical Commentators are divided as to the meaning to be adopted here. If the first, which I prefer, the seans would be: "When the Penalty stares the sinners in the face, they would give anything to escape it, and they would even openly declare their repentance, which would be a source of shame and ignominy to them." If the latter meaning be taken, the sense would be: "They would give anything to escape the Penalty; but the hardest thing of all for them is frankly to confess and repent, and so they conceal their sense of shame and ignominy."

146. Those who do wrong have a disease in their flearts, which will cause their spiritual death, Ood in His Mercy declares His Will to them, which should direct their lives and provide a healing for their spiritual disease. If they accept Faith, he remody acts; they find themselves in right guidance and receive God's forgiveness and mercy. Surely those are far better gifts than material advantages, wealth, or possessions.

1447. "Sustenance" is to be taken in both the literal and the metaphorical sense. In the Hieral sense, what fine and varied things God has provided for us on land and in sea and air, in the vegetable, saimal, and mineral kingdoms? Yet narrow minds put artificial barriers against their use. In the metaphorical sense, what enchanting fields of knowledge and spiritual endeavour are provided to our individual and social lives? And who is to say that some are lawful and others forbidden? Supposing they were so in special circumstances, it is not right to attribute artificial restrictions of that kind to God and falsely server religious ananctions against them.

For sustenance? Yet ye Hold forbidden some things Thereof and (some things) lawful." Say: "Hath God indeed Permitted you, or do ye invent (Things) to attribute to God?"

1448. People who lie in Religion or invent false gods, or false worship, - have they any idea of the Day of judgment, when they will be called to account, and will have to answer for their deeds?

Day of Judgment, when they will be called to account, and will have to answer for their deeds?

1449. God is most kind, and gracious, and generous with His gifts of all kinds, material and spiritual. But men do not understand, and are ungrateful in forgetting the Giver of all and settling un false obsects of worship and false standards of order.

1430. There is nothing that men can do but God is a witness to it. We may be deeply engrossed in some particular thing and for the time being be quite unconscious of other things. But God's knowledge not only comprehends all things, but has all things actively before it. Nothing is hidden from Him. And His knowledge has another quality which human knowledge has not. Human knowledge subject to time, and is obliterated by time. God's knowledge is like a Record and endures for ever. And His Record has a further quality which human records have not. The most permanent human record may be quite intelligible to those who make it but may be ambiguous to others and may become unintelligible with the progress of time, as happens almost invariably to the most enduring inveriptions from very ancient times: but in God's "Record" or knowledge there is no ambiguity, for its independent of time, or place, or circumstance. This is the force of Mubin ("clear") here.

1451. God's all-embracing knowledge and constant watchful care over all His creatures, may be a source of fear to sinners, but there is no fear for those whom He honours with His love and friendship—embter in this world nor in the world to come.

Nor shall they grieve:

<sup>1452.</sup> Sometimes the words of the unrighteous or their revilings burt or grieve the righteous man, but there is no occasion for either anger or sorrow : they have no power and they can do no real dishonour, for all power and honour are from God.

<sup>1453.</sup> All creatures are subject to God. If, therefore, any false worship is set up, the false gods--so called " partne.s " -are merely creatures of imagination or false inventions, <sup>1454.</sup> Our physical life-and our higher life in so far as it is linked with the physical-is sustained by the alternation of rest and activity, and the fit environment for this alternation is the succession of Nights and Days in our physical world. The Day makes the things "visible to us "-a beautiful symbol, not only of the physical work for which we go about by day, but of the higher activities which are fitly associated with seeing, perception, and enquiry. Intuition (insight) is a little out of that circle because that may come by night, when our other faculties are resting.

In luxury, pride, and oppression.

1455. In Quranir language "prosperity" refers both to our every-day life and to the higher life within us,—to the Present and the Future,—health and strength, opportunities and resources, a spirit of contentment, and the power of influencing oithers. Here there seems to be an extra touch of meaning. A liar not only deprives himself of prosperity in all senses, but his "lie" itself against God will not succeed; it will and must be found out.

1456. The reference to Noah's story here is only incidental, to illustrate a special point. The fuller story will be found in xi, 25-48, and in many other passages, e.g., vii. 39.64, xxiii, 23-32, xxv. 105-122, and xxxvii, 73-82. At each place there is a special point in the context. The special point here is that Noah's very life and prenching among his wicked people was a cause of offence to them But he feared nothing, trusted in Gorl, delivered his message, and was saved from the Flood.

<sup>1437.</sup> Firm in his sense of Truth from God, Noah plainly told his people to condemn him to death if they liked, openly and in concert, so that he should at least know who would insten to his Message and who would not. He wanied them to be frank and direct, for he feared nothing.

<sup>1438.</sup> The man of God preaches for the good of his people. But he claims no reward from them, but on the contrary is reviled, persecuted, banished, and often slain.

<sup>1460.</sup> I understand the meaning to be that there is a sort of spiritual influence descending from generation to generation, among the Unbelievers as among the men of Faith. In history we find the same spiritual problems in many ages,—denial of God's grace, defiance of God's law, rejection of God's Message. These influences cause the hearts of the continuacious to be sealed and impervious to the Truth. Cf. ii. 7 and notes. What they do is to prejudge the issues even before the Prophet explains them.

<sup>1461.</sup> The story of Moses, Aaron, and Pharaoh is fully told in via 103-137, and there are references to it is many places in the Qurân. The incidental reference here is to illustrate a special point, via, that the wicked are arrogant and bound up in their sin, and prefer deception to Truth: they do not hesitate to charge the men of God, who work unselfishly for them, with mean motives, such as would actuate them is similar crumstances!

<sup>1462</sup> Sorcery is the very opposite of Truth, -being deception or plausible shows by the powers of evil. But these cannot succeed or last permanently, and Truth must ultimately prevail, <sup>1463.</sup> Notice how they attribute evil motives to the men of God, motives of ambition and lust of power, which the men of God had been sent expressly to put down. The same device was used against Mughila.

1464. When they threw their rods, the rods became snakes by a trick of soicery, but Moses's miracles were greater than any tricks of sorcery, and had real Truth behind them.

1465. God's Words or Commands have real power, while sorcerers' tricks only seem wonderful by deceiving the eye.

1466. The pronoun "his" in "his People" is taken by some Commentators to refer to Pharach. The majority of Pharach's people refused to believe at the time, but the sorcerers believed (vii. 120, and so did Pharach's wife (tix: 11), and utimately Pharach himself, thought too late (x, 90, 11) we took "his" to 1.5x to Moses, it would mean that the Israelites were hard-hearted and grumbled (vii. 129) even when they were being delivered from Egypt, and only a few of them had any real faith in God's providence and the working of His Law, and they leared Pharach even more than they feared On.

<sup>1467.</sup> A' truil for those who practise obpression: the various meanings of Fitnat have been explained in n. 1198 to viii. 23. The prayer is that the righteous people, being weak, should be saved from being used as objects of oppression or punishment at the hands of powerful enemies. Weakness tempts Power to practise oppression, and is thus an occasion of trial for the oppressors.

<sup>1468.</sup> This instruction, we may suppose, was given when the sorrerers were brought to confusion, and come of the legiptians believed. Moses was for a little while to remain in Egypt, so that his Message should have time to work, before the Israelites were led out of Egypt. They were to make their houses into places of prayer, and they were now to be only sojourners in Egypt. The Qibia was to be symbolic places of prayer, and they were now to be only sojourners in Egypt. The Qibia was to be symbolical of their later wanderings in Arabia, and the still later restoration of God's pure worship at the Ka ba under Mujafa. These were the glad tidings (the Gospel) of Islam, which was preached under Noah, Abraham, Moses, and Jesus, and completed under Mujammad.

<sup>1469</sup> Moses's prayer, in which Aaron joined, for he was always with him, may be paraphrased thus: "O God! we understand that the glitter and the wealth of the Egyptians are not to be envised. They are but the ephemeral goods of this life. "They are a disadvantage, in that in their pride of possessions the Egyptians mislead themselves and others. Let their pride be their undoing! Turn their wealth into hitterness and their hearts into hardness, for they reject Thee, and they will not believe until they actually see the Punishment of their sins!"

<sup>1470</sup> A terrible curse! Let their wealth and splendour become so defaced in their features, that instead of being objects of desire, they become objects of loathing! The heart is the seat of affections and joy riet it be schardened by their unbelief that it becomes the seat of hatrod and grief! It is when they see the Penalty that they will believe!

<sup>1471.</sup> Be not dazzled by their splendour, but stand out straight for Truth, for that is your salvation! Addressed in form to Moses and Aaron, in substance it is addressed to the Israelites.

<sup>. 1472.</sup> Notice the swiftness of the action in the narrative. The execution of poetic justice could not have been described in fewer words, <sup>1413.</sup> That is, in the One Youe God. This was death-bed repentance, and even sp it was forced by the terror of the ratastimphe. So it was not accepted (cf. iv. 18) in its entirety. Only this concession was made, that the body was saved from the sea, and presumably, according to Egyptian custom, it was embalimed and the mummy was given due rites of the dead. But the story commemorated for ever God's working, in mercy for this people, and in just punshment of oppressions.

- We settled the Children Of Israel in a beautiful 1971 Dwelling-place, and provided For them sustenance of the best: It was after knowledge had been Granted to them, that they Fell into schisms. Verily God will judge between them As to the schisms amongst them. On the Day of Judgment.

1474, After many wanderings the Israelites were settled in the land of Canaan, described as " a land flowing with milk and honey" (Exod. iii 8). They had a prosperous land; and they were supplied with spiritual sustenance by men sent to deliver God's Message. They should have known better than to fall into disputes and schisms, but they did so. This was all the more inexcusable considering what bounties they had received from God. The schisms arose from selfish arrogance. and God will judge between them on the Day of Judgment.

1475. God's Truth is all one, and even in different forms men sincere in Religion recognise the oneness. So sincere Jews like 'Abdullah ibn Salam, and sincere Christians like Waraqa or the Nestorian monk Bahira, were ready to recognise the mission of Muhammad Mustafa. "The Book" in this connection is Revelation generally, including pre-Islamic revelations

1476. Cf. sit, 60 and p. 399

1477. God has given frequent warnings against Evil and want of Faith in all ages, through Signs and through inspiration,-the latter ("the Word") being even more direct and personal than the former. Those who did not heed the warning found to their cost that it was true, and they perished. Such contumacy in the rejection of Truth only yields when the actual penalty is in sight. Belief then is induced by irresistible facts; it is not efficacious as Faith, as was proved against Pharaob. See x. 90 and n. 1473.

1478. God in His infinite Mercy points out the contumacy of Sin as a warning, and the acceptional case of Nineveh and its Prophet Jonah is alluded to. The story of Jonah is told in xxxvii. 139-146, which would be an appropriate place for further comments. Here it is sufficient to note that Nineveh was a very ancient town which is now no longer on the map. Its alte is believed to be marked by the two mounds on the left bank of the Tigris, opposite the Sourchishing city of Mossif on the right bank, about 230 miles north-north-west of Bağdad. One of the mounds bears the name of "the Tomb of Nabl Yanus." Archaeologists have not yet fully explored its antiquities. But it is clear that it was a very old Sumerian town, perhaps older than 3500 B.C. It became the capital of Assyria. The first Asyrian Empire under Sahalmanester I, about 1300 B.C., became the supreme power in Western Asia. Babylon, whose tributary Assyria had formerly been, now became tributary of Assyria. The second Assyrian Empire arose about 745 B.C. and Sennacheric (70-561 B.C.) beautified the town with many Public Works. It was destroyed by the Scythians (so-called Medes) in 612 B.C. If the date of Jonah were assumed to be about 800 B.C., it would be between the First and the Second Assyrian Empire when the City was nearly destroyed for its sins, but on account of its reconstance was silven a new lease of elegicious life in the Second Empire.

1480, If it had been God's Plan or Will not to grant the limited Free-will that He has granted to man. His omnipotence rould have made all mankind alike: all would then have had Faith, but that Faith would have reflected no merit on them. In the actual world as it is, man has been endowed with various faculties and capacities, so that he should strive and explore, and bring himself into harmony with God's Will. Hence Faith becomes a moral achievement, and to resist Faith becomes a sin. As a complementary proposition, men of Faith must not be impatient or angly if they have to contend against Unfaith, and most important of all, they must guard against the temptation of forcing Faith, i.e., imposing it on others by physical compulsion, or any other forms of compulsion such as social pressure, or inducements held out by wealth or position, or other adventitious advantages. Forced faith is no faith. They should strive spiritually and let God's Plan works as He wills.

1481. To creatures endued with Will, Faith comes out of an active use of that Will. But we must mote so arrogant as to suppose that that is enough. At best man is weak, and is m need of God's grace and help. If we sincerely wish to understand, He will help our Fnith; but if not, our doubts and difficulties will only be increased. This follows as a necessary consequence, and in Quranic laneuage all Consequences are ascribed to God, the Gause of Causes.

1482. Riji (from rajisa, yarjam, or rajisa, yarjusy) has various meanings: e.g., (1) filth, impurity, uncleanness, abomination, as in ix. 95; (2) hence, filthy deeds, foul conduct, crime, abomination, thus shading off into (1), as in v. 93; (3) hence punshment for crime, penalty, as in vi. 125; (4) a form of such punishment, riz., doubt, obscurity, or unsettlement of mind, anger, indignation, as in ix. 125, and here, but perhaps the idea of punishment is also implied here.

1483. If Faith results from an active exertion of our spiritual faculties or understanding, it follows that it we let these die, God's Signs in His Creation or in the spoken Word which comes by inspiration through the mouths of His Messengers will not reach us any more than music reaches a deaf man.

1484. Cf. x. 20 and n. 1408. The argument about God's revelation of Himself to man was begun in those early sections of this Sura and is being now rounded off towards the end of this Sura with the same formula.

103. In the end We deliver Our apostles and those who

Thus is it fitting on Our part
That We should deliver
Those who believe!

1485. Other people may hesitate, or doubt, or wonder. But the righteous man has no doubt in his own mind, and he declares his Faith clearly and unambiguously to all, as did Muetafa.

<sup>1486.</sup> The worship of the One and True God is not a fancy worship, to be arrived at merely by reasoning and philosophy. It touches the vital issues of life and death—which are in His hands and His alone.

<sup>1487.</sup> Nor is the worship of One God an invention of the Prophet. It comes as a direct command, through him and to all.

<sup>1468.</sup> Individual Faith is good, but it is completed and strengthened by joining or forming a Righteous Society, in which the individual can develop and expand. Islam was never a religion of monks and anchorites. It laid great stress on social duties, which in many ways test and train the individual's character.

<sup>1489.</sup> God is Oft-Forgiving, Most Merciful. Even when we suffer under trials and tribulations, it is for our good, and no one can remove them except He, when, in His Plan, he sees it to be sail coherened. On the other hand, there is no power that can intercept His blessings and favours, and His bounty flows freshy when we are worthy, and often when we are not worthy of it.

<sup>1400.</sup> The Fergan, the Criterion between rgit and wrong, has been sent to us from God. If we accept guidafice, it is not as if we confer favours on those who bring us guidance. They suffer unselfishly for us, in order that we may be guided for our own good. On the other hand, if we reject it, it is our own loss. We have a certain amount of free-will, and the responsibility is ours and cannot be shifted to the Teacher's sent by God.

<sup>1491.</sup> When, in spite of all the efforts of the men of God, people do not accept Truth, and evil seems to flourish for a time, we must wait and be patient, but at the same time we must not give up hope or petreviage effort. For thus only can we carry out our part in the Plan of God.

INTRODUCTION TO SURA XI (Had).

For the chronological place of this Sūra and the general argument of Sūras x to xv. see Introduction to S. x.

In subject-matter this Sūra supplements the preceding one. In the last Sūra stress was laid on that side of God's dealings with man which leans to Mercy: here stress is laid on the side which deals with justice and the punishment of Sin when all Grace is resisted.

Summary.—God's revelation of mercy, His dealings with man, and His longsuffering patience are contrasted with man's ingratitude, his love of falsehood and vanity, and his crookedness (xi. 1-24, and C, 104).

Noah's unselfishness and humility in teaching his people the Truth of God were traduced by the ungodly; and his Message ridiculed and rejected. But he built his Ark under directions from God, and was saved; with peace and blessings, while his rejecters periabed (xi. 25.49, and C. 105).

The prophet Hüd preached to his people 'Ad against false gods, and the prophet Salih to his people Thamdd against dishonouring the symbol of God's bounty. In both cases God's Signs were rejected, and the rejecters were blotted out (xi. 50-68, and C. 106).

Lot's people were given to abominations: Abraham pleaded for them, and Lot was sent out to them, but they went deeper and deeper into sin and suffered the Penalty. Shu'aib's people, the Midianites, were warned against fraud and mischief, but they reproached him with helplessness and were themselves destroyed (xi. 69-95, and C. 107).

It is arrogant leaders like Pharaoh who mislead men, and men bring ruin on themselves. But God is Just. The penalty for sin is real and abiding; therefore shun all wrong-doing, and serve God whole-heartedly (xi. 96-123, and C. 108).

C. 104.—God's Revelation teaches the Truth: it warns
(nt. 1-24.) Against wrong and gives glad tidings to the righteous:
Ungrateful man folds up his heart
And fails to see how all Nature points
To God and to the Hereafter: he but seeks Petty issues, forgetting the Cause of Causes.
Not all the wisdom of man can produce
Aught like the Message which comes from God,
As the Light that leads and the Mercy
That forgives. Who then but will humble
Himself before God, seeking His light and His voice?

1499. Mustagarr=definite abode; where a thing stops or stays for some time, where it is established. Mustawda'=where a thing is laid up or deposited for a little while. Referring to animals, the former denotes its life on this earth; the latter its temporary pre-natal existence in the egg or the womb and its after-death existence in the tomb or whatever state it is in until its resurrection.

1502. It is seventifically correct to say that all life was evolved out of the waters, and this state-ment also occurs in the Qu-sin, xxi. 30. The Throne of God's authority is metaphorically expressed as over the waters, i.e., as regulating all life. Some such mystic menning. I think, also attaches to the Gen. i.2. The past sense "was "refers to the time before life developed in solid forms, on land and in air.

1503. The Creation we see around us is not idle sport or play (in Hindi, Lila) or whim on the part of God. It is the medium through which our spiritual life is to develop, with such free-will as we have. This life is our testing time.

<sup>1513. &</sup>quot;Guide": the Arabic word here is Imām, a leader, a guide, one that directs to the true Path. Such a direction is an instance of the Mercy and Goodness of God to fins. The Qui-An and the Apostle Muhammad are also called, each, a Guide and a Mercy, and so are these epithets applicable to previous Books and Apostles.

In this context, it is implied that they committed a two-fold wrong: (1) in inventing falsehoods against God, which deadened their own soul, and (2) in leading others astray or hindering them from God's path. Thus they lost the faculty of hearing, which they might have used to hear the Word of God, and they blinded the faculty of sight by shutting out God's light.

C. 105.—Noah walked righteously and humbly

(st. 25-90.) As in the sight of God. With unselfish
Love for his people he warned them
And taught them. But they did flout
And reject his Message with scorn
And insults. God gave him directions
To build an Ark against the impending
Flood which was to purify the world
From Sin and Unrighteousness. In it
Were saved Noah and those who believed.
So were promised salvation and God's Peace,
And Blessings to the Righteous evermore.

SECTION 3.

25. e sent Noah to his People (With a mission): "I have come To you with a Clear Warning:

26. "That ye serve none but God: Verily I do fear for you ۞ وَلَقَدُأُ وَسُلْنَا فُوكُمْ إِلَىٰ فَلِيهِ ٓ الْمِنْ كُمُّ فَوْرُتُهُ مِنْ ۞ أَنْ لَا مَنْ مُدَا إِلَّا اللهِ اللهِ لَيْتِ لَمَا فُ عَلَيْكُمُ

<sup>1516.</sup> Note that the humility is to be "before their Lord," i.a., in God's sight. There is no virtue, quite the contrary, in rubbing our noses to the ground before men. We are not to be arrogant even before men because we are humble as in God's sight. Nor does true humility lose sell-confidence in that self-confidence arises from confidence in the support and help of God.

® وَيَفْتَوْمِ لِآ أَنْنَالُكُوْ عَلِيْهِ مَالًّا

1517, Noah's mission was to a wicked world, plunged in sin. The mission had a double character, as in the mission of all men of God: it had to warn men against evil and call them to repentance, and it had to give them the glad tidings of God's Grace in case they turned back to God: it was a Guidance and Mercy, 1518. The Unbelievers were imposled by three powerful human motives of evil to resist Grace: (1) jealousy of other men; they said, "Why, you are no better than ourselves," half perceiving the Prophet's superiority, and half ignoring it; (2) contempt of the weak and lowly, who are often better intellectually, morally, and spiritually; they said, "We cannot believe or do what these fellows, our inferiors in sociar rank, believe or do !". (3) arrogance and self-sufficiency, which is a vice cognate to (2), looked at from a different angle; they said, "We are really better than the lot of you!" Now the claim made on behalf of God's Message attacked all these three attitudes. And all they could say against it was to abuse it impatiently, and call it a let.

1519. Noah's answer (like that of the blan of God who spoke in later ages in Mecca and Medina) is a pattern of humility, gentleness, firmness, persuasiveness, tuth, and love for his own people. First, he meekly (not exultingly) informs them that he has got a blessage from God. Secondly, he tells them that it is a Message of Mercy even in its warning, though in their arrogance the Mercy may be hidden from them. Thirdly, he tells them plaiply that there can be no computsion in Religion: but will they not accept with goodwill what is for their own benefit? He pleads with them as one of their own.

In return: my reward
Is from none but God: "**
But I will not drive away

For verily they are

32. They said: "() Noah! Thou hast disputed with us, إِن أَجْرِى إِلاَ عَلَى اللَّهُ وَكَمَا أَنْ اِلْكَارِدِ

<sup>1520.</sup> The fourth point in Noah's address meets their accusation that he was a liar, implying the he was serving some selfsh end of his own i on the contrary, he says, he seeks no reward from the will be an average the her bear and insufficient her bear point, for he locks to God rather than men. But, fifthly, if they insuft the poor and needs who come to hum in l'auth, and think that he would send them away in order to affract the great ones of the land, he tells them plainly that they are metisfare, for fact, (awathy), he has no hestiation in relling the blunt truth that they are the ignorant ones, and not the poor who came to seek God's Truth.

<sup>1521.</sup> But (seventhly) again he pleads, with as much earnestness as ever, that he is one of themselves, and just doing his truest duty. Would they have him do less? Indeed, would they not themselves see the Truth and come into the goodly company of Believes.

<sup>1522.</sup> The eighth point that Noah urges is that he is not a mere vulgar soothsaver pretending to reveal secrets not worth knowing, nor an angel living in another world, with no ties to them. He is their real well-unsiter, delivering a true Message from God.

<sup>1524.</sup> But Noah will not close his argument without defending the men of Faith, whom the Chiefs despite because they are lacking in worldly goods. He tells them plainly that God perhaps sees in them something in which they, the arrogant Chiefs, are lacking. Their spiritual faculties can only be appreciated truly by Him to Whom all the secrets of the spirit are open. But he, Noah, must declare boddly his own Faith and this is the ninth point in his argument.

And (much) hast thou prolonged The dispute with us: now Bring upon us what thou Threatenest us with, if thou Speakest the truth!?" <sup>1889</sup>

33. He said: "Truly, God Will bring it on you If He wills,—and then, Ye will not be able To frustrate it! "**

34. "Of no profit will be
My counsel to you,
Much as I desire
To give you (good) counsel,
If it be that God
Willeth to leave you astray:
He is your Lord!
And to Him will ye return!"

1525. To Noah's address the worldly Chiefs give a characteristic reply. In its aggressive spirit is the very antithesis of the gentle remonstrances of Noah. Because he had gently and patiently argued with them, they impatiently accuse him of "disputing with them" and "prolonging the dispute". They are unable to deal with his points. So they arroganity throw out their challenge, which is a compound of hectoring insolence, unreasoning scepticism, and biting irony. "You forstell disaster to us if we don't mend our ways! Let us see you bring it on! Now, if you please! Or shall we have to call you a liar?"

1326 To the biasphemous challenge addressed to Noah his only answer could be: "I never claimed that I could punish you. All punishment is in the hands of God, and He knows best when His punishment will descend. But this I can tell you! His punishment is sure if you do not repent, and when it comes, you will not be able to ward it off!"

1527. But Noah's heart bleeds for his people. They are preparing their own undoing 1. All his efforts are to be vain 1. Obstinate as they are, God's grace must be withdrawn, and then who can help them, and what use it any counsel? But again he will try to remind them of their Lord, and turn their face to Him. For their ultimate return to His judgment-seat is certain, to answer for their conduct.

1528. The fine narrative of dramatic power is here interrupted by a verse which shows that the story of Noah is also a Parable for the time and the ministry of Muhammad the Apostle. The wonderful force and aptiess of the story cannot be denied. The enemy therefore turns and says, "Oh! but you invented it!" The answer is, "No! but it is God's own truth! You may be accustomed to dealing in falsehoods, but I protest that I am free from such sins," The place of this verse here corresponds to the place of verse 49 at the end of the next Section,

While understanding this verse to refer to Mustafik, as most of the accepted Commentators understand it, it is possible also, I think, to read it into the story of Noah, for all Prophets have similar spiritual experiences.

SECTION 4.

- 38. Forthwith he (starts)
  Constructing the Ark:
  Every time that the Chiefs
  Of his People passed by him,
  They threw ridicule on him,
  He said: "If ye ridicule
  Us now, we (in our turn)

  With ridicule likewise!
- 39. "But soon will ye know Who it is on whom Will descend a Penalty That will cover them

® فَسَوْفَ مَسْلَوُنَ مَن بِيَأْنِيهِ عَـ نَابُّ

- 1529. The story of Noah is resumed. A point was reached, when it was clear that there was no hope of saving the sinners, who were courting their own destruction. It was to be a great Flood. So Noah was ordered to construct a great Ark or Ship, not a sailing ship, but a heavy vessel to remain aftost in the Flood, so that the righteous could be saved in it.
- 1530. It was to be built under the special instructions of God, to serve the special purpose it was intended to serve.
- 1531. The ridicule of the sinners, from their own point of view, was natural. Here was a preacher turned carpenter! Here was a plain in the higher reaches of the Mesopotamian basin, drained by the majestic Tigins, over 800 to 900 miles from the sea (the Persian Goll) in a straight line! Yet he talks of a flood like the Sea! All material civilisations pide themselves on their Public Works and their drainage schemes. And here was a fellow relying on God! But did not their narrow pride seem ridiculous also to the man of God? Here were men steeped in sin and insolence! And they pit themselves against the power and the promise of God! Truly a contemptible race is man!
- 1532. The Arabic Aorist may be construed either by the present tense or the future tense, and botture is so tragic for the sinsense here. Following Zamaghshart, I construe in the present tense, because the future is so tragic for the sinsense. For the time being the worldy ones looked down on the Believers as they always 60; but the Believers relied on God, and pitied their critics for knowing no better!—for their arongance was really ridiculous.

With shame,—on whom will be Unloosed a Penalty lasting:"

- 40. At length, behold!
  There came Our Command,
  And the fountains of the earth ""
  Gushed forth! We said:
  "Fmbark therein, of each kind
  Two, male and female, ""
  And your family—except
  Those against whom the Word
  Has already gone forth,—""
  And the Believers."
  But only a lew
  Believed with him
- 41. So he said: "Embark ye On the Ark,
  In the name of God,
  Whether it move
  Or be at rest!
  For my Lord is, be sure,
  Ott-Forgiving, Most Merciful!"
- 42. So the Ark floated
  With them on the waves
  (Towering) like mountains, 132
  And Noah called out
  To his son, who had Separated himself (from the rest):
  "O my son! embark
  With us, and be not
  With the Unbelievers!"

ئُيْزِيدِ وَيَحِيلُ عَلَيْهِ عَنَاكِ مُفِيئَد ۞ حَقِّلَ إِذَا جَنَاءَ أَشْرِينَا وَفَا لَ النَّنُولُ هُلُنَا أَحْدِلْ فِهِسَا مِن حَيْلٍ ذَفِحَتِيْنِ اَنْنَيْنِ وَأَهْلَكَ لِإِمَن سَبَقَ عَلَيْدِ الْقَوْلُ وَمَنْ عَلَنَّ وَكَمَّا الْمَرْسَ مَعَلَمْ إِلَّا فِلِيلُّ

<sup>1533,</sup> Fär-al-lannum. Two interpretations have been given: (1) the fountains or the springs on the surface of the earth bubbled over or guished forth; or (2) the ovent (of God's Wrath) boiled over. The former has the weight of the best authority behind it and I prefer it. Moreover, the same phrase occurs in xxiii. 27, where it is a clause coordinated (as here) with the coming of God's Command. These two passages may be compared with hiv. 11-12, where it is said that water poured forth from the skies and guished forth from the springs. This double action is familiar to any one who has seen floods on a large scale. The rain from above would saturate the great Aratat Plateau, and give great force to the springs and fountains in the valley of the Tigris below.

<sup>1335.</sup> A disobedient and recalcitrant son (or step-son or grandson) of Noah is mentioned below (as. 42-43, 45-46). A member of the family, who breaks away from the traditions of the family in things that matter, ceases to share in the privileges of the family.

<sup>1536.</sup> The simile of mountains applies to the waves, which were mountain high,-literally, for the peaks were being submerged.

43. The son replied: "I will
Betake myself to some mountain: ""
It will save me from
The water." Noah said:
"This day nothing can save,
From the Command of God,
Any but those on whom
He hath mercy!"—
And the waves came
Between them, and the son
Was among those Overwhelmed in the Flood.

44. Methen the word went forth: 1338
"O earth! swallow up
Thy water, and O sky!
Withhold (thy rain)!"
And the water abated,
And the matter was ended.
The Ark rested on Mount 137
Judi, and the word
Went forth: "Away
With those who do wrong!"

قال سَاقِ عَلَى اللَّهِ عَلَى اللَّهُ عَلَيْ اللَّهُ عَلَيْ اللَّهُ عَلَيْ اللَّهُ عَلَيْ اللَّهُ عَلَى اللَّهُ عَلَى اللَّهُ عَلَى اللَّهُ عَلَيْ اللَّهُ عَلَى اللَّهُ عَلَيْ عَلَى اللَّهُ عَلَيْ اللْهُ عَلَيْ عَلَيْ اللَّهُ عَلَيْ عَلَيْ اللَّهُ عَلَيْ اللَّهُ عَلَيْ اللَّهُ عَلَيْ اللْهُ عَلَيْ عَلَيْ اللَّهُ عَلَيْ اللْهُ عَلَيْهُ عَلَيْ اللْهُ عَلَيْهُ عَلَيْهُ عَلَيْهُ عَلَيْكُوا عَلَيْهُ عَلَيْكُوا عَلَيْهُ عَلَيْكُوا عَلَيْهُ عَلَيْهُ عَلِي الْمُعْلِقِي عَلَيْهُ عَلَيْكُوا عَلَيْهُ عَلَيْهُ عَلَيْكُوا عَلَيْهُ عَلِيْكُ عَل

1537. The Unbelievers refuse to believe in God, but have great faith in material things! This young man was going to save himself on mountain peaks, not knowing that the peaks were themselves being submerged.

1538. A wonderful passage. The whole picture is painted in just a few words. The chain of material facts are linked together, not only in their relations to each other, but also in their relation to the spiritual forces that control them, and the spiritual consequences of Sin and wrong-doing. The drowning in the material sense was the least part of the Penalty. A whole new world came not existence after the Deluge—as always happens after any great catastrophe, like the World War of 1914-18.

1539. Let us get a little idea of the geography of the place. The letters J. B. and K are philologically interchangeable, and Judi, Gudi, Kudi are sounds that can pass into each other. There is no doubt that the name is connected with the name " Kurd", in which the letter r is a later interpolation, for the oldest Sumerian records name a people called Küti or Gütü as holding the middle Tigns region not later than 2000 BC, (see E. B., Kurdistan). That region comprises the modern Turkish district of Bohtan, in which Jabal Judi is situated (near the frontiers of modern Turkey, modern Iraq, and modern Syria), and the town of Jaztrat ibn 'Umar, (on the present Turco-Syrian frontier), and it extends into Iraq and Persia. The great mountain mass of the Ararat plateau dominates this district. This mountain system "is unique in the Old World in containing great sheets of water that are bitter lakes without outlets, Lake Van and Lake Urumiya being the chief." (E. B., Asia). Such would be the very region for a stupendous Deluge if the usual scanty rainfall were to be changed into a very heavy downpour. A glacier damming of Lake Van in the ice Age would have produced the same result. The region has many local traditions connected with Noah and the Flood. The Biblical legend of Mount Ararat being the resting place of Nogh's Ark is hardly plausible, seeing that the highest peak of Ararat is over 16,000 feet high. If it means one of the lower peaks of the Ararat system, it agrees with the Muslim tradition about Mount Judi (or Gudi), and this is in accordance with the oldest and best local traditions. These traditions are accepted by Josephus, by the Nestorian Christians, and indeed by all the Eastern Christians and Jews, and they are the best in touch with local traditions. See (Viscount) J. Bryce, "Transcaucasia and Ararat," 4th ed., 1896, p. 216.

45. And Noah called upon His Lord, and said:
"O my Lord! surely My son is of my family! And Thy promise is true, And Thou art
The Justest of Judges!"

46. He said: "O Noah!

He is not of thy family: ""

For his conduct is unrighteous,
So ask not of Me

That of which thou

Hast no knowledge!
I give thee counsel, lest

Thou act like the ignorant!"

47. Noah said: "O my Lord! I do seek refuge with Thee, Lest! ask Thee for that Of which I have no knowledge, And unless Thou forgive me And have Mercy on me, I should indeed be lost!" 1841

48. The word came: "O Noah! Come down (from the Ark) With Peace from Us, And Blessing on thee And on some of the Peoples (Who will spring) from those With thee: but (there will be Other) Peoples to whom We Shall grant their pleasures <sup>154</sup> (For a time), but in the end Will a grievous Penalty Reach them from Us." <sup>1548</sup>

ا قَانَ وَعَدَكُ ٱلْكُنُّ وَأَنْكُ أَنْكُمُ وَأَنْكَ أَنْكُمُ

1540. See n. 1535 above. Like all men of God, Noah was kind-hearted, but he is told that there can be no compromise with evil. And Noah acknowledges the reproot. There was a wife of Noah, who was also an unbelieving woman (tavi, 10), and she suffered the fate of Unbellevers.

1341. Noah, in his natural affection and respect for ties of relationship, was overcome with human weakness in wishing to reverse the law of spiritual Justice. It was not sin but ignorance. His ignorance was corrected by divine inspiration, and he immediately saw the full Truth, acknowledged his error, and asked for God's forgiveness and mercy. This is the standard set for us all.

1542. Cf. ii. 126.

1543. Those who truly seek God's light and guidance and sincerely bend their will to Bis Will are fively admitted to God's grace. Notwithstanding any human weaknesses in them, they are advanced higher in the spiritual stage on account of their Faith, Trust, and Sitriving after Right, They are given God's Peace, which gives the soul true calmness and strength, and all the blessings that flow from spiritual life. This was given not only to Noah and his family but to all the righteous people who were saved with him. And their descendants were also promised those blessings on condition of righteouness. But some of them fell from grace, as we know in history. God's grace is not a social or family privilege. Each people and each individual must earnestly strive for it and earn it.

49. Such are some of the stories Of the Unseen, which We Have revealed unto thee: Before this, neither thou Nor thy People knew them. . So persevere patiently: For the End is for those Who are righteous.184

1544. Cf. n. 1528 to xi. 35. The sum of the whole matter is that the righteous, who work for God and their fellow-men, may be traduced, insulted, and persecuted. But they will be sustained by God's Mercy. They must go on working patiently, for the End will all be for them and their Cause.

1545, Cf. the story of Hud the apostle of the 'Ad People, in vii. 65-72. There the argument was how other Peoples treated their apostles as the Meccans were treating Mustafa. Here we see another point emphasized: the insolence of the 'Ad in obstinately adhering to false gods after the true God had been preached to them, God's long-suffering grace to them, and finally God's justice in bringing them to book while the righteous were saved.

The locality in which the 'Ad flourished is indicated in n, 1040 to vii, 65,

And turn to Him (in repentance): He will send you the skies was Pouring abundant rain, And add strength. To your strength: ""
So turn ye not back In sin!"

- 53. They said: "O Had! No Clear (Sign) hast thou Brought us, and we are not The ones to desert our gods On thy word!" Nor shall we Believe in thee! 1941
- 54. "We say nothing but that (Perhaps) some of our gods May have seized thee "" With imbecility." He said: "I call God to witness, And do ye bear witness, That I am free from the sin Of ascribing, to Him.

ثُمْ َ فَهُ قَالِلْهِ مُرْسِلِ السّمَاءَ عَلَيْكُمُ فَهُ لَالَا عَمَرُهُ كُوفَةً إِلَى فُوَيَكُمُ وَلَا لَنَدُولُوا مُغِيرِهِ مِن هَ فَالُوا بَهُودُ مَا خِنْنَا مِيَنَا فِي فَالَوا مَنْهُ وَمَا غَنُ لَكَ يَتَاكِفَ الْمِينَا عَن قَوْلِلِ وَمَا غَنُ لَكَ مِنْ مِنْ اللّهِ اللّهِ اللّهِ عَمْلُلَ بَعْضُ الْمِينَا مِنْ وَهُ قَالَ الْمِنْ الشّهِ لِمُا لَلّهَ وَاشْهُدُ وَا أَنْهِ بَيْنَ * مِنَا لَشْهُولُ إِلَّا أَعْمَرُ لِلْ يَعْضُ الْمِينَا بَيْنَ * مِنَا لَشْهُولُ اللّهِ الشّهُولُ اللّهَ وَاشْهُدُ وَا أَنْهِ

1546. The beautiful metaphor about the skies coming down with rain has been obscured unnecessarily in most translations. The country of the "Ad was an artid country, and rain was the greatest blessing they could receive. We can imagine this being said in a time of famine, when the people performed all sorts of superstitious rifes and invocations instead of turning to the true God in faith and repentance. Further, when we remember that there were, in this tract in ancient times, dams like that at Makrib, for the storage of rain water, the effect is still further heightened in pointing to God's care and metry in His dealings with men.

1547. Adding strength to strength may refer to increase of population, as some Commentators think. While other parts of Arabia were sparsely populated, the rrigated lands of the "Ad supported a comparatively dense population and added to their natural strength in the arts of peace and war. But the term used is perfectly general. They were a powerful people in their time. If they obeyed God and followed the law of righteousness, they would be still more powerful, for "righteousness exalteth a nation."

1548. The argument of the Unbelievers is practically this; "We are not convinced by you; we don't want to be convinced: we think you are a liar,—or perhaps a fool!" (See next verse,)

1349. See n. 1548 above. Continuing their argument, the Unbelievers make a show of making all charitable allowances for Hdd, but in reality cut him to the quick by bringing in their false gods. "To be quite polite," said they, "we will not say that you are exactly a har! Perhips you have been touched with imbectility! Ah yes! You rail against what you call our false gods! Some of them have paid you out, and made you a foo! Har! ha!" This mockey is even worse than their other false accusations. For it sets up false gods against the One True God, even in dealing with Hdd. So Hdd replies, with spirit and indignation: "At least keep God's name rut of your futle talk! You know as well as! do, that! worship the One True God! You pretend that your false gods can smite a true man of God!! accept the challenge. Scheme and plot against me as you may, altof you—you an! your gods! See if you have any power!! ask for no quarter from you! My trust is in God!"

- 55. "Other gods as partners! So scheme (your worst) against me, All of you, and give me No respite. 1953
- 56. "I put my trust in God, My Lord and your Lord! There is not a moving Creature, but He hath Grasp of its fore-lock." Verily, it is my Lord That is on a straight Path."
- 57. "If ye turn away,—
  I (at least) have conveyed
  The Message with which I
  Was sent to you. My Lord
  Will make another People
  To succeed you, and you
  Will not harm Him 168
  In the least. For my Lord
  Hath care and watch
  Over all things."
- 58. So when Our decree Issued, We saved Hod And those who believed With him, by (special) Grace 1554 From Ourselves: We saved them From a severe Penalty.
- 59. Such were the 'Ad People : They rejected the Signs

1550. Cf. vii. 195 and n. 1168.

1551. Grusp of the fore-loch: an Arabic idiom, referring to a horse's fore-lock. The man who grasps it has complete power over the horse, and for the horse the fore-lock is as it were the crown of his beauty, the sum of his power of self-assertion. So God's power over all creatures is unlimited and no one can withstand His decree, -Cl, xevi. 15-16.

1552. That is, the standard of all virtue and righteousness is in the Will of God, the Universal Will that controls all things in goodness and justice. You are on a crooked Path. God's Path is a straight Path.

1555. Hūd was dealing with a people of pride and obstinate rebellion. He tells them that their conduct will only recoil on themselves. It can do no harm to God or in any way frustrate the beneficrent Plan of God. He will only put some other people in their place to carry out His Plan. That Plan is referred to in the next sentence as "care and watch" over all his Creation, 1554. A few just men might suffer for the iniquities of the many. But God's Plan is perfect and eventually saves His own people by special Grace, if they have Faith and Trust in Him.

Of their Lord and Cherisher; Disobeyed His Apostles; And followed the command Of every powerful, obstinate Transgressor.<sup>1555</sup>

60. And they were pursued

And on the Day of Judgment.

1555. Instead of following the beneficent Lord who cherished them, they followed every rebel against God's Law, if he only obtained a little power to dazzle them.

1556. The story of $\frac{84}\text{lis}$ and the Thamdo people has been told from another point of view in vii, 73.79. The difference in the point of view three and here is the same as in the story of Hod; see n. 1545 to xi. 50. Note how the story now is the same, and yet new points and details are brought out to illustrate each new argument. Note, also, how the besetting sin of the 'Ad-pride and obstinacy's is distinguished from the besetting sin of the Thamdo-the oppression of the poor, as illustrated by the test case and symbol of the She-camel: see n. 1044 to vii. 73. All sin is in a sense pride and rebellion; yet sins take particular have in different circumstances, and these colours are brought out as in a most actistically painted picture—with the greatest economy of words and the most piercing analysis of motives. For the locality and history of the Thamdd see n. (043 to vii. 73.)

1557. For Anshas as a process of creation-see n. 923 to vi. 98 and the further references given there, As to his body, man has been produced from earth or clay, and his settlement on earth is a fact of his material existence. "Therefore we must conform to all the laws of our physical being, in order that through our life on this earth we may develop that higher Life which belongs to the other part of our being, our spiritual heritage. Through the use we make of our health, of our tilth, of our pastures, of material facts of all kinds, will develop our moral and spiritual, nature.

. 1558: §8hh's life with his people had been so righteous (like that of al-Amin in later times) that he might have been chosen leader or king if he had only conformed to their supersitions and supported their sins. But he was born for a higher mission—that of a preacher of rutuh and righteousness and an ardent opponent of selfish privilege and a champion of the rights of humanity on God's free earth by the symbol of the sheckmelt is sen. 1041 or vii, 73.

1559. "God has been good to me and bestowed on the His light and the inestimable privilege of carrying His mission to you. Don't you see that if I fail to carry out his mission, I shall have to answer belore Him? Who can help me in Jhat case? "The only thing which you can add to my misfortunes would be total perdition in the spiritual world." Cf. xi. 28.

1500, $4lih does not merely take up a negative attitude. He puts forward the she-camel as a Symbol: see n. 1044 to vii. 73. "Give up your selfish monopoly. Make God's gifts on this free earth available to all. Give the poor their rights, including grazing rights on common lands. Show your penitence and your new attitude by leaving this she-camel to graze freely. She is a Symbol, and therefore sacred to you." But their only reply was to defy the appeal and ham-string the camel. And so they went the way of all sinners—to total perdition.

1561. Just three days' time for further thought and repentance: But they paid no heed.   Towards the (meal), he felt
  Some mistrust of them,
  And conceived a fear of them.
  They said: "Fear not:
  We have been sent
  Against the people of Lüt." 1864
- 71. And his wife was standing (There), and she laughed: 1489 But We gave her Glad tidings of Isaac, And after him, of Jacob.

قالنوا سكنت قال سكم قنالية أن بَدَّة بِعِلْ حِندو ۞ قاتا وَآلِينِ مِنْ لا مَسَل الْهُ و حَسِر عُدُ وَالْوَجْسَ مِنهُ وُحِدَة قَالُوالا فَعَدَ الدَّا الرُّسِلَة آلَى فَوْرِلُولُو ۞ وَامْرَا مُنْوَالِهِ مَدَّ فَعَدَ حِكَدُ فَمَتَوْنَهُ مَا والمنكِق وَمِن وَزَاو إِسْكِنَ مَعْنُونَهُ

1565. According to the sequence of Sara vii, the next reference should be to the story of LDi, and that story commences at zi. 77 below, but it is introduced by a brief reference to an episode in the life of his uncle Abraham, from whose seed sprang the peoples to whom Moses, Jesus, and Muhammad Musiafi were sent with the major Revelations. A braham had by this time passed through the fire of persecutions in the Mesopofamiar valleys, he had left behind him the ancestral idolatry of Ur of the Chaldees; he had been tried and he had (trumphed over the persecution of minrūd; he nad now taken up his residence in Canaan, from which his nephew Lot (LDi) was called to preach to the wicked Cities of the Plain east of the Qed Sea which is itself called Bahr LDi. Thus prepared and sanctified, he was now ready to receive the Message that he was chosen to be the progenitor of a great line of Prophets, and that Message is now referred to.

Can we localise Nimrūd? If local tradition in place-names can be relied upon; this king must have ruled over the tract which includes the modern Nimrūd, on the Tigris, about twenty miles south of Mosul. This is the site of Asyrian ruins of great interest, but the rise of Asyria as an Empire was of course much later than the time of Abraham. The Assyrian city was called Kalakh (or Calah), and archaeolgical exeavations carried out there have yielded valuable results, which are however irrelevant for our Commentary.

1365-A. With oriental hospitality Abraham received the strangers with a salutation of Peace, and immediately placed before them a sumptious meal of roasted call. The strangers were embarrassed, They were angels and did not eat. If hospitality is reluced in the East, it means that those who refuse it meditate no good to the would-be host. Abraham therefore had a feeling of mistrust and fear in his mind, which the strangers at once set at rest by saying that there mission was in the first place to help Lit as a warner to the Cities of the Plain. But in the second place (they had good news for Abraham it he was to be the father of great peoples!)

1566. The people of List means the people to whom List was sent on his mission of warning, the people of the wicked Cities of the Plain: Sodom and Gomortah.

1567. The narrative is very concise, and most of the details are taken for granted. We may suppose that the angels gave the news first to Abraham, who was already, according to Gen. xxi. 5, a bundred years of age, and his wife Sarah was not far short of ninety (Gen. xxii. 7). She was probably screened according to oriental custom. She could hardly believe the news. In her scepticism isome say in her joy) she laughed. But the news was formally communicated to her that she was to be the mother of Isaac, and through Isaac, the grandmother of Jacob. Iacob was to be a fruitful tree, with his twelve sohs. But hisherto Abraham had had no son by her, and Sarah was past the age of child-bearing. "How could it be?" she thought.

- 72. She said: "Alas for me! ""
  Shall I bear a chlid,
  Seeing I am an old woman,
  And my husband here
  Is an old man?
  That would indeed
  Be a wonderful thing!"
- 73. They said: "Dost thou Wonder at God's decree? The grace of God And His blessings on you, O ye people of the house! But House! But House! But House! - 74. When fear had passed From (the mind of) Abraham And the glad tidings i''l Had reached him, he Began to plead with Us For Lat's people.
- 75. For Abraham was,
  Without doubt, forbearing
  (Of faults), compassionate,
  And given to look to God. 1374
- 76. O Abraham ! Seek not this. The decree of thy Lord Hath gone forth : for them There cometh a Penalty

1569. Akl at beit a people of the house, a polite form of addressing the wife and members of the family. Blessings are here invoked on the whole family.

1370. This little episode of Abraham's life comes in' fitly as one of the illustrations of God's worderful providence in His dealings with man. Abraham'had had a tussle with his father on behalf of Truth and Unity (vi 14); the had passed through the fire of temptation unacathed (xxi). 66-92, it he had travelled to far countries, and was new ready to receive his great mission as the fountain-head of appealtes in his old age. Humanly speaking it seemed impossible that he should have a son at his age, and yet it came to pass and became a conre-stone of sacred history.

1371. Glad tidings: not only that he was to have a son, but that he was to be a fountain-head of apostles. So he now begins to plead at once for the sinful people to whom Lot was sent as a warner.

1572. Like Muejtds, Abraham had three qualities in a pre-eminent degree, which are here mentioned; (1) he was long-suffering with other people's faults; (2) his sympathies and compassion were very wide; and (3) for every difficulty or trouble he turned to God and sought Him to prayer.

That cannot be turned back! 1573

1573. This is a sort of prophetic apostrophe. All your care and sympathy are useless, O Abraham! All your warning, O Lilt, will be unheeded! Alas! they are so deep in sin that nothing will reclaim them! This is illustrated in verse 79 below. And now we proceed to Lilt and how he was dealt with by the micked.

1574. The story of Lot as referred to in vii. 80.84, laid emphasis on the rejection of Lot's mission by mea who practised unnatural abominations. See n. 1049 to vii. 80. Here the emphasis is laid on God's dealings with men—in mitrey for true spiritual service and in righteous wrath and punishment for those who dely the Jaws of nature established by Him:—also on men's dealings with each other and the contrast between the righteous and the wicked who respect no laws human or dividend

12:6. Lot seemed helpless in the situation in which he found himself,—alone against a tabble of people inflamed with evil passions. He wished he had had the strength to suppress them himself or had had some powerful support to lean ont. But the powerful support was there, though he had not realised it till then. It was the support of God. His guests were not ordinary men, but Angels who had come to test the people before they inflicted the punishment. They now declared themselves, and gave him directions to get away before the morning, when the punishment would descend on the doomed Cities of the Plain.

. 1577, Even in Lot's household was one who detracted from the harmony of the family. She was disabedient to her husband, and he was here obeying God's Command. She looked back and shared the fate of the wicked inhabitants of the Cities of the Plain: see also Lvi, 10. The Biblical narrative suggests that she was turned into a pillar of salt (Gen. xiz. 26).

1578, Cf. vil. 84 and n. 1052.

1579, Stylil, a Persiant word Arabicised, from Sang-e-gil, or Sang-e-gil, stone and clay, or hard as baked clay, according to the Qāmūs. Sodom and Gomorrah were in-a tract of hard, caky, sulphurous soil, to which this description well applies. Cl. ii. 33, where the words are "stones of clay" ($ijārat min jin) in connection with the same uncident. On the other hand, in cv. 4, the word sijil is used for pellets of hard-baked clay in connection with Abraha and the Companions of the Liephant.

1580. If we take the words literally, they would mean that the showers of brimstones were marked with the destiny of the wicked as decreed by God. But would it not be better to take them figuratively, to mean that the shower of brimstones was especially appointed in God's Decree or Plan to mark the punishment for the crimes of Sodom and Gomortah?

Nor are they 1881 ever far From those who do wrong!

SECTION 8.

- 84. MFo the Madyan people 1882 (We sent) Shu'aib, one Of their own brethren: he said: "O my people! worship God: Ye have no other god But Him. And give not Short measure or weight: I see you in prosperity; But I fear for you The Penalty of a Day That will compass (you) all round.
- 85. "And O my people! give just measure and weight, Nor withhold from the people The things that are their due: "1984 Commit not evil in the land... With intent to do mischief..."
- 86. "That which is left you By God is best for you, 1845

1581. They: Arabic, Aiya: some Commentators take the pronoun to refer to the wicked cities as destroyed: the meaning then would be: those wicked cities were not so different from other cities that do wrong, for they would all soffer similar punishment! Perhaps it would be better to refer "they" to the stones of punishment by a metonymy for "punishment": "punishment would not be far from any people that did wrong."

1382. Cf. vii. 85-93. The location of Madyan is explained in n. 1033 to vii. 85 and the chronologicalplace of Shu'aib in n. 1084 to vii. 93. The point of the reference here is different from that in S. vii. Here the emphasis is on God's dealings with men and men's crooked and obstinate ways: there the emphasis was rather on their treatment of their Prophet, thus throwing light on some of the sins of the Meccant in later times.

1583. The Midianites were a commercial people, and their besetting sin was commercial selfahness and fraudulent dealings in weights and measures. Their Prophet tells them that that is the surest way to cut short their prosperity. Noth in the material and the spiritual sense. When the Day of Judgment.comes, it will search out their dealings through and through: "It will compass them all fround," and they will not be able to escape then, however much they may conceal their frauds in this world.

1584 Both Plato and Aristotle define justice as the virtue which gives every one his due. From this point of view justice becomes the master virtue, and includes most other virtues. It was the lack of this that ruined the Midanites. Their selfishness was "intent on imischef," i.e., spoiling other people's business by not giving them their just dues.

1885. God's Law does not require that a man should deprire himself of the things that are necessary for his own well-being and development. If he follows God's Law, what is left him after he renders to others their just dues will be not only enough, but will be the best possible provision for his own physical and spiritual growth. Even the kindness and consideration which God's Law inclicates are in the best interests of the man's own soul. But of course the kindness and consideration must be spontaneous. It must flow from the man's own will, and cannot be forced on him by the Teachers who come from God to show him the way.

If ye (but) believed! But I am not set Over you to keep watch!"

87. They said: "O Shu'aib!

Our fathers practised, or
That we leave off doing

1587. They grow sarcastic against Shu'aib. In effect they say: "You are a fine man! You teach us that we must be kind and folbearing with other people's faults, and now get at what you call our sins! You think you are the only right-minded man!

1988. Shu'aib's answer is gentie and bersussive. First, he would ask them not to fly into a passion but satisfy themselves that he had a mission from God, and was working in the discharge of his mission: he was not merely finding fault with them. Secondily, though he was a poor man, he asked them to note that he was happy and comfortable: God had given him good sustenance, material and spiritual, as from Himself, though he did not resort to the sort of tricks which they considered necessary for their prosperity. Thirdly, if he forbade them anything he wished to apply the same standards to himself. Fourthly, all the advice which he is giving them is for their own good, which he desires to advance to the utmost of his powers. Fifthly, he is humble for himself; he would not set himself up to be their teacher or guide, or expect to be obeyed; the success of any of his efforts on their behalf must come from God's grace; will they not therefore turn to God, so that God's grace an heal them?

1389. Finally, Shu'aib appéais to them as man to man. · "Because I differ from you, do not think I do not love you or feel for you. Let it not drive you into obstinacy and sin. I see things that you do not. My vision takes in the fate of previous generations who sinned, and perished on account of their sins. Turn therefore to God in repentance."

<sup>1386.</sup> It is the way of selfish and material minded people (1) to scoff at spiritual things like prayer and worship and (2) to hug their own property rights as if there were not other rights even greater than those of property!

Thus did they ruin themselves! It was they
Who wronged themselves; for God is ever kind
And His punishments are just. All men
Will be brought to His Judgment-seat, and the good
Will be rewarded with bliss, as the evil
Will be consigned to misery. Eschew evil;

1598 The story of Moses and Pharaoh is referred to in many places in the Qur-an, each in connection with some special point to be illustrated. Here the point is that God's dealings with man are in all things and at all times just. But man falls under false leadership by deliberate choice and perishes along with his false leaders accordingly. In exercise of the intelligence and choice given him, man should be particularly careful to understand his own responsibilities and to profit from God's Signs, so as to attain to God's Mercy and blesships.

1599. Pharaoh is the type of the arrogant, selfish, and false leader, who poses as a power in rivatry with that of God. Such an attitude seems to attract unregenerate humanity, which falls a willing victim, in spite of the teaching and warning given by the men of God and the many moral and spiritual forces that becken man towards God's Grace.

1600. Arwada=to lead, as cattle, down to their watering place. The metaphot is apt. The true hardsman is trusted by his normal flock, and he leads them in the heat of the day down to pleasant and cool watering places in order that they may slake their thirst and be happy. The false leader does the opposite: he takes them down to the fire of eternal misery! And yet men sin against their own intelligence, and follow the false leader fike cattle without fartligence.

1601. Some are standing: like corn, which is ready, to be reaped. Among the communities which remained was, and, is, Egypt, although the Pharaoh and his wicked people have been swept away. The simile of standing com' also suggests that at no time can any town or community expect permanency, except in the Law of the Lord.

- 104. Nor shall We delay it But for a term appointed.
- 105. All he day it arrives. No soul shall speak 1001

1602. Nations grow and ripen and are mown down. If they disobeyed God, their end is evil : if they were true and godly, their harvest was good.

1603. All false and fleeting shadows must vanish before the reality and permanence of the decree of God. If we worshipped the false, we earned nothing but perdition, 1604. Yaumun mashhild: To suggest the comprehensive meaning of the Arabic I have translated, "a Day of Testimony". I proceed to explain the various shades of meaning implied : (1) a Day to which all testimony points from every quarter; (2) a Day when testimony will be given before God's Judgment-seat, by all who are relevant witnesses, e.g., the Prophets that preached, the men or women we benefited or injured, the angels who recorded our thoughts and deeds, or our thoughts and deeds personified; (3) a Day which will be witnessed, i.e., seen by all, no matter how or where they died.

1605. Speak i.e., either in self-defence or in accusation of others or to intercede for others, or to enter into conversation or ask questions, one with another. It will be a solemn Day, before the Great Judge of all, to whom everything will be known and whose authority will be unquestioned. There will be no room for quibbling or equivocation or subterfuge of any kind, nor can any one lay the blame on another or take the responsibility of another. Personal responsibility will be enforced strictly.

Except by His leave:

1606 Shaqī (wretched) and Sa'tā (blessed) have become almost technical theological terms, They are explained in the four following verses,

1607. The first word. Zaftr, translated "sighs", is applied to one part in the process of the braying of an ass, when he emits a deep breath. The second, Shakit, translated "sobe", is the other process in the braying of an ass, when he draws in a long breath. This suggestion of an animal proverbial for his foily implies that the wicked, in spite of their arrogance and insolence in this world below, will at last realise that they have been fools after all, throwings away their own chances whenever they got them. In layil. 7 the word Shakit is applied to the tremendous roaring in-take or decounting of Helf-field.

1608 Abilitin: This is the word which is usually translated "dwell for ever" or "dwell for aye". Here it is definitely connected with two conditions, viz: (1) as long as the heavens and the earth endure, and (2) except as God wills. Some Muslim theologians deduce from this the conclusion that the penalties referred to are not eternal, because the heavens and the earth as we see them are not eternal, and the punishments for the deeds of a life that will end should not be such as will never end. The majority of Muslim theologians reject this view. They hold that the heavens and the earth here referred to are not those we see now, but others that will be eternal. They agreethat God's Will is unlimited in scope and power, but that it has willed that the rewardsand punishments of the Day of Judgment will be eternal. This is not the place to enter into this tremendous controversy.

1609. Exactly the same arguments apply as in the last note.

1610. The felicity will be uninterrupted, unlike any joy or happiness which we can imagine in this life and which is subject to chances and changes, as our dally experience shows. 544

<sup>1614.</sup> CI. x1. 62. There is always in human affairs the conflict between the old and the new,—the worn out system of our ancestors, and the fresh fiving spring of God's inspiration fitting in with new times and new surroundings. The advocates of the former look upon this latter not only with intellectual doubt but with moral suspicion, as did the People of the Book upon Islam, with its fresh outlook and vigorous realistic way of looking at things.

Thou and those who with thee Turn (unto God); and transgress not (From the Path); for He seeth Well all that ye do.

1616. The two ends of the day: Morning and afternoon. The morning prayer is the Fajr, after the light is up but before sunrise: we thus get up beturns and begin the day with the remembrance of God and of our duty to Him, just as an ambassador might start on the journey after salutiong his king and receiving his blessing. The early afternoon prayer, gubr, is immediately after noon: we are in the midst of our dataly life, and again we remember God.

1617. Approaches of the night: Zulafan, plural of Zulfatan, an approach, something near at hand. As rabic has, like Greek, a dual number distinct from the plural, and the plural number is used here, and not the dual, it is reasonable to argue that at least three "approaches of the night" are meant. The late aftermoon prayer, 'Agr, can be one of these three, and the evening prayer, 'Magrib, just after sunset, can be the second. The early night prayer, 'Jhā, at supper time when the glow of sunset is disappearing, would be the third of the "approaches of the night", when we commit ourselves to God before sleep. These are the five canonical prayers of Islân.

1618. "These things that are good": in this context the words refer primarily to prayers and sacred thoughts, but they include all good thoughts, good words, and good deeds. It is by them that we keep away everything that is evil, whether referring to the past, the present, or the future.

1619. Bagiyat: some virtue or faculty that stands assault and is lasting; balanced good sense that stands firm to virtue and is not dazzled by the lusts and pleasures of this world, and is not deterred by fear from boldly condemning wrong if it was fashionable or customary. It is leaders possessed of such character that can save a nation from disast one prediction. The scarcity of such leaders—and the rejection of the few who stood out—brought ong the tions whose example has already been set out to us as a warning.

In x1, 86 the word has a more literal meaning.

1620. The exceptional men of firm virtue would have been destroyed by the wicked to whom they were an offence, had they not been saved by the grace and mercy of God. Or perhaps, but for such grace, they might themselves have succumbed to the evil around them, or been overwhelmed in the general calamity.

1621. There are different shades of interpretation for this verse. I follow Baidh wi in construing finding here as "a single wrong". He thinks that the wrong referred to is shirh, or polytheisism: God will not destroy for mare wrong belief if the conduct is right. I incline to interpret in more general terms. God is Long-Suffering and Oft-Forgiving: He is too Merciful to destroy for a single wrong, if there is any hope of reclaiming the wrong-doers to repentance and amendment or right life. An alternative interpretation is: "to destroy communities unjustly"...

1622. Cf. x. 19. All mankind might have been one. But in God's Plan man was to have a certain measure of free-will, and this made differences inevitable. This would not have mattered if all had honesty sought God. But selfshanes and moral wrong came in, and people's disputations became mixed up with hatred, jealousy, and sin, except in the case of those who accepted God's grace, which saved them. The object of their creation was to raise them up spiritually by God's grace. But if they will choose the path of evil and fall into sin, God's decree must be fulfilled, and His justice will take its course. In the course of that justice Hell will be filled with men and spirits, such is the aumber of those who go satray.

1623. Cf. vii. 18 and vii. 179. If Satan and his evil spirits tempt men from the path of rectitude, the responsibility of the tempted, who choose the path of evil, is no less than that of the tempters, and they will both be involved in punishment together.

1634. The stories of the Prophets in the Qur-sn are not mere narratives or histones: they involve three things: (I) they teach the highest spiritual Truth; (2) they give advice, direction, and warning, as to how we should govern our lives, and (3) they awaken our conscience and recall to us the working of God's Law in human affairs. The story of Joseph in the next Sūra is an illustration in point.

1624-A. C.f. xi, 93 and vi. 135, n. 957. 'The worst that ye can do will not defeat God's Plan; and as for us who believe, our obvious duty is to do our part as taught to us by God's revelation.

1625, Cf. xi. 93, n. 1895, and x. 102, n. 1484. If the wicked only wait, they will see how God's Plan unfolds itself. As for those who believe, they are glad to wait in perfect confidence, because they know that God is good and merciful, as well as just and true.

1616. Cf. is 210. There is nothing, secret or open, in our world or in Creation, which does not depend ultimately on God's Will and Plan. Every affair goes back to Him for decision. Therefore we must worship Him and trust Him. Worship implies many things: e.g. (1) trying to understand His statue and His Will; (2) realising His goodness and glory, and His working in us; as a means to this end, (3) keeping Him in constant remembrance and celebrating His praise, to whom all praise is due; and (4) completely identifying our will with His, which we service to Him and His creatures in all sincerity.

INTRODUCTION TO STRA XII (Yanuf).

For the chronological place of this Sura and the general argument of Suras x. to xv. see Introduction to Sura x.

In subject-matter this Sūra is entirely taken up with the story (recapitulated rather than told) of Jeseph, the youngest (but one) of the twelve sons of the patriarch Jacob. The story is called the most beautiful of stories (xii. 3) for many reasons:

(1) it is the most detailed of any in the Qur-an; (2) it is full of human vicissitudes, and has therefore deservedly appealed to men and women of all classes; (3) it paints in vivid colours, with their spiritual implications, the most varied aspects of life—the patriarch's old age and the confidence between him and his little best-beloved son, the elder brothers' jenlousy of this little son, their plot and their father's grief, the sale of the father's darling into slavery for a miserable little price, carnal love contrasted with purity and chastity, false charges, prison, the interpretation of dreams, low life and high life, Innocence raised to honour, the sweet "revenge" of Forgiveness and Benevolence, high matters of state and administration, humility in exaltation, filial love, and the beauty of Piety and Truth.

The story is similar to but not identical with the Biblical story; but the atmosphere is wholly different. The Biblical story is like a folk-tale in which morality has no place. Its tendency is to exait the clever and financially minded Jew against the Egyptian, and to explain certain ethnic and tribal peculiarities in later Jewish history. Joseph is shown as buying up all the cattle and the land of the poor Egyptians for the State under the stress of famine conditions, and making the Israelites "rulers" over Pharoah's cattle. The Quranic story, on the other hand, is less a narrative than a highly spiritual sermon or allegory explaining the seeming contradictions in life, the enduring nature of virtue in a world full of flux and change, and the marvellous working of God's eternal purpose in His Plan as unfolded to us on the wide canvas of history. This aspect of the matter has been a favourite with Muslim poets and Sūfi exegetists, and is further referred to in Appendix VI (at the end of this Sūra), in connection with Jāmi's great Persian masterpiece, Yūsul-o-Zulaikbā.

Summary.—Life is a dream and a vision, to be explained by stories and parables, as in the perspicuous Arabic Qur-an. The truth, which Joseph the man of God saw in his vision, was unpalatable to his ten half-brothers, who plotted against him and sold him into slavery to a merchant for a few pieces of silver. (xii. 1-20, and C. 109.)

Joseph was taken by the merchant into Egypt, was bought by a great Egyptian court dignitary ('Azīz), who adopted him. The dignitary's wife sought, but in vain, to attract Joseph to the delights of earthly love. His resistance brought him disgrace and imprisonment, but he taught the truth even in prison and was known for his kindness. One of his fellow-prisoners, to whom he had interpreted a dream, was released and received into favour as the King's cup-bearer. (xii. 21-42, and C. 110.)

The King had a vision, which Joseph (through the cup-bearer) got an opportunity of explaining. Joseph insisted that all the scandal that had been raixed about him should be publicly cleared. He was received into favour, and was appointed wazir by the King. His half-brothers (driven by famine) came to Egypt and were treated kindly by Joseph without their knowing his identity. He asks them to bring his full brother, the youngest son, Benjamin. (xii. 43-68, and C. 111.)

Joseph detains Benjamin and by a stratagem convicts his half-brothers of their hatred and crime against himself, forgives them, and sends them to bring Jacob and the whole family from Canaan to Egypt. (xii. 69-93, and C. 112.)

Israel (Jacob) comes, is comforted, and settles in Egypt. The name of God is glorified. The truth of God endures for ever, and God's purpose is fully revealed in the Hercafter. (xii), 94-111, and C. 113).

C. 109.—Life and Wisdom are explained by Signs, (xii. 1.20)

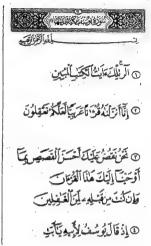

Symbols, Parables, and moving Stories,
In the Holy Qur-án. A beautiful story
Is that of Joseph, the best-beloved son
Of Jacob. His future greatness
Was pre-figured in a vision, but his brothers
Were filled with envy and hate: they plotted
To get rid of him and threw him down
Into a well. Some merchants found him,
Bound for Egypt. The brothers sold him
Into slavery for a few silver coins,—
Him the noblest man of his age,
Marked out by God for a destiny
Of greatness, righteousness, and benevolence.

1627. For the meaning of these mystic letters, see Introduction to S. x.

1628. Ayal: Signs, Symbols, verses of the Qur-an. The Symbolic meaning is particularly appropriate here, as the whole of Joseph's story is a Sign or a Miracle,—a wonder-working exposition of the Plan and Purpose of Ged.

1629, Cf. v. 17, n. 716. The predominant meaning of Mubin here is; one that explains or makes things clear, 1630. Qur-ās means: something (1) to be read, or (2) recited, or (3) proclaimed. It may apply to a verse, or a Sūra, or to the whole Book of Revelation.

1631. Most beautiful of sterrer: see Introduction to this Sūra. Eloquence consists in conveying by a word or hint many meanings for those who can understand and wish to learn wisdom. Not only is Joseph's story "beautiful" in that sense Joseph himself was renowned for many beauty; the women of Egypt, called him a noble angel [xii 31], and the beauty of his exterior form was a symbol of the beauty of his soul. Moreover, the whole of the mystic meaning of Zulaikhā's love for him centres round the theme, how beauty can be falsely worshipped in a sort of disguised self-indulgence, contrasted with the growth of that true love of Beauty, which casts out Self and turns to the eternal Beauty of the Soul.

1632. For the Parable all that is necessary to know about Joseph is that he was one of the Chosen Ones of God. For this story it is necessary to set down a few more details. His father was Jacob, also called Israel the son of Israec, the younger son of Abraham, the elder son having been Isma Bi, whose story is told in it, 124-129. Abraham may be called the Father of the line of Semitic prophecy. Jacob had four weves. From three of them he had ten sons. In his old age he had from Rachel (Arabic Rāṣlil) a very beautiful woman, two sons Joseph and Benjamin (the youngest). At the time this story begins we may suppose that Joseph was about seventeen years of age. The place where Jacob and his family and his flocks were located was in Canaan, and is shown by tradition near modern Nablus (ancient Shechem), some thirly miles north of Jerussiem. The traditional site of the well into which Joseph was thrown by his brothers is still shown in the neighbourhood.

1633. Joseph was a mere lad of seventeen. But he was true and frank and nghteous; he was a type of manly beauty and reclitude. His father loved him dearly. His half-brothers were jealous of him and hated him. His destiny was pre-figured in the vision. He was to be exalted in rank above his eleven brothers (stars) and his father and mother (sun and moon), but as the subsequent story shows, he never lost his head, but always honoured his parents and repaid his brothers' craft and hatred with forgiveness and kindness.

1634. The young lad Yusuf was innocent and did not even know of his brothers guile and hatred, but the father knew and warned him

1635. The story is brought up at once to its spiritual bearing. These wicked brothers were puppets in Evil hands of Evil. They allowed their mashood to be subjugated by Evil, not remembering that Evil was the declared opposite or enemy of the true nature and instincts of manhood.

1636. If Joseph was to be of the elect, he must understand and interpret Signs and events aright. The imagination of the pure sees truths, which those not so endowed cannot understand. The dreams of the righteous pre-figure great events, while the dreams of the futtle are mere idle futilities. Even things that happen to us are often like dreams. The righteous man receives disasters and everses, not with blasphemics against God, but with humble devotion, seeking to ascertain His Will. Nor does he receive good fortune with atrogance, but as an opportunity for doing good, to friends and foes alike. His attitude to histories and stories is the same: he seeks the edifying material which leads to God.

1637. Whatever happens is the result of God's Will and Plan. And He is good and wise, and He knows all things. Therefore we must trust Him. In Joseph's case he could look back to his fathers, and to Abraham, the True, the Righteous, who through all adversities kept his Faith pure and undefiled, and won through.

1638. In Joseph's story we have good and evil contrasted in so many different ways. Those in search of true spiritual knowledge can see it embodied in concrete events in this story of many facets, matching the colours of Joseph's many-coloured coat.

1639. The ten brothers not only envied and hated their innocent younger brothers Joseph and Benjamin. They despised and dishonoured their father as an ingnorant old fool,—in his dotage. In reality Jacob had the wisdom to see that his young and innocent sons wanted protection and to perceive Joseph's spiritual greatness. But his wisdom, to them, was folly or madness or imbecility, because it touched their self-love, as truth often does. And they relied on the brute strength of numbers—the ten helfy brethran against old Jacob, the lad Joseph, and the boy Benjamin!

1640. There seems to be some irony here, consistent with the cynical nature of these callous, which will be prethere. The goodness of Joseph was a reproach to their own wickedness. Perhaps the graved father contrasted Joseph against them, and sometimes spoke of it: "Why don't you be good like Joseph?" This was gall and wormwood to them. Real goodness was to them nothing but a name. Perhaps it only suggested hypocrisy to them. So they plotted toget rid of Joseph. In their mean hearts they thought that would bring back their father's love whole to them. But they valued that love only for what material good they could get out of it. On the other hand their father was neither foolish nor unjustly partial. He only knew the difference between gold and dross. They say in irony, "Let us first get rid of Joseph. It will be time enough then to pretend to be good' like him, or to repent of our crime after we have had all its benefits in material kings!

1641. One of the brethren, perhaps less cruel by nature, or perhaps more worldly-wise, said: "Why undertake the risk of blood-guiltiness? Throw him into the well you see there! Some travellets passing by will pick him up and remove him to a far country. If not, at least set shall not have killed him." This was faise casuistry, but such casuistry appeals to sinners of a certain kind of temperament. The well was apparently a dry well, deep enough to prevent his coming out, but with no water in which he could be drowned. It was God's Plan to save him alive, but not to make Joseph inducted to any of his brethers for his like!

1642. The plot having been formed, the brethren proceed to put it into execution. Jacob, knowing the situation, did not ordinarily trust his beloved Joseph with the brethren. The latter therefore remonstrate and feign brotherly affection.

1643. They did not expect their protestations to be believed in. But they added an argument the might appeal both to Jacob and Joseph. They were going to give their young brother a good tham. Why not let him come out with them and play and enjoy himself to his beart's content?

1644. Jacob did not know the precise plot, but he had strong misgivings. But how could he put of these brethren? If they were driven to open hostility, they would be certain to cause him harm. He must deal with the brethren wisely and cautiously. He pleaded that he was an old man, and would miss Joseph and be sad without him. And after all, Joseph was not of an age to play with them. They would be attending to their own affairs, and a wolf might come and attack and kill Joseph. In asying this he was really unwittingly giving a cue to the wicked ones, for they use that very excuse in verse 17 below. Thus the wicked plot thickens, but there is a counter-plan also, which is drawing a noose of the round the wicked ones, so that they are eventually driven into a corner, and have to confess their own guilt in verse 9! below, and through repentance obtain forgiveness.

1665. Jacob's objections as staied could be easily rebutted, and the brethren did so. They would be eleven in the party, and the ten strong and grown-up men would have to perish before the would could touch the young lad Joseph! So they prevailed, as yethel arguments are aft to prevail, when events are weaving their web on quite another Plan, which has nothing to do with verbal arguments. Presumably Benjamin was too young to go with them.

The poor lad was betrayed by his brothers, and left, perhaps to the orto be sold into slavery. But his heart was undaunted. His courage never failed him. On the contrary he had an inkling, a presentiment, of things that were to be—that his own rectitude and beauty of soul would land him on his feet, and perhaps some day, his brothers would stand in need of him, and he would be in a position to fulls that need, and would do it gladly, putting them to shame for their present plotting and betrayal of him.

1647. This situation actually occurred when Joseph later on became the governor of Egypt and his prothers stood before him suing for his assistance although they did not knew that he was their betrayed brother; see ait. 89 below; also git. 58.

1648. The plotters were ready with their false tale for their father, but in order to make it appear plausible, they came some time after sundown, to show that they had made an effort to search for their brother and save him.

1649. They wanted to make out that they were not negligent of Joseph. They were naturally having games and exercise, while the boy was left with their belongings. It was the racing that prevented them from seeing the wolf. And Jacob's fears about the wolf (xii, 13 above) made them imagine that he would awallow the wolf story readily.

1650. They were surprised that Jacob received the story about the wolf with cold incredulity. So they grew petulant, put on an air of injured innocence, and bring out the blood-stained garment described in the next verse.

1631. Joseph wore a garment of many colouts, described in Persian as a qubi bis-qulamdin. This was itself allegorical of the wonderful changes of fortune which Joseph underwent in his life. This was a special garment peculiar to Joseph. If the brethren could produce it blood-strained before their father, they thought he would be convinced that Joseph had been killed by a wild beast. But the stain on the garment was a stain of "fathe blood",—not the blood of Joseph, but the blood of a goat which the brethren had killed expressly for this purpose.

1652. Jacob saw that there had been some foul play, and he did not hesitate to say so. In effect he said: "Ah met i he tale you tell may be good enough for you, who invented it! But what about me, your aged father? What is there left inside for me now, with my beloved son gone? And yer what can't do but hold my heart in patience and immore God's assistance? I have faith, and I know that all lithat He does is for the best!"

1653. Then comes the caravan of unknown travellers—Midiantic or Arab merchants travelling togspt with merchandise, such as the balm of Gitead in Trans Jordania. In accordance with custom the caravan was preceded by advance parties to search out water and pitch, a camp near. They naturally went to the well and let down their bucket. To their surprise the well was dry, but a handsome youth got into the bucket and came out in it when they hauled up the bucket.

1654. The water carrier is surprised and taken aback, when his bucket, brings up, not water, but a youth of comely appearance, innecert like an angel, with a face as hight as the sun! What is he to make of it? Anyhow, to see him is a delight! And he shouts it out is as a piece of good news. Some Commentators think that "Bushia", the Arabic word for "Good news", is a proper noun, the name of the companion to whom he shouted.

1655, It was a caravan of merchants, and they (hink of everything in terms of the money to be made out of it! Here was an unknown, unclaimed youth, of surpassing beauty, with apparently a mind as refined as was his external beauty. If he could be sold in the opulent slave markets of Memphis or whatever was the capital of the Hyksos Dynasty then ruling in Egypt) see Appendix IV following S. viii, what a price he would fetch! They had indeed lighted upon a treasure! And they wanted to conceal him jest he was another's slave and had run away from his master who might come and claim him! The circumstances were peculiar and the merchants were cautious, Bibbs of exock-in-trade; capital; money: wealth; treasure.

1656. To different minds the situation appeared different. Joseph must have felt keenly the edge of his brethren's treason. His father Jacob was lost in the sorrow of the loss of his best-beloved son. The brethren were esulting in their plan of getting rid of one whom they hated. The merchants were gloating over their gains. But the horizon of all was limited God knew their deeds and their feelings and motives, and He was working out His own Plan. Neither the best of us nor the worst of us know whither our Destiny is leading us—how evil plots are defeated and goodness comes to its own in marriellows ways!

For a few dirhams wer counted out: In such low estimation Did they hold him!

But she burnt With a passion of earthly love for him. When Joseph refused to yield to her solicitations, There was trouble and scandal, and loseph Had to go to prison. Here were shown His greatness, and kindness, and wisdom. The King's cup-bearer came in disgrace To prison. Joseph instructed him and others. In the eternal Gospel of Unity. 1657, Dirham; from Greek, drashma, a small silver coin, which varied in weight and value at different times and in different States. On the whole, it may be taken to have been of a value varying from about 6d, or 8d, to 10d, or 12d, in sterling, or say a quarter-rupee to a half-rupee.

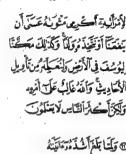

The keys of the prosperity of Egypt and the world.

1658. There was mutual deceit on both sides. The Brethren had evidently been watching to see what happened to Joseph; when they saw the merchants take him up and hide him, they came to claim his price as a run away slave, but dared not haggle over the price, lest their object, to get rid of him, should be defeated. The merchants were shrewed enough to doubt the claim in their own minds; but they dared not haggle lest they should lose a very valuable acquisition. And so the most precious of human lives in that age was sold into slavery for a few shillings !

1659. Joseph is now clear of his jealous brethren in the land of Canaan. The merchants take him to Egypt. In the city of Memphis (or whatever was the Egyptian capital then) he was exposed for sale by the merchants. The merchants had not miscalculated. There was a ready market for him; his handsome presence, his winning ways, his purity and innocence, his intelligence and integrity, combined with his courtesy and noble manliness, attracted all eyes to him. There was the keenest competition to purchase him, and in the highest Court circles Every competitor was outbid by a high court official, who is called in verse 30 below " the 'Azzz" (the Exalted in rank). Who was he? He was probably a cunuch. The highest court officials in ancient Egypt were cunuchs. So much was this the case that the term "court officer", and "eunuch" became practically synonymous (E. B., viii, 14). The 'Azız, we may assume, was a curuch, and childless. His wife, whom our tradition calls Zulaikha, was only nominally a wife. She was a virgin. Our poetical tradition says that she was a princess of the West who saw Joseph in a dream first and fell in love with him. As her dream told her that her beloved was the waztr of Egypt, her father arranged a match for her with the wastr, neither of the parties having seen the other. While, therefore, she nominally passed as the 'Aziz's wife she secretly cherished her romantic unknown love until Joseph appeared on the scene. It was natural that the 'Aztz should want to adopt Joseph as his son, and he asked Zulaikha to mother him and treat him as an honoured member of the household,

To his wife: "Make his stay (Among us) honourable: Maybe he will bring us Much good, or we shall Adopt him as a son."
Thus did We establish Joseph in the land, 1681
That We might teach him The interpretation of stories 1882 (And events). And God Hath full power and control Over His affairs; but most Among mankind know it not. 1881

22. When Joseph attained 1664 His full manhood, We gave him

1660. See last note. The Aziz's motive was perhaps worldly. Such a handsome, attractive, intelligent son would get him more honour, dignity, power and wealth. But Zulakija had other feelings. Joseph was the man of her dreams! She had yet to purify her earthly passion, and to learn the true meaning of pure, spiritual love, before she could be worthy of Jesph.

1661. How unertingly God's plan works! To teach Joseph windom and power, he had to be tested and proved in righteousness, and advanced and established in Egypt, so that Zulaikh should be tested and puraked of her dross, the women and men of Egypt should have a glimpse of God's Message, and the way prepared for Iscael and his posterity to proclaim God's truth to the world and to make possible the subsequent missions of Moses and Musafal.

1602. Ahadith might be stories, things imagined or related, things that happened, in life or in true dicams. To suppose that phenomenal events are the only reality is a mark of one-sided materialism. As Hamlet said to Horatio, "there are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio, than are dreamt of in your philosophy." External events have their own limited reality, but there are bigger realities behind them, that sometimes appear darkly in the visions of ordinary men, but more clearly in the visions of poets, seers, sages, and prophets. Joseph had to be trained in seeing the realities behind events and visions. He was hated by his brothers and sold by them into slavery; they were sending him into the land of Egypt, where he was to rule men. He loved his father dearly and was separated from him, and his mother had died early; but his affection was not blunted, but drawn to a keener edge when h. Genevolent work benefited millions in Egypt, and in the world. His own vision of stars, sun, and moon prostrating themselves before him, was no idle dream of a selfish fool, but the prefigurement of a power, which, used rightly, was to make his own honour an instrument of service to millions he had not seen, through men and women whose own power and dignity were sanctified through him. He was to understand the hidden meaning of what seemed futilities, blunderings, snares, evil plottings, love gone wrong, and power used tyrannically. He was to interpret truth to those who would never have reached it otherwise,

1663. Cf.: "There is a divinity that shapes our ends, rough-hew them as we will." Only, in Shakespeare, (Hamlet, V. 2), we have a vague and distant ideal, an irresolute striving, an unsuccessful attempt at getting beyond "this too, too solid flash" ! In Joseph we have the man of God, sure in, faith, above all carnal motives, and advancing the destiny of mankind with a conscious purpose, as the scroll of knowledge, wisdom, and power, unfolds itself before him by the grace of God, All-Good and All-Powerful.

166. When Joseph left Canaan, he was a young and immature lad of seventeen or eighteen, but his nature was innocent and good. Through the vicissitudes of his fortune in Egypt, he grew in knowledge, judgment, and power.

1665. Muḥrinān: those who do right, thuse who do good. Both ideas are implied. In following right conduct, you are necessarily doing good to yourself and to nibers, Joseph's resistance to Zulaikhh's carnal love advanced her herself to a glimpse of true spiritual love.

1666. Zulaikhl's true position is indicated in n. 1659 above. She loved much but her love was yet earthly, and was therefore unworthy of her and of Joseph. He had already been purified, but she was yet to be purified. Hence the conflict. However nominal fine tie to her hubband may have been, it was brought about by her own mistaken act, and she was bound to respect that tie and not to fout it, as her merely earthly passon impelled her to do. Not only in this was she guilty. The 'Arriv had treated Jóseph with honour: he was more his guest and son than his slave. In trying jo seduce Joseph in these circumstances, she was guilty of a crime against Joseph's own honour and dignity. And there was a third fault in her earthly love. True love blots Self out: it thinks more of the loved one than of the Self. Zulaikhly was peaking the satisfaction of her own selfish passion, and was in treason against Joseph's pure soul and his high destiny. It was inevitable that Joseph should repel her advances.

1667, Joseph's plea in rejecting Zulaikha's love is threefold: '(1) I owe a duty, and so do you, to your husband, the 'Ariz; (2) the kindness, courtesy, and honour, with which he has treated me entitle him to more than mere gratitude from me; (3) in any case, do you not see that you are harbouring a guilty passion, and that no good can come out of guilt? We must all obey laws, human and divine?

1668. She was blunded with passion, and his plee had no effect on her. He was human after all, and her passionate love and her beauty placed a great temptation in his path. But he had a sure refuge,—his faith in God. His spiritual eyes saw something that her eyes, blinded by passion, did not see. She thought no one saw when the doors were closed. He knew that God was there and everywhere. That made him strong, and proof against temptation.

1669. The credit of, our being saved from sin is due, not to our weak earthly nature, but to God. We can only try, like Juseph, to be true and sincere; God will purify us and save us from all that is wrong. Tempted but true, we rise above ourselves.

For he was one of Our servants, Sincere and purified.

﴿ وَإِنْ كَانَ قِيصُتُمْ قُدَّ مِنْ دُبُرِ

1670 With Zulaikha in her mad passion, the situation became intolerable, and Joseph made for the door. Zulaikha ran after him to detain him. She tugged at his garment to detain him. As he was retreating, she could only catch hold of the back of his shirt, and in the struggle she tore it. He was determined to open the door and leave the place, as it was useless to argue with her in her mad passion. When the door was opened, it so happened, that the 'Azir was not far off. We need not assume that he was spying, or had any suspicions either of Zulaikha or Joseph. In his narrow limited way he was a just man. We can imagine Zulaikha's consternation. One guilt leads to another. She had to resort to a lie, not only to justify hersely but also to have her revenge on the man who had scored her love. Slighted love (of the physical kind) made her ferocious, and she lost all sense of richt and wrone.

1671. Her lie and her accusation were plausible. Joseph was found with his dress disarranged. She wanted the inference to be drawn that he had assaulted her and she had resisted. For one in his position it was a dreadful crine. Should he not be consigned to a dungeon or at least scourged? Perhaps she hoped that in either case he would be more pliable to her designs in the future.

1672. Joseph bore himself with dignily. He was too great and noble to indulge in angry recrimination. But he had to tell the truth. And he did it with quiet simplicity, without argument or bitterness,—and not caring whether he was believed or not. The love game was here, not his, and it went too far in seeking to assault his person.

1673. In the fishing of things there was no eye-witness to what had happened between them, but as there was a scene and the whole household collected, wisdom came through one who was not immediately concerned. They say; it was a child. If so, it illustrates the truth that the most obvious things are not noticed by people who are excited, but are plain to simple people who remain calm, Wisdom comes often through babes and sucklings. Then is she the liar, And he is telling the truth! " 1074

  SECTION 4.
- 30. Æ/adies said in the City: "The wife of the (great) 'Aziz 1857 Is seeking to seduce her slave From his (true) self: Truly hath he inspired her With violent love: we see She is evidently going astray." 1881

فَكَ ذَتْ وَهُوَ مِنْ الصَّدِيقِ تَ هَ فَلَا ذَا فَيَسَهُ فَدَّ مِن دُبُرِ قَالَ اللَّهُ مِن كَذِي حُنَّ إِنَّ كَذَكُنَّ عَظِيرُ هِ مُسُنُ أَعْضَ عَنْ مَذَا تَطَلِيرُ وَ وَقَالَ يَسْوَةٌ فِي اللَّذِينَةِ امْرَانُ المَرْزِ مُرْودُ فَلَنَهَا عَنْ فَيْسِيدُ مَقَدْ شَفَقَهَا مُرْودُ فَلَنَهَا عَنْ فَيْسِيدُ مِنْ الْمَدَيْدِ مُرَّودُ فَلَنَهَا عَنْ فَيْسِيدُ مِنْ مَنْ الْمِيدِ

1674. If Joseph's shirt was torn at the back, ne must obviously have been retreating, and Zulaikha make been tugging from behind. No one could doubt who was the guilty party. Everybody saw it, and the 'Azz was convinced.

1675. When the real fact became clear to every one, the 'Aziz as head of the household had to decide what to do. His own position was difficult, and it was made ridiculous. He was a high officer of state, say Grand Chamberlain. He was a enunch. His dignity and rank were advanced by the so-tailed marriage with a high-born Princess. Was he going to proclaim to the world that Zulaighā' was running after a slave? He was probably fond of her, and he saw the impocence, loyalty, and sterling ment of Joseph. He must treat the whole affair as a woman's prank,—the madness of sex-love, and the tricks and snares connected with sex-love. He must take no further action but to rate his wife and do justice.

1676. As was only fair, he apologised to Joseph and begged him to give no further thought to the injury that had been done to him, first by the love-snare of one who was called his wife, secondly, by the uterly false charge made against him, and thirdly, by the scene, which must have been painful to a man of such spotless character as Joseph. That was not enough. He must ask Zulaikh humbly to beg Joseph's pardon for the wrong that she had done him. And he must further ask Zulaikh to consider her unbecoming conduct in itself, apart from any wrong done to Joseph. Probably Zulaikhà's thoughts about this must have been bitter. What did the 'Aztz know of the burning furnace of sex-hunger? "I' He iests at scass who never felt a wound!"

1677. 'Azzz: title of a nobleman or officer of Court, of high rank. Considering all the circumstances, the office of Grand Chamberlain or minister may be indicated. But "'Azīz" I think is a title, not an office. I have not translated the title but left it as it is. "Excellency" or "Highness" would have specialised modern associations which I want to avoid.

1678. The 'Aztr's just, wise, and discreet conduct would have closed the particular episode of Zulaikha's guilty conduct if only Mrs Grundy had left her alone and she had not foolishly thought of justifying her conduct to Mrs. Grundy. The 'Azir had reproved her, and he had the right and authority so to do. He also probably understood her. Joseph by his behaviour had upheld the highest standard both for himself and for her Perhaps, her lower love having been folied, she was trying to search within herself, and reach out after that higher love which does not indulge the Salf, but suffers all things in silence, in order that constancy might make her worthy of even the thought of Joseph. But the tongues of the throng about her must wag, and she had not been sufficiently schooled to despise their malice and their invective. They knew nothing of the secret history of her heart or the true position and teaching of Joseph. Sung by their malevolent motives, she tried to justify herself to them by a stratagem, and she fell another stage below the self-sacrifice of true spiritual love!

- 31. When she heard Of their malicious talk. She sent for them And prepared a banquet 16% For them; she gave Each of them a knife: And she said (to Ioseph). "Come out before them." When they saw him. Thy did extol him, And (in their amazement) Cut their hands : they said, "God preserve us! no mortal Is this! This is none other Than a noble angel!"
- 32. She said: "There before you Is the man about whom Ve did blame me l I did seek to seduce him from His (true) self but he did Firmly save himself guiltless! ... 1680 And now, if he doth not My bidding, he shall certainly Be cast into prison, And (what is more) Be of the company of the vilest I "

1679. When her reputation began to be pulled to pieces by Mrs. Grundy, with sundry exaggerations and distortions and malicious inuendos, Zulaikha invited all ladies in society to a grand banquet. We can imagine them reclining at ease after the manner of fashionable banquets. When dessert was reached and the talk flowed freely about the gossip and scandal which made their hostess interesting, they were just about to cut the fruit with their knives, when, behold! losenh was brought into their midst. Imagine the consternation which his beauty caused, and the havor it played with their hearts ! "Ah !", thought Zulaikha, "now is your hypocrisy self-exposed! What about your reproaches to me? You have yourselves so lost your self-control that you have cut your own fingers!"

1680, Zulaikhā's speech is subtle, and shows that any repentance or compunction she may have felt is blotted out by the collective crowd mentality into which she has deliberately invited herself to fall. Her speech falls into two parts, with a hiatus between, which I have marked by the punc tuation mark (...). In the first part there is a note of triumph, as much as to say, " Now you see mine was no vulgar passion! you are just as susceptible! you would have done the same thing! Finding encouragement from their passion and their fellow-feeling, she openly avows as a woman amongst women (by a sort of freemasonry) what she would have been ashamed to acknowledge to others before. She falls a step lower and boasts of it. A step lower still, and she sneers at Joseph's innocence, his firmness in saving himself guiltless! There is a pause. The tide of passion rises still higher, and the dreadful second part of her speech begins. It is a sort of joint consultation, though she speaks in monologue. The women all agree that no man has a right to resist their solicitations. Beauty spurned is the highest crime. And so now Zulaikha rises to the height of tragic guilt and threatens Joseph. She forgets all her finer feeling, her real love, and is overpowered by brute passion. After all, he is a slave and must obey his mistress! Or, there is prison, and the company of the vilest, instead of the caresses of beauty and fashion in high places!" Poor, deluded, fallen Zulaikhā! She sank lower than herself, in seeking the support of the crowd around her! What pain and suffering and sorrow can expiate the depth of this crime?

33. He said: "O my Lord!
The prison is more
To my liking than that

1681. "To which they invite me." Notice it is now "they" not "she". Where there was the snare of one woman before, it is now the collective snare of many women,—of womankind |

1662, Joseph's speech is characteristic. Like a true man of God, he takes refuge in God. He knows the weakness of human nature. He would not pit his own strength against the whole assault of evil. He will rely on God to turn evil away from him, and praise Hm alone for any success he achieves in his fight. It is only the ignorant who do not know man's weakness and God's strength!

1683. Joseph was saved from the wiles of the women, which would have degraded him. But me, his truth and character were completely vindicated in the eyes of all concerned by the avowal of Zulakpa.

1684. When Joseph's character was completely vindicated, there was no disgrace to him in being sent to prison after that. On the contrary the blame now would attach to those who for their own selfath motives restricted his liberty for a time. As a matter of fact various motives on the part of the many actors in this divine drama converged towards that end. For Joseph prison was better than the importunities of the women, and now, not one woman, but all society women were after him. To the women themselves it looked as if that was a lever which they could use to force his compliance. Vain, deluded creatures, to think that a man of God could be forced from the path of rectitude by threats or bribes. To the 'Aztz it appeared as 11 it might be in Zulaighā's best interests that he should disappear from her view in prison. The decisive factor was the view of the men generally, who were alarmed at the consternation he had caused among the women. They knew that Joseph was righteous: they had seen the Signs of God in his wonderful personality and his calm and confident fortitude. But, it was argued, it was better that one man (even if righteous) should suffer in prison rather than that many should suffer from the extraordnery disturbance be was unwittingly causing in their social life. Not for the first nor for the last time did the righteous suffer plausibly for the guilt of the guilty. And so Joseph went to prison—for a time.

1685. New opens another chapter in Joseph's life. The Plán of God develops. The wicked might plot; the weak might be swayed by specious arguments: but everything is used by the Universal Plan for its own beneficent purposes. Joseph must get into touch with the Pharach, in order to work out the salvation of Egypt, and yet it must be through no obligation to smaller-men. And he must diffuse his personality and teach the truth to men of all sorts in prison.

1686. Two men came to the prison about the same time as Joseph. They were both apparently officers of the king (the Pharaoh), who had incurred his wrath. One was a cup-bearer (or butler or chief steward) whose duty was to prepare the king's wices and drinks. The other was the king's baker, whose duty was to prepare the king's bread. They were both in disgrace. The former dreamed that he was again carrying on his duties and pressing wine: the latter that he was carrying bread, but it did not reach his master, for the birds ate of it.

1687, Both these men saw the Signs of God about Joseph. They felt not only that he had w...dom, but hat he was kind and benevolent, and would give of his wisdom even to strangers like themselves. They therefore told him their dreams and asked him to interpret them.

1688. The dream of one foreboded good to him, and of the other, evil to him. It was good that each should prepare for his fale. But Joseph's mission was far higher than that of merely foretelling events. He must teach the truth of God and shefaith in the Hereafter to both men. He does that first before he lalks of the events of their phenomenal life. And yet he does its to tenderly. He does not tantatise them. In effect he says, "You shall learn everything before our next meal, but let me first teach you Faith;"

1689. Joseph does not preach a pompous sermon, or claim any credit to himself for placing himself at their service. He is just doing his duty, and the highest good he can do to them is to teach them Faith. Abandoned the ways
Of a people that believe not
In God and that (even)
Deny the Hereafter. 1800

- 38. "And I follow the ways ""

  Isaac, and Jacob; and never Could we attribute any partners
  Whatever to God: that (comes)
  Of the grace of God to us
  And to mankind; yet
  Most men are not grateful
- 39. "O my two companions." Solutions of the prison! (I ask you): Are many lords differing Among themselves better, Or the One God, Supreme and Irresistible?
- 40. "If not Him, ye worship nothing But names which ye have named,—1003

Ye and your fathers,—
For which God hath sent down
No authority: the Command
Is for none but God: He

1690. These men were Egyptians, perhaps steeped in materialism, idolatry, and polythelam. He must teach them the Gospel of Unity. And he does it simply, by appealing to his own experience, 'I have found the Lord good: in prosperity and adversity? I have been supported by Faith: in life no man can live by error or evil: perhaps one of you has done some wrong for which you find yourself here: perhaps one of you is innocent: in either case, will you not accept. Faith and live for ever?'

1691. Again the same note of personal modesty. You may think 1 am as young as you, or younger. Yes, but I have the heritage of great men renowned for wisdom and truth, such as Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Sutely what they knew is worthy of respect. Never did they swerve a hair's breadth from the Gospel of Unity. It is not that we boast. It was God's grace that taught us and God's grace is teaching all mankind. But men show their ingratitude by inventing other so-called gods."

1692. Note the personal touch again. 'Are we not also companions in mislortune?' And may I not speak to you'n eterms of perfect equality,—as one prisoner to another?' Well then, do you really think a conflict of heterogeneous gods is better than the One True God, Whose power is suppreme and irresistible?'

1693, 'If you name other gods, they are nothing but your inventions,—names which you and your fathers put forward without any reality behind them. Who gave you authority to do any such thing? The only reality is God. Authority can come from Hm alone. It is only for Him to command. And He has distinctly commanded you to worship none other than Him. That is the only religion that is right,—that has stood and will stand and endure for ever. He has revealed it at all times by His Messengers and by His Signs. If men fail to understand, it is their own tault.

Hath commanded that ye worship None but Him: that is The right religion, but Most men understand not...

(So) hath been decreed
That matter whereof

42. And of the two, To that one whom he considered About to be saved, he said: "Mention me to thy lord," 1607 1694. Having fulfilled his great duty, that touching the things of the spirit, Joseph now passes on, and comes to the things in which they were immediately interested, - the questions which they had asked him about their dreams and what they prognositeated of their immediate future. Notice how Joseph again puts himself into sympathy with them by repeating the phrase of constructors, "my two companions of the prisons". For one he has good news, and for the other, had news. He does not mince matters or waste words. He just harely tells the truth, hoping that the higher spiritual truths of which he has spoken will appear in their eyes, too, as of more importance than mere earthly triumphs or disasters—(in Kipling's words) "both impostors all the same."

1695. The cup-bearer had perhaps been proved innocent of the crime which had been charged against him, and was to be restored to the lavour of the Pharaoh. He was to carry the rup and be the king's confdante again. How much more good he could do now, after the spiritual influence he had imbibed from Joseph the man of God! He was more fortunate in having had Joseph's company than in being restored to his intimate position with the king! Yet he was not a perfect man, as we shall see presently.

1696 For the baker, alas I he had had news, and he tells it directly without fantalising him. Perhaps he had been found guilty—of some act of embezelement or of joining in some palace intrigue, and he wasto die a malefactor's death on the cross, followed by exposure to birds of the nit—vultures pecking away at his eyes and cheeks, and all that had been his face and head! Poor man! If he was guilty, looseph had raught him rependance, and we should like to think that he lost in this life but gained in the next. If he was innocent, the cruel death did not affect him. Joseph had shown him a bigher and more lasting hope in the Hereaftee.

1697. Joseph never mentioned himself in interpreting the detam, nor ever thought of himself in the detam nor ever thought of himself in true, and he was being released on being restored to favour, that we can imagine him taking an affectionate leave of Joseph, and even asking him in his elation if he could do anything for Joseph alone one dof earthly favours,—least of all, from kings or their favouristes. The drivine grace was enough for him. But he had great work to do, which he could not do in prison—work for Egypt and her king, and the world at large. If the cup-bearer could mention him to the king, not by way of recommendation (sp@rish), but because the king's own justice was being violated in keeping an innocent man in prison, perhaps that might lielp to advance the cause of the king and of Egypt. And so he said, "Reinibin me to Pharaoh."

But Satan made him forget 1698 To mention him to his lord: And (Joseph) lingered in prison A few (more) years. 1699

C. 111. The king of Egypt saw a vision
(zii. 43-68) Which none of his grandees could explain.

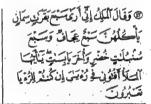

The cup-bearer referred to Joseph,
Who was sent for by the king. But Joseph
Insisted that the voice of scandal,
Which had pointed to him, should be declared
In public to be false. After Zulaikha
Had paid a splendid ungrudging tribute
To his truth and righteousness, he came,
And was invested with supreme power
By the king. In times of plenty he organised Great reserves to meet the needs
Of famine. When wide-spread famine at last Prevailed, his brothers came from Canaan
In search of corn. He treated them kindly
And got them to bring his youngest brother
Benjamin: but they knew not that he was Joseph.

566

SECTION 6.

43. Fighe king (of Egypt) said: 1000 "1 do see (in a vision)
Seven fat kine, whom seven
Lean ones devour,—and seven
Green ears of corn, and seven

Withered. O ye chiefs! Expound to me my vision If it be that ye can Interpret visions."

1698. The eternal Plan does not put God's men under obligations to men commanding mere worldly favour or earthly power. If they are given a chance, the obligation is on the worldly men, however highly placed. In this case, the poor cup-bearer was but human. When he was in the midst of the Court, he forgot the poor fellow prisoner languishing in prison. In this he yielded to the lower part of his nature, which is guided by Satan, the personification of evil,—a real force in our lives it we but knew it.

(others)

1699. A few (more) years: bids in Arabic aignifies a small indefinite number, say up to 3, 5, 7, or 9 years.

1700. The Pharaoh is holding a Council. His confidential adviser the cup-heater is present. The - Pharaoh relates his double dream.—of seven fat kine being devoured by seven fean ones, and of seven fine full green ears of cont (presumpably being devoured) by seven drywithlered ears.

- 44. They said: "A confused medley
  Of dreams: and we are not
  Skilled in the interpretation
  Of dreams." 1701
- 45. But the man who had been Released, one of the two (Who had been in prison) And who now bethought him After (so long) a space of time, Said: "I will tell you The truth of its interpretation: Send ve me (therefor)."
- 46. "O Joseph!" (he said).
  "O man of truth! Expound
  To us (the dream)
  Of seven fat kine
  Whom seven lean ones
  Devour, and of seven
  Green ears of corn
  And (seven) others withered:
  That I may return
  To the people, and that
  They may understand." "100
- 47. (Joseph) said: "For seven years Shall ye diligently sow

٥ قَالُوَّا أَشْفَاتُ آخَلُوْ وَمَا غَنْ بِيَاْ وِيلِ الْأَعْلَيْمِ بِعَلِيدَ ۞ وَقَالَاَ أَذِي مَجَالِنَهُ مَا وَادِّكَرَ مَشْدَ أَمْرُوْ آنَ الْيَعْضُدِينَ أَوْمِلِكِهِ كَارْسِلُونِ

® قَالَ تَزْدَعُونَ سَبْعَ سِنِينَ

1701. No one in the Council apparently wanted to take the responsibility either of interpreting the dream, or of carrying out any measures consequent on the interpretation.

1702. At length the cup-bearer's conscience was awakened. He thought of Joseph. He (Joseph) was a truthful man, and the cup-bearer knew by personal experience how skilful he was in the interpretation of dreams. Perhaps he could get him released at this juncture by getting him to interpret the king's dream. If he had been frank, straight, and direct, he would have mentioned Joseph at once, and presented him to Pharanob. But he had worldly subtlety. He wanted some credit for himself, at the same time that he fulfilled an oid obligation. His petty conscience would be satisfied if he got Joseph's release, but meanwhile he wanted to see how much attention he could draw to himself in the court. So he just asked permission to withdraw in order to find the interpretation. He went straight to the prison, and addressed himself to Joseph, as in the following verse.

1703. The speech must have been longer, to explain the circumstances. We are just given the policies From Joseph he cenceals nothing. He knows that Joseph knows more than himself. He tells Joseph that if the got the meaning, he would go and tell the Councif, if would be impertinent for the cup-bearer to hold out to Joseph, the man of God, the bribe of the hope of his release. Notice how blandly he avoids referring to his own lapse in having forgotten. Joseph so long, and how the magnanimous Joseph has not a word of reproach, but gets straight on with the interpretation.

As is your wont: And the harvests that ve read Ye shall leave them in the ear ---Except a little, of which Ve shall eat.

48. " Then will come After that (period) Seven dreadful (years). Which will devour What we shall have laid by In advance for them .-(All) except a little atos Which ve shall have (Specially) guarded.

49, " Then will come After that (period) a year In which the people will have Abundant water, and in which They will press (wine and oil)."1706

1704 Joseph not only shows what will happen, but, unasked, suggests the measures to be taken for dealing with the calamity when it comes. There will be seven years of abundant barvest. With diligent cultivation they should get bumper crops. Of them they should take a little for their sustenance and store the rest in the ear, the better to preserve it from the pests that attack corn-heaps when they have passed through the threshing floor.

1705. There will follow seven years of dreadful famine, which will devour all the stores which they will have laid by in the good years. They must be careful, even during the famine, not to consume all the grain; they must by special arrangement save a little for seed, lest they should be helpless even when the Nile brought down abundant waters from the rains at its sources.

1706 This is a symbol of a very abundant year, following the seven years of drought. The Nile must have brought abundant fertilising waters and silt from its upper reaches, and there was probably some rain also in Lower Egypt. The vine and the olive trees, which must have suffered in the drought, now revived, and yielded their juice and their oil; among the annuals, also, the oil seeds, such as linseed, sesamon, and the castor oil plant, must have been grown, as there was irrigated land and to spare from the abundant grain crops. And the people's spirits revived, to enjoy the finer products of the earth, when their absolute necessities had been more than met in their grain crops,

SECTION 7.

50. So the king said:

"Bring ye him unto me," 1000
But when the messenger
Came to him, (Joseph) said:

"Go thou back to thy lord,
And ask him, 'What is
The state of mind
Of the ladies
Who cut their hands'? 1001
For my Lord is Certainly well aware
Of their snare." 1000

۞ وَقَالَ أَلْسَالِ الْفَنُونِ بِيَّرِهُ فَلَسَاجَاءُ وُ ٱلرَّسُولُ قَالَ أَضِعُ إِلَى رَبِكَ فَسَطَهُ مَا الْمَالْشِنَوْ وَالَّيْ فَطَلَعَنَ أَبْدِيَهُ إِنْ رَبِيْ يِحْصَيْدُونِ عَلِيْهُ

51. (The king) said (to the ladies):

"What was your affair

When ye did seek to seduce
Joseph from his (true) self?"

The ladies said: "God
Preserve us! no evil

۞ قَالُمَاخُطُبُكُنَّ إِذْ رَاوَدُثُنَّ بُوسُفَعَن نَفْسِةٍ عُلْنَ حَسْنَ لِيَومَا عِلنَا عَلِيَ وَمِن شَوْةً

1707. The cup bearer must have reported Joseph's interpretation to the king, and the king naturally wanted to see Joseph himself. He sent a messenger to fetch him.

1708. The king's messenger must have expected that a prisoner would be only too overjoyed at the summons of the king. But Joseph, sure of himself, wanted some assurance that the would be safe (rom the sort of nagging and persecution to which he had been subjected by the ladies. We saw in verie 33 above that he preferred proson to their solicitations. He must therefore know what was in the mind of the women now. Note how discreetly he omits any particular mention of Zulia kila, who after all had been kind to him, and whose unschooled love had been tested all these years and been nearly purished of its grosser elements by now. But kila, Crundy, who understood (and perhaps practized for herself) only the grosser side of her passion, must be put in her place, if Joseph was to have a chance of doing the great work for which he was marked out.

1709. If the king ("Ithy lord") did not know of all the snares which had been laid for Joseph by the ladies, God ("my Lord") knew all their secret motives and plots.

1710, Joseph's message was conveyed by the messenger to the king, who sent for the ladies concerned. Among them came Zulaikhā. "What was this affair?" said the king; "tell me the whole truth."

Know we against him!"
Said the 'Azīz's wife:
"Now is the truth manifest
(To all): it was I
Who sought to seduce him
From his (true) self:
He is indeed of those Who are (ever) true (and virtuous)."

52. "This (say I), in order that He may know that I
Have never been false
To him in his absence,
And that God will never

12. Guide the snare of the false ones."

قالينا مُرَاكِنا لَعَرْبِهِ النَّنَّ مَصْعَصَ الْحَقَّ إِنَّا رَوَدَنُهُ عِنْ نَشْدِهِ عَانَّهُ إِنَّ الْصَلْدِ فِينَ ﴿ ذَٰ اِلْكِلِيْمُ لَمَ أَنِ

1711. Zulaikhā stood by, while the other ladies answered. Their answer was the answer of Mrs. Grundy, grudgingly acknowledging the truth of loseph's innocence and high principles, but holding a discreet silence about Mrs. Grundy's own part in egging on poor Zulaikha to sin, wrongdoing, and revenge. When they had done, she began. She did not mince matters. She acknowledged her own guilt, freely and frankly. This was no time for her even to refer to other ladies,their jealousy, their gross-mindedness, their encouragement of all that was frail or evil in herself. These things she ignored. But to her awakened spiritual consciousness it was a triumph that Joseph, whom she adored, was true in every sense, in word and deed, and that that truth should be proclaimed in open Court before all, as was indeed already known to all concerned when she had taken the blame on herself before the assembly of ladies, and her own spirit had not yet been emancipated, What had happened to her since? She had learnt much in sorrow, pain, and humiliation. She had learnt the vanity of carnal love. But Joseph, true of heart, calm in every turn of fortune, had taught her to question herself whether, in spite of all her sin, she could not yet be worthy of him. Perhaps her husband was dead, and she a widow. But she must see whether she could understand love in the sense in which Joseph would have her understand st-that pure surrender of self, which has no earthy stain to it!

1712. I construe verses 52 and 53 to be a continuation of Zulaikha's speech and have translated accordingly. There is both good reason and authority (e.g. lbn Kathri for this. But the majority of Commentators construe verses 52.53 to be spoken by Joseph, in which case they would mean that Joseph was referring to his fidelity to the 'Aziz, that he had never taken advantage of his absence to play false with his wife, although the (Joseph) was human and liable to err. In my view Zulaikha, while fully reprobating her own guilty conduct, claims that she has at least been constant, and that she hopes for mercy, forgiveness, and the capacity to understand at last what true loves its Whatever false charge she made, she made it in a moment of passion and to his face, [never in cold blood, or behind his back.

Guide the sware of the false ones, i.e., allow such snare to attain its goal.

53. "Nor do I absolve my own self (Of blame): the (human) soul Is certainly prone to evil, """." A Unless my Lord do bestow His Mercy: but surely My Lord-is Oft-Forgiving, Most Merciful." ""

54. So the king said:
"Bring him unto me; ma!
I will take him specially
To serve about my own person."
Therefore when he had spoken
To him, he said:
"Be assured this day,
Thou art, before our own Presence,
With rank firmly established,
And fidelity fully proved!"

55. (Joseph) said: "Set me Over the store-houses 1716 Of the land: I will Indeed guard them, ۞ قَالَ اَجْسَالِي عَلَ خَزَآ بِنِ ٱلْأَرْضِ لِيِّ حَفِيْظُ

1712-A. Ammāra: prone, impelling, headstrong, passionate. See n. 5810 to lxxv. 2.

1713. See n. 1712. I construe this verse to be a continuation of Zulaigha's speech. It is more appropriate to her than to Joseph. As I understand it, Zulaigha has at last come to have a realisation of all that had been wrong in her conduct and a glimmering of the true meaning of spiritual love, which has something divine in it, and which cannot be attained except by the outpouring bf all our soul to God.

.1714. Joseph had not yet appeared before the king. The king's order in the same terms in verse 30 shore had led to a message from Joseph and the subsequent public, proceedings with the laddes, Now that Joseph's innocence, wisdom, truth, and trustworthines had been proved, and confirmed by Zolaighā splentid tribute, and Joseph's own manly bearing before the king, the king was much impressed, and took him specially to serve about his own person as his trusty and comfidential Wazir. If, as is probable, the 'Azir had by this time died (for he is never mentioned again) Joseph succeeded to his office, and he is addressed as 'Aziz in verse? Beblow. But Joseph got more than his rank and powers, as specially selected to carry out a great emergency policy to meet the very difficult times of depression that were forestold. He was given plenary powers and the fullest confidence that a king could give to his most trusted and best-proved Wazir or Prime Minister, with special access to his Person, like a Grand Chamberlain.

1715. Who was this Pharaoh, and what approximate date could we assign to him? He was probably a king of the Hyksos Dynasty, somewhere between the 19th and the 17th century B.C. See Appendix IV. on Egyptian Chronology and Israel (printed after S. vii).

1716. Joseph had been given plenary authority by the king. He could have enjoyed his dignity, crawn his emoluments, but the hard and perhaps unopopular work on the shoulders of others, and kept to himself the glitter and the kudos. But that was not his way, nor can it indeed be the way of any one who wants to do real service. He undertook the hardest and most unopopular task himself. Such a task was that of organising reserves in times of plenty, against the lean years to come. He deliberately asked to be put in charge of the granaries and store-houses, and the drudgery of establishing them and guarding them, for the simple reason that he understood that need better than any one else, and was prepared to take upon himself rather than throw on to another the obloquy of restricting supplies in times of plenty.

As one that knows (Their importance)."

- 56. Thus did we give Established power to Joseph In the land, to take possession 1717 Therein as, when, or where He pleased. We bestow Of Our mercy on whom We please, and We suffer not. To be lost, the reward Of those who do good.
- 57. But verily the reward Of the Hereafter Is the best, for those Who believe, and are constant In righteousness. 1718

SECTION 8.

RF hen came loseph's

They entered his presence, And he knew them. But they knew him not.

1717. What a wonderful example of the working of divine Providence! The boy whom his jealous brothers got rid of by selling him into slavery for a miserable price becomes the most trusted dignitary in a foreign land, chief minister in one of the greatest empires of the world of that day. And this not for himself only, but for his family, for the world at large, and for that noble example of righteousness and strenuous service, which he was to set for all time. According to tradition, loseph's age was barely 30 at that time!

As, when, or where he pleased: haithu refers to manner, time, or place. 'He had a Dictator's powers, but as his fidelity was fully proved (xii. 53) these powers were for service rather than for self.

1718. To the righteous, whatever rewards (if any) that come in this world are welcome for the opportunities of service which they open out. But the true and best reward is in the Hereafter.

1719. Years pass: the times of prosperity go by : famine holds the land in its grip : and it extends to neighbouring countries. Joseph's preparations are complete. His reserves are ample to meet the calamity. Not only does Egypt bless him, but neighbouring countries send to Egypt to purchase corn. All are received with hospitality, and corn is sold to them according to judicious measure.

Now there has been one sorrow gnawing at Joseph's heart. His poor father Jacob! How he must have wept, as indeed he did, at the loss of his beloved Joseph! And Joseph's little brother Benjamin, born of the same mother as himself; would the other ten brothers, not by the same mother, have any affection for him, or would they treat him, as they treated Joseph? How would the whole family be in these hard times? A sort of answer came when the ten selfish brothers, driven by famine, came from Canaan to buy corn. Joseph, though so great a man, kept the details of the famine department in his own hands: otherwise there might have been waste. But to the public he was a mighty Egyptian administrator, probably in Egyptian dress, and with all the paraphernalia of his rank about him. When his brothers came, he knew them, but they did not know he was Joseph. In their thoughts Joseph was probably some menial slave in a remote household, perhaps already starved to death in these hard times!

59. And when he had furnished
Them forth with provisions (Suitable) for them, he said:
"Bring unto me a brother
Ye have, of the same father
As yourselves, (but a different mother):
See we not that I have out

See ye not that I pay out Full measure, and that I Do provide the best hospitality? Page 1

1720. Joseph treated his brothers liberally. Perhaps he condescended to enter into conversation with these strangers, and enquired about their family. The ten brothers had come. Had they left a father behind them? What sort of a person was he? Very aged? Well, of course he could not come. Had they any other brothers? Doubtless the ten brothers and nothing about their lost Joseph, or told some lie about him. But perhaps their host's kindly insistence brought Benjamin into the conversation. How old was he? Why had they not brought him? Would they bring him next time? Indeed they must, or they would get no more corn, and he—the great Egyptian Wazir—would not even see them.

1721. The brothers said: "Certainly, we shall try to beg him of our father, and bring him a way with us: we shall cratainly comply with your desire." In reality they probably loved Benjamin no more than they loved Joseph. But they must get food when the present supply was schausted, and they must humour the great Egyptian Wazir. Note that they do not call Jacob "our father" with instance in the present supply was schausted, and they must humour the great Egyptian Wazir. Note that they do not call Jacob "our father" how 'Inttle they loved their aged father, whom they identified with Joseph and Benjamin! Their trial and their instruction in their duties is now being undertaken by Joseph.

1723. It was most important for Joseph's plan that they should come back. If they came back at all, they could not come without Benjamin after what he had told them. As an additional incentive to their coming back, he returns the price of the grain in such a way that they should find it in their saddle-bags when they reach home.

1726. On their return they no doubt told Jacob all that had transpired. But to beg Benjamin of him was no easy matter, as Jacob did not trust them and had no cause to trust them after their treatment of Joseph. So they use the argument of urgent necessity for all it is worked.

1725, I construe Jacob's answer to be a flat refusal to let Benjamin go with them. It would be like the former occasion when he trusted Joseph with them and they lost him. Did they talk of taking care of him? The only protection that he trusted was that of God. He at least showed mercy to old and young alike. Did man show such mercy? Witness his sad old age and his lost little Joseph I Would they bring down "his grey hairs with sorrow to the grave?"

1726. The ten brothers did not take their father's refusal as final. They opened their saddle-bags, and found that the price they had paid for their provisions had been returned to them. They had got the grain free! What more could they desire? The spell which Joseph had woven now worked. If they only want back, this kind Wazir would give more grain if they pleased him. And the only way to please him was to take back their younger brother with them. It would cost them nothing. Judging by past experience they would get a whole camel's load of grain now. And so they stated their case to the aged father.

(More) food for our family; We shall take care of our brother; And add (at the same time) A full camel's load (of grain To our provisions). This is but a small quantity.<sup>1981</sup>

66. (Jacob) said: "Never will I Send him with you until Ye swear a solemn oath to me, In God's name, that ye Will be sure to bring him back To me unless ye are yourselves Hemmed in (and made

And when they had sworn
Their solemn oath,
He said: "Over all

67. Further he said:

1727. Two meanings are possible,—either or perhaps both. 'What we have brought now is nothing compared to what we shall get if we humour the whim of the Egyptian Wazir. And, moreove., Egypt seems to have plenty of grain stored up. What is a camel-load to her Wazir to give away?'

1728. The appeal to the family's needs in the time of famine at length made Jacob relent, but he exacted a solemn promise from the brothers, under the most religious sanctions, that they would bring Benjamin back to him. nolless they were themselves prevented, as the Insurance Policies say, "by an act of God," so that they became really powerless. To that promise Jacob called God to witness.

1729. This is more than a formula. God is invoked as present and witnessing the bargain, and to Him both parties make over the affair to arrange and fulfil.

1120. The Commentators refer to a Jewish or Eastern custom or superstition which forbade members of a numerous family to go together in a mass for fear of "the evil eye". But apart from East or West, or custom or superstition, it would be ridiculous for any large family of ton or fewer to parade together in a procession among strangers. But there was even a better reason in this particular case, which made Jacob's advice sound, and Jacob's was, as stated in the next verse, a man of knowledge and experience. Here were eleven strangers dressed alikn, in a dress not of the country, talking a strange language, coming in a time of stress, on an errand for which they had no credentials. Would they not be attract undue attention and suspicion if they went together? Would they not be taken for spies?——or for men bent on some misschief, theft, or organised crime? Such a suspicion is referred to in verse 13 below. By entering separately they would attract little attention, Jacob very wisely tells them to take all human precautions. But like a man of God he warns them that human precautions would be no good if they neglect or run counter to far weightier matters—God's Will and Law. Above all, they must try to understand and obey this, and their trust should be on God rather than on human usages, institutions, or precautions, however good and reasonable these might be

I can profit you aught Against God (with my advice): None can command except God: On-Him do I put my trust: And let all that trust Put their trust on Him."

68. And when they entered

C. 112.—When the brothers went back without Benjamin, (xii. 69-93.) Jacob was overwhelmed with grief, but he bore His affliction with patience and faith in God. He refused to be comforted and sent his sons back, To Egypt. At last Joseph revealed himself, Forgave them, and sent his shirt by them To Jacob, to tell him the good news That Joseph lived and did great work In Egypt, and had sent for his whole family To come and rejoice and live in the land Of Egypt, and be a blessing to all.

1731. See the last verse and n. 1730. Though they scrupulously observed their father's injunctions to the letter, their hearts were not yet pure, and they got into trouble, as the later story will show: They had the hardshood to cast aspersions on Joseph, not knowing that they were in Joseph's power. And Joseph took a noble revenge by planning a reunion of the whole family and shaming the ten brothers into repentance. He was the instrument for the fulfilment of God's Plan.

1732. It is a necessity of a Prophet's soul that he should speak out and teach all that he knows, to the worthy and unworthy alike. This Jacob did to his unworthy sons, as well as to his worthy sons whom he loved best. It was not for him as a Prophet to guarantee any results, In this case he could not save his sons from getting into trouble merely because they followed the letter of his advice in a small matter. Apply this to the teaching of a greater than Jacob. Men who literally observe some small injunctions of the Holy Prophet Muhammad and neglect the greater principles which he taught cannot blame him for their troubles and difficulties. If they examined the matter, they would find that they brought the troubles on themselves.

1733. The men of God are full of knowledge,—not as men, but as taught by the grace of God. For men, as such, are (as Carlyle said) mostly fools,—devoid of knowledge and understanding.

1734. The ten brothers, with Benjamin, arrived in Egypt, and waited on the great Wazir. Joseph again received them hospitably, even more so than before, as they had complied with his request to bring Benjamin. No doubt many shrewd and probing questions were asked by Joseph, and no doubt it was clear that Benjamin was one apart from the other ten. Baighawi fills up the picture of the great feast for us. The guests were seated two by two. Benjamin was the odd one, and Joseph courteously took him to his own table.

1735. After the feast the question of lodgings arose. They were to be accommodated two by two. Again Benjamin was the odd one. What more natural than that the Wast should take him to himself! He thus got a chance of privacy with him. He disclosed his identity to him, charging him to keep it a secret, and to take no notice of any strange doings that might occur. He must have learnt from Benjamin about his father and about the inner doings of the family. He must get them all together into Egypt under his own eye. He had a plan, and he proceeded to put it into execution.

1736. The past tense of Kā+li, combined with the aorist of Ya'maliin, signifies that the Merence is to their brother's doings, past, present, and future. Benjamin was not to mind what wrongs ency had done in the past, or how they behaved in the present or the immediate future. Joseph had a olan that required Benjamin's silence in strange circumstances.

1732, Joseph's plan was to play a practical joke on them, which would achieve two objects, Immediately it would put them into some constemation, but nothing comparable to what he had suffered at their hands. When the plan was unravelled, it would make them thoroughly sahamed of themselves, and dramatically bring home their guilt to them. Secondly, it would give him an excuse to detain Benjamin and bring their aged father into Egypt. He contrived that a valuable drinking cup should be concealed in Benjamin's saddle-bag. When it was found after an ostentatious search, he would detain the supposed culpril, and attain his object, as the story relates forther on. For him who produces it, Is (the reward of) A camel load; I Will be bound by it."

74. (The Egyptians) said: "What then Shall be the penalty of this, If ye are (proved) to have

50 he 116 began (the search)
 With their baggage,

وَلِنَجَآهَ بِهِ جَلْ بَعِيرٍ وَأَنَّا بِهِ مُزَعِبَدُ

﴿ فَالْوَاجَـزَ ۚ أَوْمُرَىٰ وَجِدَ فَرَحَـٰ لِهِ؞ فَهُوَجَزَّ وَأَرْكَذَٰ لِكَ فَيْنِهِ ٱلظَّالِمِينِ

۞ فَبِدَأً بِأَوْعَيَيْهِيدُ

1738. As strangers in a strange land, they were liable to be suspected as spies or men who meditated some unlawful design, or some crime, such as thett, which would be common in a season of scarcity. The brothers protested against the absurdity of such a suspicion after they had been entertained so royally by the Wastr.

1739. "That might be all very well," said the Egyptians, "but what if it is found by a search that you have in fact abused the Wazir's hospitality by stealing a valuable cup?"

1740. We must try to picture to ourselves the mentality of the ten. They unidentood each other perfectly, in their sins as well as in other things. For themselves, the search held out no fears, besides they had had no opportunity of stealing. But what of that young fellow Benjamin? They were ready to believe anything against him, the more so as the Wazir's partiality for him had lent a keen edge to their jealousy. Judging by their own standards, they would not be surprised if he had stolen, seeing that he had had such opportunities—sitting at the High Table and staying with the Wazir. They felt very self-righteous at the same time that they indulged in the luxury of accusing in their thoughts the most unocent of men! Supposing he had stolen, here would be a fine opportunity of getting rid of him. What about their solemnoath to their father? Oh! that was covered by the exception. He had done for himself. They had done all they could to protect him, but they were powerless. The old man could come and see for himself.

1741. This was their family custom. It was of course long anterior to the Mosaic Law, which laid down full restitution for theft, and if the culprit had nothing, he was to be sold for his theft (Exod.xxii.3). But here the crime was more than theft. It was theft, lying, and the grossest abuse of confidence and hospitality. While the ten felt a secret satisfaction in suggesting the penalty, they were unconsciously carrying out Joseph's plan. Thus the vilest motives often help in carrying out the most beneficent plans.

1742. The pronoun "the" can only refer to Joseph. He may have been present all the time, or he may just have come up, as the supposed theft of the king's own cup (xii. 72 above) was a very serious and important affair, and the investigation required his personal supervision. All that his officers did by his orders was his own act. As the lawyers say: Que facit per allum, facil per as (wheever does anything through another, does it himself)

1743. The Arabic word here used is w'an, plural as 'ye, which includes bags, lockers, boxes, or any receptacles in which things are stored. Notice the appropriateness of the words used. The cup was concealed in a saddle-bag (rfs)!, verse 70 above. When it comes to searching, they must search all the baggage of every description if the search was to be convincing and effective.

1744. It refers to the drinking cup, the siquyst, which is a feminine noun: hence the feminine pronoun (AS) in Arabic.

1745. Let no one suppose that it was a vulgar or wicked trick, such as we sometimes hear of in police courts, when property is planted on innocent men to get them into trouble. On the contrary it was a device or stratagem whose purpose was to show up wickedness in its true colours, to give the a chance of repentance, to bring about forgiveness and reconciliation, to give solace to the aged father who had suffered so much, and above all, to further that larger plan for the instruction of the world, which is unfolded in Israel's religious history. Joseph was a man of God, but he could not have carried out this plan or taken the first step, of detaining his brother, except with the will and permission of God, Whose Plan is universal and for all His creatures.

1746. If we examine this world's affairs, there are all sorts of plans, and all degrees of folly and wisdom. The wicked ones plan; the foolish ones plan; the simple ones plan; then there are men who think themselves wise and are perhaps thought to be wise, but who are foolish, and they have their plans; and there are degrees of real and beneficent wisdom among men. God, the Universal Planner, is above all. Anything good in our wisdom is but a reflection of His wisdom, and His wisdom can even turn folly and wickedeness to good 1747. The hatred of the Ten for Joseph and Benjamin comes out again. They are not only ready to believe evil of Benjamin, but they carry their thoughts back to Joseph and call him a thief as well. They had nijured Joseph; and by a faise charge of this kind they salve their conscience. Little did they suspect that Joseph was before them under another guise, and their fatsehood and treachery, would soon be exposed.

1748. There were many secrets: (1) that he was Joseph himself; (2) that his brother Benjamin knew him; (3) that there was no guilt in Benjamin, but the whole practical joke was in furtherance of a great plan (see n. 1745 above); (4) that they were giving themselves away, and were unconsciously facilitating the plan, though their motives were not above-board.

He (simply) said (to himself): "Ye are the worse situated: 1749 And God knoweth best The truth of what ye assert!"

1749. "Ah!" thought Joseph, "you think that Be...jamin is safely out of the way, and that Joseph was got rid of long since! Would you he surprised to know that you have given yourselves away, that you are now in the power of Joseph, and that Joseph is the very instrument of your exposure and (let us hope) of your repentance?

580

1750. I have translated the title of 'Asia here as " the exalted one" when addressed to Joseph in order not to cause confusion with the other man, the 'Aziz to whom Zulaikhā was married, and who is apparently no longer now in the land of the living. See xii. 30 above, and notes 1677 and 1714.

1751. There is a little sparring now between the Ten and Joseph. They are afraid of meeting their father's wrath, and he holds them strictly to the bargain which they had themselves suggested.

1752. Kabīr may mean the eldest. But in xli. 78 above, Kabīr is distinguished from Shaikk, and I have translated the one as "venerable" and the other as "aged". In xx. 71, Kabīr obviously means "leader" or "chief", and has no reference to age. I therefore translate here by the word "leader", that brother among them who took the most active part in these transactions. His name is not given in the Qur.an. The eldest brother was Reuben. But according to the biblical story the brother who had taken the most active part in this transaction was Judah, one of the elder brothers, being the fourth son, after Reuben, Simeon, and Levi, and of the same mother as these. It was Judah who stood surety to Jacob for Benjamin (Gen. xiiii. 9). It is therefore natural that Judah should, as here, offer to stay behind.

In your duty with Joseph? Therefore will I not leave This land until my father Permits me, or God MSS Commands me; and He Is the best to command.

- 83. Facob said: "Nay, but ye Have yourselves contrived A story (good enough) for you." So patience is most fitting (For me). Maybe God will Bring them (back) all To me (in the end)." For He is indeed full Of knowledge and wisdom."

في بُوسُكُ فَانَ أَبَرَجَ الأَرْضَ حَقَى بَأَذَنَ لِيَّ الْمَنْ عَقَى بَأَذَنَ لِيَّ الْمَنْ عَمْ حَفَيْرُ الْمَكِينَ الْمَنْ فَا اللَّهِ الْمَنْ عَلَمْ الْمَنْ الْمَكِينَ الْمَنْ عَلَمْ اللَّهِ اللَّهُ الْمُنْ اللَّهُ اللَّهُ اللْمُنْ اللَّهُ اللَّهُ اللَّهُ اللْمُنَا

1733. The pledge he had given was to his father, and in God's name. Therefore he was bound both to his father, and to God. He must awart his father's orders and remain here as pledged unless God opened out some other way. For example the Egyptian Wazir might relent: if so, he could so back with Benjamin to his father, and his pledge would be satisfied.

1754. 'He stole in secret and without our knowledge. How could wein the circumstances preit?' This may have been a good statement for the other nine brothers, but Judah was himself per sonally and specially bidged.

1755. To vouch for the truth of the story, the nine brothers are asked by Judah to appeal intheir father to enquire at the place where they stayed and the caravan with which they came, and he would find that the facts were as they stated them. The nine brothers came back and told their father as they had been instructed by Judah,

1756. Jacob was absolutely stunned by the story. He knew his darling little Benjamin too weit to believe that he had committed the/i. He flatly refused to believe it, and called it a cock-and-bull story, which indeed it was, though not in the sense in which he reproached the nine brothers. With the eye of faith he saw clearly the innocence of Benjamin, though he did not see every detail.

1757. With the eye of faith be clung to even a larger hope. Perhaps all three of his lost sons would come back, —Joseph, Benjamin, and Judah. His faith in God was unswerving, although alas! the present facts altogether unmanned him.

1738. The old father's grief is indescribable. Yet with what master-strokes it is described here? One sorrow brings up the memory of another and a greater one. Benjamin is now gone: Oh but Joseph his pretty dream of boyhood! his greatness foretoid! and now how dark was the world! If he could but weep! Tears might give relief, and his red and swollen eyes might yet regain their light! But his great was too deep for tears. His eyes lost their colour, and became a dull white. The light became a mere blur, a white glimmer. Darkness seemed to cover everything. So, it was in the outside world. So was it in his mind. His grief was unshared, unexpressed, and uncomplaining. Who could where the Who could understand it? He bore his sorrow in silence. Yet his faith was undimmed, and he trimmed the lamp of patience, that sovereign virtue for those who have faith.

1759. A speech full of jealousy, taunting malice, and lack of understanding,—one that would have driven mad any one less endowed with patience and wisdom than was Jacob the man of God. It shows that the sons were still unregenerate, though the time of their repentance and reclamation was drawing nigh. The cruel heartlessness of their words is particularly out of place, as Jacob bore his sorrow in silence and complained to no mortal, but poured out his distraction and grist only to God, as stated in the next verse.

. 1760. Jacob's plaint to God is about himself, not about God's doings. He bewalls the distraction of his mind and his occasional breaking out of those bounds of patience which he had set for himself.

1761. He knew of God's merciful and beneficent dealings with man in a way his shallow sons did not. And his perfect faith in God also told him that all would be well. He never gave up hope for Joseph, as his directions in the next verse show. They may be supposed to have been spoken after a little silence of grief and thought. That silence I have indicated in punctuation by three dots.

1762. The word is rank, not ruk, as some translators have mistakenly construed it. Rankincludes the idea of a Mercy that stills or calms our distracted state, and is particularly appropriate here in the mouth of Jacob.

Soothing Mercy, except Those who have no faith." 1783

1763. Jacob ignores and forgives the sting and malics in the speech of his sons, and like a true man of God, still wishes them well, gives them sound advice, and sends them on an errand which is to open their eyes to the woodeful ways of Providence as much as it will bring consolition to his own distressed soul. He asks them to go again in search of Joseph and Benjamin. Perhaps by now he had an idea that they might be together in Egypt. In any case their stock of grain is again low, and they must seek its replenishment in Egypt.

1764 The nine brothers come back to Egypt according to their father's direction. Their first care is to see the Wazir. They must tell him of all their father's distress and excite his pity, if perchance he might release Benjamin. They would describe the father's special mental distress as well as the distress which was the common lot of all in famine time. They had spent a great part of their capital and stock-in-trade. They would appeal to his charity. It might please so great a man, the absolute governor of a wealthy state. And they did so. Perhaps they mentioned their father's touching faith, and that brought josph out of his shell; as in the next verse.

1765. Joseph now wants to reveal himself and touch their conscience. He had but to remind them of the true facts as to their treatment of their brother Joseph, whom they pretended to have lost. He had by now also learnt from Benjamin what slights and injustice he too had suffered at their hands after Joseph's protection had been removed from him in their home. Had not Joseph himself seen them but too prone to believe the worst of Benjamin and to say the worst of Joseph? But Joseph would be charitable.—not only in the sense which they meant when they asked for a charitable grant of grain, but in a far higher sense. He would lorgive them and put the most charitable construction on what they did,—that they knew not what they were doing!

1766. Their father's words the way events were shaping themselves, Joseph's questionings, perhaps Benjamin's manner now,—not a slave kept in subjection but one in perfect love and understanding with this great Wastr.—perhaps also a recollection of Joseph's boysh dream.—all these things had prepared their minds and they ask the direct question. "Art thou Joseph?" They get the direct reply. "Yes, I am Joseph; and if you have sill any doubt of my identity, here is Benjamin: ask him. We have suffered much, but patience and right conduct are at last rewarded by God!"

To us (all): behold, he that is Righteous and patient,—never Will God suffer the reward To be lost, of those Who do right."

- 91. They said: "By God! Indeed Has God preferred thee Above us, and we certainly Have been guilty of sin!" 1709
- 92. He said: "This day

C. 113.—Jacob was comforted with the news.

(vii. 94-11.) The whole family moved to Egypt,

Where Joseph received them with honour.

He forgave his brothers, thanked and praised

God, and lived and died a righteous man.

So the story shows how the Plan of God

Deth work without fail: it defeats

The wiles of the wicked, turns evil to good.

<sup>1767.</sup> The scales fall from the eyes of the brothers. We may suppose that they had joined Judah at this interview, and perhaps what Judah had seen when he was alone helped in the process of their enlightenment. They are convicted of sin out of their own mounts, and now there is no arriers pensie, no reserve thought, in their minds. They freely confess their wrong-doing, and the institute of loseobly prefermed.

<sup>1768,</sup> Joseph is most generous. He is glad that they have at last seen the significance of what happened. But he will not allow them at this great moment of reconciliation to dwell on their conduct with reproaches against themselves. There is more urgent work to do. An aged and beloved father is eating out his heart in far Cannan in love and longing for his Joseph, and he must be told all immediately, and "comforted in body, mind, and estate," and so he tells the brothers to hurry back immediately with his shirt as a sign of recognition, as a proof of these wonderful happenings.

<sup>1769.</sup> It will be remembered that they had covered their crime by taking his shirt, putting on the stains of blood, and pretending that he had been killed by a wolf: see above, xii. 17-18. Now that they have confessed their crime and been forgiven, and they have joylin news to tell Jacob about Joseph, Joseph gives them another shirt of his to prove the truth of their story. It is a rich shirt, betting a ruter of Egypt, to prove his good fortune, and yet perhaps its design and many colours (xii. 18, n. 1651) were remniscent of the lost Joseph. The first shirt plunged Jacob into grief. This one will now restore him. See the verses following.

And ever leads those who are true To beatitudes undreamt of. So Did it happen in Mustala's life. Will man not learn to rely on God As the only Reality, turning away From all that is fleeting or untrue?

SECTION 11.

- 94. Then the Caravan left (Egypt).
  Their father said: "I do indeed
  Scent the presence of Joseph: ""
  Nay, think me not a dotard."
- 95. They 1771 said: "By God! Truly thou art in Thine old wandering mind."
- 96. Then when the hearer 1772
  Of the good news came,
  He cast (the shirt)
  Over his face, and he
  Forthwith 1773 regained clear sight. 1784

He said: "Did I not say
To you, 'I know from God
That which ye know not?" "175

170. Literally, "I feel the scent, or the air, or the atmosphere or the breath of Joseph"; for rights a all these significations. Or we might translate, "I feel the presence of Joseph in the air". When a long-lost frend is about to be found or heard of, many people have a sort of presentiment of it, which they call telepathy. In Jacob's case it was more definite. He had always had faith that Joseph was living and that his dream would be realised. Now that faith was proved true by his own sons; they had been unduiful, and hard and ignorant, and circumstances had converged to prove it to them by ocular demonstration. Jacob's soul was more sensitive. No wonder he knew already before the news was actually brought to him.

1711 "They" must be the people around him, before the brothers actually arrived. These same brothers had sedulously cultivated the calumpy that their father was an old dotard, and everybody around believed it, even after its authors had to give it up. Thus lies dee hard, once they get a start.

1772. We may suppose this to have been Judah feee notes 1752 and 1753 above) who was piedged to his father for Benjamin, and who could now announce the good news not only of Benjamin but of Joseph. We can imagine him hurrying forward, to be the first in tell the news, though the plural pronoun for those whom Jacob addresses in this verse, and for those who reply in the next verse, shows that all the brothers practically arrived together.

1773 The particle fa ("then") has here the force of "forthwith"

1°74 Jacob's sight had grown dim; his eyes had become white with much sorrow for Joseph car. 18 above. His mind had also become dark and distracted (xii 85). Both his physical and mental vision now became clear and bright as before.

1775. He had said this (xii 86) when everything was against him and his sons were scoffers. Now they themselves have come to say that his faith was justified and his vision was true.

- 97. They said: "O our father!

  Ask for us forgiveness

  For our sins, for we

  Were truly at fault,"
- 98. He said: "Soon 1776 will I Ask my Lord for forgiveness For you: for He is indeed Oft-Forgiving, Most Merciful."
- 99. The presence of Joseph,
  He provided a home
  For his parents with himself,
  And said: "Enter ye 1788
  Egypt (all) in safety
  If it please God."
- 100. And he raised his parents
  High on the throne (of dignity), ""
  And they fell down in prostration,
  (All) before him. He said:
  "O my father! this is
  The fulfilment of my vision
  Of old! God hath made it
  Come true! He was indeed
  Good to me when He Took me out of prison

1776. He fully intended to do this, but the most injured party was Joseph, and it was only fair that Joseph should be consulted. In fact Joseph had already forgiven his brothers all their past, and his father could conhidently look forward to Joseph joining in the wish of the whole family to turn to God through their aged father Jacob in his prophetic office.

1777. At length the whole family arrived in Egypt and were re-united with Joseph. They were all entertained and provided with homes. But the parents were treated with special honour, as was becoming both to Joseph's character and ordinary family ethics. His mother Rachel had long been dead, but he had been brought up by his mother's sister Leah, whom his father had also married. Leah was now his mother. They were looked with Joseph himself.

1778. This is in Arabic in the plural, not in the dual number. The welcome is for all to Egypt, and under the auspices of the Wazir of Egypt. They came, therefore, under God's will, to a double sense of security: Egypt was secure from the famine unlike the neighbouring countries; and they were to be cared for by the highest in the land.

1779, Certainly metaphorically: probably also literally. By Eastern custom the place of honour at a ceremonial reception is on a seat on a dan, with a special cushion of honour, such as is assigned to a bridegroom at his reception. To show his high respect for his parents, Joseph made them sit on a throne of dignity. On the other hand, his parents and his brothers,—all performed the ceremony of prostration before Joseph in recognition of his supreme rank in Egypt under the Pharaoh. And thus was fulfilled the dream or vision of his youth (xii, 4 above, and n., 1633).

And brought you (all here) 1900

1780. Note how modest Joseph is throughout. The first things he thinks of among Gods gracious favours to him are: (I) that he was brought out of prison and publicly proclaimed to be honest and virtuous; and (2) that his dear father was restored to him, as well as the brothers who had persecuted him all his life. He will say nothing against them personally. In his base 1-base, the abit of interpreting everyone and everything in the most favourable and charitable light, he looks upon them as having been misted. It was Satan (the power of Evil) that set them against him. But now all is restlifted by the grace of God, to Whom he render due prisate.

Lagif: see n. 2844 to xxii. 63; the fourth meaning mentioned there applies here, with echoes of the other meanings.

1781. Then he turns to God in prayer, and again his modesty is predominant. He held supreme power under the king, but he calls it "some power" or authority. His reading of events and drams had saved millions of lives in the great Egyptian famine; yet he refers to it at "something of the interpretation of dreams and events". And he takes no credit to himself. "All this," he says, "was Thy gift, O God! For such things can only come from the Creator of the heavens and the earth."

1782. Power in the doing of things as well as power in intelligent forecasts and plans,—both must look to God: otherwise the deed and the plan would be futile.

1783. Joseph's - prayer may be analysed thus: (1) I am rothing; all power and knowledge are Thine; (2) such things can only come from Thee, for Thou art the Creator of all; (3) none can protect me from daniger and wrong, but only Thou; (4) Thy protection I need both in this world and the next; (5) may 1 till death remain constant to Thee; (6) may 1 yield up my soul to Thee in chefrid alumbission to Thy will; (7) in this moment of union with my family after many particular letting to the final union with the great spiritual family of the righteous. How marveilously apt to the occasion!

104. And no reward dost thou ask
Of them for this: it is
No less than a Message

(SECTION 12.

105. And how many Signs
In the heavens and the earth

1784. The story is finished. But is it a story? It is rather a recital of forces and motives, thoughts and feelings, complications and results, ordinarily not seen by men. However much they concert their plans and unite their forces, whatever dark plots they back with all their resources,—the plan of God works irresistibly, and sweeps away all their machinations. The good win through in the end, but not always as they planned; the evil are foiled, and others here very plots help the good. What did the brothers desire in trying to get rid of Joseph, and what actually happened? How did Zulaighà form an image of her love, what false traps and sins did it not lead her into, and how, through it all, by her constancy and faith, did she see her way to a higher, nobler, find puter love? How wrong was it of the cup-bener to forget Joseph, and yet how his very forgetfulness kept Joseph safe and undisturbed in prison until the day came when he should tackle the great problems of Pharach's kingdom? With every character in the story there are problems, and the whole is a beautifully balanced picture of the working of God's providence in man's chequered destiny.

1785. The holy Apostle was no actor in those scenes; yet by inspiration he was able to expound them in the divine light, as they had never been expounded before, whether in the Pentateuch or by any Seer before him. And allegorically they figured his own story.—how his own brettrem sought to betray and kill him, how by God's providence he was not only saved but he won through, and how his own fittends misconceived their love for him and had to be taught that true love which transcends sex and self. Of such a dream of love Plato had an inking.

1786. In spite of such an exposition and such a convincing illustration, how few men really have true faith,—such a faith as Jacob had in the old story, or Muhammad the Chosen One had, in the story which was actually unfolding itself on the world's stage when this Sura was revealed, shortly before the Hijfat? Mujefa's ardent wish and faith was to save his people and all mankind from the graceless condition of want of faith. But his efforts were flouted, and he had to leave his home and suffer all kinds of persecution; but, like Joseph, and more than Joseph, he was marked out for great work, which he finally achieved.

1787. The divine Message was priceless; it was not for the Messenger's personal profit, nor did he ask of men any reward for bringing it for their benefit. It was for all creatures,—literally, for all the worlds, as explained in i. 2, n. 20.

1788. Not only can we learn through Scripture of the working of God's providence in human history and the history of individual souls. His Signs are scattered literally throughout naturethroughout Creation-for all who have eyes to see. And yet man is so arrogant that he turns away his very eyes from them ?

1789. Even if people profess a nominal faith in God, they corrupt it by believing in other things as if they were God's partners, or had some share in the shaping of the world's destinies? In some circles, it is idolatry, the worship of stocks and stones. In others, it is Christolatry and Mariolatry, or the deification of heroes and men of renown. In others it is the powers of Nature or of Life, or of the human intellect personified in Science or Art or invention, and this is the more common form of modern idolatry. Others again worship mystery, or imaginary powers of good or evan evil: greed and fear are mixed up with these forms of worship. Islam calls us to worship the One True God, and Him only,

1790. Qashiyat = covering veil, pall; used for the Judgment to come, which will be so dark and appalling as to hide up all other and petty things, and be the one great reality for the souls that were slaves to evil.

1791. The metaphor is changed, from intensity of darkness to suddenness of time. It will come before they are aware of it. Let them not feel any sense of safety in sin.

1792. Islam holds fast to the one central fact in the spiritual world,-the unity of God, and all Reality springing from Him and Him alone. There can be no one and nothing in competition with that one and only Reality. It is the essence of Truth. All other ideas or existences, including our perception of Self, are merely relative,-mere projections from the wonderful faculties which He has given to us. This is not, to us, mere hypothesis. It is in our inmost experience. In the physical world, they say that seeing is believing. In our inner world this sense of God is as clear as sight in the physical world. Therefore, Mustafa and those who really follow him in the truest sense of the world, call all the world to see this Truth, feel this experience, follow this Way. They will never be distracted by metaphysical speculations, whose validity will always be doubtful, nor be deluded with phantoms which lead men astray,

I and whoever follows me, Glory to God! and never Will I join gods with God!"

1793. It was men that God sent as His Messengers to explain Him to men. He did-not send angels or gods. Into His chosen men He breathed His inspiration, so that they could see truer than other men. But they were men living with men,—in men's habitations in town or country; not recluses or cenobites, who had no personal experience of men's affairs and could not be teachers of men in the fullest sense. They deed stell their own tale.

1794. The righteous, the men of God, had, as in Joseph's history, some evidence of God's providence in this very world with all its imperfections as reflecting our imperfections. But this world is of no real consequence to them. Their home is in the Hercafter. Joseph's earthly home was in Canaanbut he attained his glory elsewhere; and his spiritual Home is in the great Society of the Righteous fill. 390.

1795. game@ (come to think): I construe the nominative of this verb to be "the apostles" in agreement with the best authorities. Krajfblig is the usual reading, though Kragrbbl, the alternative reading, also rests on good authority. I construe the meaning to be: that God gives plenty of rope to the wicked (as in Joseph's story) until His own. Messengers feel almost that it, will be hopeless to preach to them and come to consider themselves branded as lizar by anumbelieving world; that the breaking-point is then reached; that God's help then comes swittly to His men, and they are delivered from persecution and danger, while the wrath of God overtakes sinners, and nothing can then ward it off. This interpretation has good authority. behind it, though there are differences of opinion.

<sup>1797.</sup> A story like that of Joseph is not a purely imaginary fable. The People of the Book have it in their sacred literature, It is confirmed here in its main outline, but here there is a detailed spiritual exposition that will be found nowhere in earlier literature. The exposition covers all sides of human life. If properly understood it gives valuable lessons to guide our conduct,—an instance of God's grace and mercy to people who will go to Him in faith and put their affairs in His hands.

APPENDIX VI

Allegorical Interpretation of the Story of Joseph.

(Söra xii.)

Spiritual things can only be understood by symbols taken from things which are familiar to us in this life. In a sense this fleeting life itself is a symbol. History is a symbol. The whole phenomenal world is a symbol. The reality lies behind it, like the real light behind the Cave, in Plato's Theory of Ideas. This is not to say that Islam agrees with the Vedantists in calling this whole visible world an illusion. It is an illusion to suppose that it is the only world. But it is equally an illusion to suppose that this world is of no consequence. It is of as much consequence as our thoughts, feelings, dreams, and Life. We have to make use of them, study and respect their laws, and obey the duties imposed on us by the spiritual part of us being entangled in their chain. But they are not eternal, and they will pass away. Our duty is to prepare ourselves for the truer life, the eternal life: we emancipate ourselves from them, not by fleeing them (for that is impossible), but by fulfilling our obligations in them, as an apprentice or probationer attains his real position by completing his apprenticeship or probation satisfactorily and so ceasing to be an apprentice or probationer.

From this point of view there is an allegorical meaning in all experience, history, and spiritual teaching. The temporary relationships, the fleeting events, our triumphs, defeats, and difficulties in this phenomenal world, are the bridges through which we pass to the higher world. Our temporal experiences are the foundation on which our greater and real Life is built up. This greater and real Life is not merely a thing of the future. It is within us all the time, if we only seek its truer light and try to fulfil our lower and temporal functions by the more stable principles with which it furnishes us.

The glimpses of the spiritual Joseph, as I understand them, in the Qur-an, are afforded us "in order that we may learn wisdom" (xii. 2). Stories, events, visions, dreams, seem all to be assimilated under the Arabic word Ahadsh. The real ones among them (as opposed to futile fancies) have all an inner meaning. It is only given to a few choicer spirits to understand and expound them. Joseph was one of these choicer spirits. From his boyhood he had an inner vision which he treasured up in his mind. Its meaning—or full meaning—only dawned on him afterwards. When it did, he was able to fulfil his mission in life.

This mission had many aspects. His father Jacob was also a Seer or Prophet, but Joseph in his maturity surpassed him in rank, and Joseph's life and filial love were as it were necessary to his father to complete and crown the full achievement of his life. Then Joseph, among his ten half-brothers and one full brother, had a protective and guiding mission. To Benjamin, his one full brother, and the youngest in the family, he was almost like a father when Jacob reached old age and resigned the headship of the family. The other brothers reflect all the pettiness, wickedness, jealousy, spite, hatred, injustice, and lower propensities of human life, combined with the latent reasonableness and the capacity to repent and turn over a new leaf, which it was Joseph's mission to awaken at the expense of much suffering to himself. The ten brothers are shown to us collectively as acting as a human social group, with all their arrogance based on numbers and physical strength, and contempt of older and wiser experience. But we are also shown how the better side of human nature sometimes struggles to assert itself as against the baser and grosser standards of mass mentality, as when one of them advised them not to take Joseph's life (xii, 10), and again, later. when one of them felt ashamed to show himself before his father without Benjamin and offered to stay behind if perchance he could release Benjamin (xii, 78, 80). But it will be noticed that in both cases there was a good deal of alloy with the gold. The better nature of the individual has always a hard fight against the lower collective standards. which to unregenerate human nature seem to be the last word in morality, like the herd instinct in the lower animals. This is also shown in the actions and reactions between Zulaikha and the Society women. Sometimes Zulaikha was almost on the point of seeing the error of her ways, when her passion is inflamed and her higher nature suppressed by the bitter taste of what the world says and the discovery that those who cast the first stone at a delinquent would be the first to take all the so-called enjoyment of the sin which they are so prompt to reprobate in others,

To the merchants who found and purchased Joseph, the handsome young slave of winning ways was indeed " a treasure " (xii. 19). They understood that treasure in a material and grasping commercial spirit, but no doubt the road journey from Canaan to the Egyptian capital showed them the divinely-inspired virtuous side of loseph, and it is impossible to suppose that they had not much spiritual profit out of it. The 'Azīz of Egypt, the high official who bought him, expected much good out of him, wanted to treat him with honour, and adopt him as a son (xii. 21). He no doubt saw (if but vaguely) the moral and spiritual grandeur of Joseph, but his highest privilege (though he may not have known it) was that he was able to be the instrument by which Joseph was "established in the land" (xii. 21); and that through him the strange, romantic, wholly feminine character of Zulaikha was brought into touch with her ideal, and through sorrow, suffering, sin, and repentance, was at last able to catch a glimpse of that heavenly love of which she had dreamed and which she had so much misunderstood under the stress of human passion. On Zulaigha our romantic Şūfī poetry has concentrated its attention in the story of Joseph, and of this we shall speak presently. In the 'Azīz's house Joseph attained his full manhood and endowment of Power and Knowledge from God (xii. 22). In her ardent way as a sinner Zulaigha had a share in Joseph's development, for his virtue was tried through her beauty and passion and emerged triumphant.

The Society ladies who taunted Zulaikhā represent the prudish element in femininity. The contest between the jealous prude and the frank, impulsive victim of ardent love is well-figured in the relations between the ladies and Zulaikhā right to the end. Calculating hypocrisy and intolerant slander are farther from true love than a misconceived desire in earthly love, and this point is well brought out in Joseph's story. The ladies, when they cut their fingers at Zulaikhā's feast, are the type of women who figuratively cut their souls in straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel.

Joseph's slavery and prison are the types or what a righteous man has to suffer through the sins and follies of others, in order (1) that he may bring some good to others, and (2) that he may develop his own character and high destiny. Without sorrow, suffering and striving—spiritual Jihād—even the best men cannot attain their full stature. Through them we are taught a true sense of values. The slave must work, must labour, not for himself, but for others. If he does it in the right spirit, he exposes the hollowness of idleness, the ridiculous position of arrogance, and the futility of power which permits injustice. The prisoner who being innocent is put into a human prison enlarges his own spiritual liberty and opportunity, and perhaps shows up by contrast the darker and more impenetrable prison in whose grip his unjust incarcerators are held. The test is whether the innocent man who is put into prison or subjection is able to hold up his head. If so, he is able to achieve Burns's, ideal, "Preserve the dignity of map, with soul erect": for the Tawakkul of Islam will have made it a part of his nature to know for certain that "the Universal Plan will all protect."

The spiritual benefit which the two fellow-prisoners derived from Joseph's spiritual influence is explained in the notes to xii. 36-40. And then comes the period of Joseph's exaltation in worldly position, his strenuous administration of Egypt during fourteen eventful years, and perhaps to the end of his life, his opportunities to make the Pharaoh's power real and beneficent, instead of a mere simulatorum and a nervaless show, behind which lurked in justice and oppression. There is also the touching reunion of the family. The little artifice by which Joseph induces the brothers to confess their own hatred and spite (xii. 77) leads to their own self-exposure, preparatory to their repentance and forgiveness. On this and innumerable other points whole volumes could be written. But I will now pass on to Zulaikhā and her treatment in our mystic-romantic poetry, for it forms an interesting commentary on what Islam has understood from one episode in Joseph's career.

In almost all Islamic languages the romance of Yūsuf and Žulaikla has justly attracted much attention in mystic poetry. Perhaps the order of the names should really be reversed and the romance should be called that of Zulaikha and Yūsuf. In Persian the great Firdausi tried his hand at it. But the great masterpiece is that of Jami whose dates fall between A.H. 817 and 898, equivalent to A.D. 1414-1492. I consider it one of the masterpieces of the world's literature. There is a good German translation by Rosenzweig and an English translation by R. T. H. Griffith. The translation by A. Rogers is not so good. The Urdu translations which I have seen are not worth mention. The original Persian is so erand and instructive that it is a pity that our Islamic students do not study it with the attention which it deserves. I shall give a very brief account of the version as developed by Jami: where I quote in English verses, I shall use Griffith's version (of 1881).

According to Jami, Zulaikha is a beautiful Princess, a daughter of a king of the West (Magrib). In her youth she dream to dream, in which she saw a handsome man, as noble and true as he was handsome, and she fell in love with him. So deep and constant was her love that she pined away for the love of the ideal man of her dream. She nursed her love and sorrow in secret, making only her nurse her confidante, in the hope that the nurse might by her secret arts procure a meeting with the dear love of her dreams. She had a second and a third dream, and in the third, she had the courage to ask the man in the vision his name and country. He did not tell her his name, but he said he was the Wazir of Egypt.

Armed with this clue, Zulaikhā refused all offers of marriage from kings and princes, cherishing in her heart only the image of the man she had seen in her dream, who she had learnt was the Wazir of Egypt. At length her father is induced to send a wise man to Egypt, to arrange the marriage with the Wazir, though he could not understand why the Princess should have refused the offers of kings and princes from all over the world. The wise man interviews the Wazir of Egypt, who is torn internally with many feelings. Here was a Princess who had refused the offers of great kings. His ambition was all aflame. How could he refuse? Yet he knew his own condition. He was a eunuch. How could he accept? He pleaded that the king of Egypt needed him so much that he could not be absent a single hour. But he would send 200 golden litters and 1000 slave-girls to wait on Zulaikhā and convey her with honour to Egypt. The agent of Zulaikhā's father knew that Zulaikhā's heart was so set upon the Wazir of Egypt that it would be death to her if she could not get him. So he arranged the match and returned with what he supposed was good news. And Zulaikhā, too, was delighted. Her bliss knew no bounds. She now, she thought, had the prospect of union with the man of her dreams. Thus, moralises the Poet, our joys and sorrows come from dreams and fancies!

Great preparations were made for Zulaikha's brida, procession to Egypt. Zulaikha's litter was carved with aloe and sandalwood; its roof was resplendent with gems and gold like Jamshid's tent : its curtains were hung with gold brocade. And in it was Zulaikha, radiant and happy that she was now going to meet the lord of her love, whom she knew from her dreams, and to whom she would now be united for ever. When they approached the Egyptian capital, the Wazir came out to meet his bride with a splendid equipage. Zulaikha was all eagerness to feast her eves with a sight of her beloved. She peeped through a hole in her curtain, when lo! she was full of dismay. This Wazîr was not the man of her dreams !- not the man to whom she had plighted her troth, and to whom she would be faithful for life. She had in her dreams seen the image of Yasuf, not of this 'Azīz. Never would she give her faith or her love or her virgin honour to another. She began to bemoan her fate " Nishandam nakhl i khurma, khar bar-dad (I planted a date-palm: what has come out but thorns?)" She was in utter despair. What was to be done? A voice came to her from the unseen world. It said; "True, this is not thy love! But thy desire for thy true love will be satisfied through him. Fear him not. The lewel of thy virgin honour is safe with him. If a great sleeve is shown, but there is no hand within, what is there to hold a dagger?" Zulaikhā had, of her own deliberate choice, had this marriage arranged. She must wed the europch. Whatever her grief. she must not complain. She went through the brilliant ceremony. But her heart was empty. It was given to the man of her dreams! And it would never be another's | And so she spent her days in outward splendour and inward grief, pining away in love unsatisfied.

At this time, perhaps, she had a glimpse of that true love in which self is blotted out. In her despair, in her anguish, she could see things which were later obscured to her in her pride and in the allurements of her sense. She poured out her soul in music. She had faith. "Surely," she thought, "thou gavest me no lying vision! Why didst thou call thyself Wazir of Egypt? And I left my home and country to be with thee, to be thine! I know I shall win thee in the end! When that happy day comes, I shall be not I, but thou! May I see thee soon!"

"I shall roll up the carpet of life when I see
Thy dear face again, and shall cease to be;
For self will be lost in that rapture, and all
The threads of my thought from my hand will fall;
Not Me witt thou find, for this Self will have fied,
Thou will be any soul in mine own soul's stead.

App. VI.) 596

All thought of Self will be swept from my mind, And Thee, only, Thee, in my place shall it find; More precious than heaven, than earth more dear, Myself were foreotten if Thou wert near."

She waited in faith and longing. At length came news of a great sensation in the market. A foreign merchant was bringing, they said, a slave the like of whom had never been seen, whether for looks, or wit, or integrity, or purity of word and mind. It was no slave, but a sun of splendour, a moon of goodness, a king in the realm of love! The caravan had yet barely entered the city. But the king heard of it, and ordered the Wazir (Zulaikha's nominal husband) to go and see and bring this new prodigy into the king's presence. When the Wazir came to the caravan and saw Yūsuf, he found his beauty was even greater than rumour had described. He bowed down, with feelings akin to worship. But Yūsuf gently raised him and taught him the Gospel of Unity,—that worship was due to God alone. When the merchant was told of the king's order he pleaded delay on the ground that they were travelstained and unfit to appear before the king until they had washed in the Nile and made themselves presentable.

Meanwhile the fame of Yūsuf's beauty, goodness, purity, and truth spread like wild-fire. Each one-man or woman-who possessed-or thought he or she possessed—any of these qualities even in a minute degree, grew jealous that another a stranger and a slave -should draw away all hearts. To the merchant, the value of his "treasure" went up the more it was talked about. The king might perhaps pay the whole revenue of Egypt to purchase him. But there was one to whom Yusuf's beauty was worth more than all the revenues of Egypt and who could outbid the king himself. This was Zulaigha, the lovely Princess of the West, whose jewels were worth the revenues of twenty kingdoms, but who took no pleasure in them in pining for the love of her dreams. She, too, heard of this wonderful prodigy, and came to have a peep at it through the curtains of her litter. Behold ! when she saw Yusuf, it was the very face she had seen in her dreams, -for which she had left home and people and country, and for which she had been praying and pining these many years! She had no doubt about it whatever. She had found her love! But to see is not to attain. The whole rabble saw Yusuf, and he was to be presented to the king. She told her husband to present a humble petition to the king. The king knew that he, the Wazīr, had no son and could have none. The king knew the services which he as Wazir had rendered to the king, his dynasty, and his country. Would the king permit him to bid for this wondrous slave with the Wazīr's own money? If so, the king would get the slave just the same, but would afford his Wazīr the happiness of having a wonderful son in his house to carry on his name? The king saw Yusuf and accorded the .Wazîr the very reasonable request which he had made. Perhaps, though the poet does not say so, the king wondered whether the Wazir would be able to put up the whole of the money, and may have intended benevolently to supplement the good Wazīr's resources, should the need arise.

Then came a strange scene typical of Vanity Fair. Yösuf was put up to auction. Every petty individual thought he or she could purchase Yösuf! One-old woman had nothing but a little yarn she had spun. "Enough," she thought, "to give me the honour of standing in the market and boasting for ever that I had bid for Yösuf," Some came from motives of curiosity: some from motives of jealousy.

Why should the world go mad after a beauty or a virtue of a kind different from what they themselves possessed, however homely? Some came with pride of purse. " A thousand gold pieces!" they shouted as if to stifle all competition. The bid went on to a hundred times as much. Nor did it stop there. "Of fragrant musk I will give to the full weight of Yusuf!" said one who had travelled to the uttermost ends of the earth in search of costly perfumes. "No good!" said another: "I offer the same weight of the most costly rubies and diamonds!" Poor deluded mortals i "The heaven's glorious sun" was "not to be deep searched with saucy looks!" The Wazir's resources-and indeed the kingdom's revenues, - had been exceeded many times already in the bidding. But Zulaigha, the Princess of the West, had untold wealth in her casket of gems. Yusuf was more than life itself to her. She bade the Wazîr double the highest bid. This was conclusive. Yusuf went to the Wazir. And poor Zulaikla! She knew that Yūsuf was worth more than the price she had paid for him! Yet, in her feminine weakness, she thought Yusuf had a price! She thought that her beauty, her birth, her constancy, her unflinching gift of her person to him, would weigh in the scale. Alas I even these things were not enough for Yusuf. The sale in the phenomenal world was all illusory in the real world. As Zulaikha had not yet learnt this, she had yet to pass through many trials, temptations, sins, and sorrows, before her grosser self could be purged out and she could be fit to receive Yusuf. Meanwhile, he who could talk to the lowest in prison on equal terms, was unattainable to Zulaikha. The dust of his feet had made the merchant who had looked after him fabulously wealthy, but Yüsuf was still to be the prev to many prying glancer, the mark of many poisoned arrows, the quarry of many cunning traps. But his soul was spotless, and his manhood remained unsullied.

At this point, about the middle of the story, we are introduced by the poet to a mysterious figure, the lovely Bāzīga, who is in some respects a foil to Zulaikha, Bazīga's speech is the key to the whole allegory. She is a princess of the 'Ad race, a people of Arabian antiquity referred to in many places in the Qur-an, and described in n. 1040 to vii. 65. She had heard of Yūsuf, and had also come with great wealth to bid for him. She had had an interview and talk with Yūsuf, and he had turned her attention from himself to the Great Creator, and given her the precious Message of Unity and Truth. 'This world of visible beauty,' he had said, 'is but the screen of the invisible and ineffable beauty within. Any beauty or goodness that you see here is but a reflection or image of the perfect, real, and eternal Beauty, Goodness, and Truth, which you should seek.' Convinced by his teaching, she resigns all folly, and bursts into a splendid rhapsody, concluding with these words:—

"Mine eyes have been touched by the Truth's pure ray, And the dream of folly has passed away. Mine eyes thou hast opened—God bless thee for it!—And mine heart to the Soul of the soul thou hast knit! From a fond strange love thou hast turned my feet, The Lord of all creatures to know and meet; If! I bore a tongue in each single hair, Each and all should thy praises declare!"

She resigned her wealth and her pomp, attended to the needy, and spent her days in prayer and praise on the banks of the Nile.

App. VI.] 598

Zulaikha is not of that temperament, and she reaches Truth and Peace by a different and much more thorny path. She is still in the grip of the beauty of sense She burns with the flame of animal love, and tempts Yosuf He is above any passion inconsistent with truth and fidelity, but his heart is sore distressed to think that he should bring sorrow on those who loved him. His father loved him, and that caused his brothers the pain of jealousy and his father himself the pain of separation. He would gladly serve her and the Wazīr in all that was reasonable. But why seek to on beyond, on the road to evil? Zulaikhā placed all sorts of temptations in his way, but he stood firm as a rock. At length she trapped him into a garden house and made overtures to him. But he fied. She pursued, and in the struggle, tore his shirt at the back. He made good his escape. Outside the house he met the Wazīr, but he was too kindly and forbearing, too solicitous of Zulaikha's honour to betray her or say anything of what had happened. Nor did the Wazīr press him, but taking his hand in his own, entered the house with him. Zulaikha, seeing them thus enter, linked in mutual confidence, had a cruel and baseless suspicion—that she had been humilitated and betrayed by Yusuf. Her guilty conscience and injured pride spurred her on to impulsive lies and false accusations. Then was Yusuf compelled, in a few simple words, to tell so much of the truth as would save the Wazīr from committing an act of injustice-an act inconsistent with his high office. The condition of the shirt decided the matter : the Wazir asked Zulaikia to seek God's pardon and charged Yusuf to say nothing more of this affair, lest the Wazīr's own position should be compromised.

Yusuf had no need of the Wazir's words to make him discreet. But, says the poet, it suits not love to seek a corner of safety. Zulakha, roused by anger and revenge, threw prudence to the winds. Her conduct accused, rather than excused, her. Tongues wagged. Society exaggerated, or distorted, the voice of rumour, itself fed on exaggeration and distortion. Society pointed the finger of scorn at her, Good, bad, or hypocritical, the ladies all reviled her. 'Shameless woman, to throw herself on her slave! And he to scorn her! What was Egypt coming to! If she had had their spirit or their charm, who could have resisted it?' Stung by their insolence, Zulaikha determined to have her revenge on the ladies. She invited them to a sumptuous banquet. At dessert, just as they were about to cut their oranges with their knives, Yusuf was admitted to the assembly. The very sight of him dazzled the ladies. 'He is no man, but a noble angel!' they cried. In their extreme emotion they cut their fingers. Zulaikha was more than justified in their eyes. But they had their own lower motives. Each lady thought in her heart that she could win his love where Zulaikha had failed. Jealousy further inflamed Zulaikha's passion. They advised her to soften the steel in the fire, to soften Yusuf's heart in prison. Yusuf was now beset with the persecution, not of one woman, but of many women. and he himself prayed for safety in prison. Many motives on the part of various people thus combined to send him to prison. They are analysed in my note 1684 to xii. 35. So to prison Yusuf went, with all marks of disgrace and ignominy.

To the men in prison Yūsuf's advent was a blessing, for he taught them the Trath and showed them the Light. Such men as Yūsuf, says the poet, turn a hell into Paradise. To Zulaikha's heart came new sorrow, new penitence, new tortures of conscience. Her heart was in prison with the prisoner. Her health gave way. In torturing and killing her false Self, she began almost to regain her true Self.

Meanwhile Yūsut's goodness of heart made him a king among his fellowprisoners. If any were ill, he tended them; if there was anything on their mind he sympathised with them and consoled them. They had unbounded faith in him, and they gladly took his teaching and profited by it. Two of them took their dreams to him and he interpreted them correctly. One of them was restored to the king's favour. When the king in his turn dreamed a dream, this man remembered Yasu and obtained the interpretation of the king's dream through him. Yūsuf was released from prison, raised to high honour, and given full authority in the land. The old Wazīr, Zulaikhā's husband, was dead, and Yūsuf was charged with the arrangements for meeting the great famine that was proghosticated. This part of the story is touched upo; but lightly by the poet, as his theme is the love of Zulaikhā's

She, a widow, bereft of youth, honour, beauty, resources, health, even eyesight, yet cherishes the memory of Yasuf and waters it with her tears. He is now far above her in worldly station, as he always was above her in spiritual worth. Her humbled pride opens her spiritual eyes. She cries to him in her agony, and he listens. He knows the true from the false, and I e is just. The woman whom he repelled when she was in the bloom of health, youth, and beauty, when she was rich, proud, and high in rank—now that she is meek, lowly, and sincere, finds favour in his sight. At his prayer her health, youth, and beauty are restored, and they are married in pure and true love. Even so, their love was not perfect until they united their hearts in pure worship to God.

The core of the allegory is in its definition of love,—the true and the eternal as distinguished from the false and the ephemeral. Life is subject to many changes, and so is what is ordinarily called Love among men.

"One is cast down to the earth, and one
Is lifted on high like the glorious sun.
Blessed is he who has wit to learn
How the favour of fortune may change and turn,
Whose head is not raised in his high estate,
Nor his heart in misfortune made desolate."

False love is only a toy for self-indulgence. Self, not the Other, is the governing motive.

"When love is not perfect, with one sole thought— Himself – is the heart of the lover fraught. He looks on his love as a charming toy, The spring and source of his selfish joy. One rose he would pluck from his love, and leave A hundred thoras her lone heart to grieve."

Just as, in human affairs, there is true and faise love, so in our inner and higher life, there is a divine love that transcends all human love. This is the contrast between the 'ishq hagiqi and the' ishq majāzā.

"How blest is he who can close his eye
And let the vain pageants of life pass by 1—
Untouched by the magic of earth can keep
His soul awake while the senses sleep;
Scorn the false and the fleeting that meets the view,
And see what is hidden and firm and true!"

App. VI.] 600

To the meek and lowly, who seek God's love in sincerity and are willing to sacrifice all that the external world holds dear, God grants His love in abundant measure. For every sin, followed by repentance and right will, there is forgiveness; but for persistent pride and hardness of heart there is nothing but the abyss.

This allegory has sometimes been compared to that of Cupid and Psyche in western literature. It goes back to Greek and Roman times. Cupid (or Eros) is Love (masculine): Psyche (feminine) is the human soul. The Platonic and Neoplatonic philosophy built up a doctrine of the human soul, caught in the snare of matter and sensuality, which must be raised up to its pristine purity by Love. The most nicturesque form in which the allegory was worked up was by Apuleius (born about 125 A.D.). It forms an episode in his Latin work The Metamorphoses or The Golden Ass. Here Psyche is the human soul whom Cupid (Love) carries off to a secluded spot. She is charged to check her curiosity and enjoy her bliss. Venus (earthly love) is jealous and makes Psyche break Love's condition, whereupon Love leaves her, and she falls into servitude to Venus (carnal love). . After many adventures she is restored again by Cupid (true love) and they are re-united. The allegory has attracted many modern writers, including Robert Bridges (who has translated it) and Walter Pater who has adapted it in his Marius the Epicurean. William Morris has also introduced it in his Earthly Paradise. Among French writers whom it has attracted may be mentioned La Fontaine the fabulist, and Molière the dramatist. But the theme of that allegory is not as wide as the theme of the allegory of Yūsuf and Zulaikhā.

INTRODUCTION TO SCRA XIII (Ra'd).

The chronological place of this Sūra and the general argument of Sūras x, to xv. has been described in the Introduction to S. x.

The special argument of this Sūra deals with that aspect of God's revelation of Himself to man and His dealings with him, which is concerned with certain contrasts which are here pointed out. There is the revelation to the Prophets, which comes in spoken words adapted to the language of the various men and groups of men to whom it comes; and there is the parallel revelation or Signs in the constant laws of external nature, on this earth and in the visible heavens. There is the contrast between recurring life and death already in the external world: why should men disbelieve in the life after death? They mock at the idea of punishment because it is deferred: but can they not see God's power and glory in thunder and the forces of nature? All creation praises Him: it is the good that endures and the evil that is swept away like froth or scum. Not only in miracles but in the normal working of the world, are shown God's power and mercy. What is Punishment in this world, compared to that in the life to come? Even here there are Signs of the working of his law: plot or plan as men will, it is God's Will that must prevail. This is illustrated in Joseph's story in the preceding Sūra.

Summary.—The Book of Revelation is true, and is confirmed by the Signs to be seen in visible nature. God Who created such mighty forces in outer nature can raise up man again after death. God's knowledge is all-compassing: so are His power and goodness /xiii. 1-18, and C., 114).

The righteous seek the pleasure of God and find Peace; the evil ones break his Law, cavil and dispute, and reject faith; the wrath of God will take them unawares, but in His own good time (xiii, 19-31, and C. 115).

So was it with apostles before: they were mocked, but the mockers were destroyed, while the righteous rejoiced and were established (xiii, 32-43, and C, 116.)

C. 114.—God's Truth comes to man in revelation

(xiii. 1-18.) And in nature. How noble are His works!

How sublime His government of the world!

They all declare forth His glory!

Yet man must strangely resist Faith,

And ask to see the Signs of His Mercy!

Doth not His knowledge search through

The most hidden things? Are not

Lightning and Thunder the Signs of His Might

As well as of His Mercy? He alone

Is Worthy of praise, and His Truth Will stand when all vanities pass Away like scum on the torrent of Time. S. XIII. 1-2.]

Here there seems to be a combination of the groups A.L.M., and A.L.R., We consider here not only the beginning (A.), the model [L.], and the end (A.), of man's spiritual history, but also the immediate future of the interior of our organisation, such as it appeared to our Cimmat towards the close of the Meccan period. But in trying to understand mystic symbolism, we must not be digmatte. The befitting attitude is to say: God knows best.

1799, C.f. x. l. n. 1382.

1800 Should we construe the clause "that ye can see" to refer to "pillars" or "to the heavens"? Either's admissible, but I prefer the former. The heavens are supported on no pillars that we can see. What we see is the blue wailt of heaven, but there are invisible forces or conditions created by Goc, which should impress us with His power and glory.

1801. Cf, x, x, and n 1386. We must not think that anything came into being by itself or carries out its functions by itself. God is the active Force through which everything has its life and being and through which everything is maintained and supported, even though fixed Laws are established for its regulation and government. The "term appointed" limits the duration of their functioning: its ultimate returns its God, as its beginning proceeded from God.

1802. Cf. x, 31, n. 1425. Where the laws of nature are fixed, and everything runs according to its appointed course, the government and regulation behind it is still that of God. Where there is limited freewill as in man, yet the ultimate source of man's faculties is God. God cares for His creatures. He does not, as in the idea of polytheistic Greece, sit apart on Olympus, careless of His creatures.

1883. One manifestation of His caring for His creatures, even where a limited amount of freewill is granted for their development, is that He is careful to explain His Sigus both in nature and in express and detailed revelation through His Messengers, less man should have any doubtes whether he has to return ultimately to his Lord and account for all his actions during the "term appointed," when he was given some initiative by way of trial and preparation. If man attends carefully, to the Signs, he should have no doubt whatever.

1804. I think that this refers to ser in plants, and I see M. P. has translated accordingly. Plants like animals have their reproductive apparatus.—male stamens and female pistifs. In most cases the same flower combines both stamens and pistifs, but in some cases these organs are specialised in separate flowers, and in some cases, even in separate trees. The date-palm of Arabin and the Papaya of India, are instances of fruit trees which are un-sexual.

1805 Cf. vii. 54 and n. 1032. The whole passage there may be compared with the whole passage here. Both their similarity and their variation show how closely reasoned each argument is, with expressions exactly appropriate to each occasion.

180h. Does "growing out of single roots or otherwise" quality "palm frees" or "vines" and "com" as well? The former construction is adopted by the classical Commentators; in which case the reference is to the fact either that two or more palm trees occasionally grow out of a single root, or that palm trees grow sometimes as odd trees' and sometimes in great thick clusters. If the latter construction is adopted, the reference would be to the fact that date-palms (and palms generally) and some other plants arise out of a single tap-root, while the majority of trees ause out of a net-work of roots that spread out extensively. Here is adaptation to soil and water conditions.—another Sign or wonder of Creation.

1807. The date-palm, the crops of lood-grains, and the grape-vine are all fed by the same kind of water: yet how different the harvests which they yield! And that applies to all vegetation. The fruit or eatable produce may vary in shape, size, colour, flavour, etc., in endless variety.

1808. After seeing the Signs in nature and the Signs in revelation, it is indeed strange that people should deny their Creator. But if they admit the Signs of the Creator. Who works marvels before their very eyes every day, why should they doubt that when they are reduced to disst, they can be raised up again? If one creation is possible, what difficulty can there be in accepting a renewed creation? It becomes then a question of an obstinate and rebellious will, for which the punishment is described.

1809. A glal. yokes (of servitude): Cf vn. 157 and n. 1128. The punishment may be conceived of in two stages: immediately, yokes of servitude to superstition, falsehood, etc., as against the freedom in Faith: and finally, the Fire which burns the very soul.

1810. The Unbelievers by way of a taunt say: "If there is a punishment, let us see it come down now." The answer to it is threefold. (I) Why do you want to see the punishment rather than the mery of God? Which is better? (2) Have you not heard in history of terrible punishments for evil? And have you not before your very eyes seen examples of wickedness brought to book? (3) God works not only in justice and punishment, but also in mercy and forgiveness, and mercy and orgiveness come first.

1811, After all the Signs that have just been mentioned it is mere fractiousness to say, "Bring down a Sign." Mustafa brought Signs and credentials as other Prophets did, and, like them, refused to satisfy mere dide curiosity.

1812. The last sentence of this verse has usually been interpreted to mean that the Apostle's function was merely to warn, and that guidance was sent by God to every nation through its apostles. I think the following interpretation is equally possible: 'it is tistelf a Sign that Muşaffa should warn and preach and produce the Qur-an, and the guidance, as from God.'

1813. The female womb is just an example, a type, of extreme secrecy. Not even the female herself knows what is in the womb,—whether it is a male young or a female young, whether it is one or more, whether it is to be born short of the standard time or to exceed the standard time. But the most hidden and apparently unknowable things are clear to God's knowledge: there is no mere chance: all things are regulated by God in just measure and proportion. The general proposition comes in the last sentence: "every single thing is before His sight, in (due) proportion."

 الْتَقَالُ

1817. God is not intent on pynishment. He created man virtuous and pure; he gave him intelligence and knowledge; he surrounded him with all sorts of instruments of His grace and mericy. It, in spite of all this, man distorts his own will and goes against God's Will, yet is God's forgiveness open to him if he will take it. It is only when he has made his own sight blind and changed his own nature or soul away from the beautiful mould in which God formed it, that God's Wrath will descend on him and the favourable position in which God placed him will be changed. When once the punishment comes, there is no turning it back. None of the things which he relied upon—other than God—can possibly protect him.

1818. Here then is the climax to the answer of the sarcastic challenge of the Unbelievers for punishment, in language of great sublimity. Why look to evil rather than to good?—to punishment rather than to mercy?—to the fear in the force and fire of the lightning rather than to the hope of good and abundant crops in the rain which will come behind the lightning clouds?

1819. Nay, thunder itself, which may frighten you, is but a tame and beneficent force before Him, declaring His praises, like the rest of creation. THUNDER thus aptly gives the name to this Sūra of contrasts, where what we may think terrible is shown to be really a submissive instrument of good in God's hands.

1820. And the angels, whom we think to be beautiful creatures of power and glory nearest to God, yet feel reverence and awe even as they praise His holy name.

1821. Who is puny man, to call God in question? Cf. some variations on this theme in the Book of Job, itself an Arabian book,  $eg_n$  chapters 38 to 41,

1822, Hage struth; right; what is due, befitting, proper. All these meanings are to be understood here. If we worship anything other than God (whether it is idols, stars, powers of nature, spirits, or deifed men, or Self, or Power, or Wealth, Science or Art, Talent or Intellect), our worship is both foolish and futile.

1823. Without Faith, it is obvious that prayer of worship has no meaning whatever. It is but an aberration of the mind. But there is a deeper meaning. You may have faits faith, as in supersitions or in worshipping things other than God, as explained in the last note. In that case, 100, you are pursuing mere phantoms of the mind. When you come to examine it, it is mere imbecultiy or fullity. Worship and prayer are justified only to the One True God.

1824. There is much mystic meaning here, and indeed in the whole of this highly poetical S07a. Notice that the original of what I have translated "whatever being" is the personal pronoun man, nor mā. This then refers to beings with a personality, eg. angels, spirits, human beings, and possibly other things of objective (not necessarily material) existence, as contrasted with their Shadows or Simulacra or Appearances, or Phantasms, mentioned at the end of the verse. Both these Deings and their Shadows are subject to the Will of God. See notes 1823 and 1827.

1825. "Prostrate themselves": the posture means that they recognise their subjection to God's Will and Law, whether they wish it or not.

1826 "In spite of themselves". Satan and the Spirits of Evil. They would like to get away from the control of the All-good God, but they cannot, and they have to acknowledge His supremacy and lordship over them.

1827. Even the Shadows—creations of the Imagination, or projections from other things and dependent on the other things for their existence, as shadows are to substance—even such shadows are subject to God's Laws and Will, and cannot arise or have any effect on our minds except by His permission. The Shadows are longest and therefore most promnent when the sun is level, and tend to disappear as the sun approaches the zenth. But even when they are longest and most prominent, they are still subject to God's Will and Law. The sun itself in this connection has a mystic meaning, referring to Intelligence, true Insight, the divine Lisht.

16. Say: "Who is the Lord and Sustainer 1898 Of the heavens and the earth?" Say: "(It is) God." Say: "Do ye then take (For worship) protectors other Than Him, such as have No power either for good Or for harm to themselves?" 1839 Say: "Are the blind equal With those who see? Or the depths of darkness Equal with Light?" Or do they assign to God 1890 Partners who have created (Anything) as He has created. So that the creation seemed To them similar? Say: "God is the Creator Of all things : He is The One, the Supreme and Irresistible."

<sup>1830.</sup> This verse may be analysed into six parts, each two parts going together like question and answer. Each except the fifth part is introduced by the word "Say", which is equivalent in old Arabic to inverted commas. The fifth part, "or do they assign.....similar?" is not introduced by "Say", because it is in the indirect form.

<sup>(1)</sup> Who is the Lord and Sustainer of the Worlds? It is God. (2) And yet you worship other gods? No, no one can be equal to Him, any snore than darkness is equal to light. (3) Your other gods have created nothing by which you can be misled? No indeed; He is the only Creator, the One and Supreme.

<sup>1831.</sup> This verse is full of parables. (1) It is God Who sends rain and He sends it to all. See how it flows in different channels according to their capacities. Some are sluggish; some have a swift current. Some form great rivers and irrigate wide tracts of country; some are clear crystal streams, perhaps in hilly tracts, with beds of clean pebbles which you can see through the water. Some produce delicious edible fish: and some are infested by crocodiles or injurious monsters. And there are degrees and degrees among brooks, streams, lakes, rivers, and seas. So with the rain of God's mercy and the knowledge and wisdom and guidance which He sends. All can receive it. Different ones will respond according to their capacities. (2) In the physical world, water is pure and beneficial. But froth and soum will gather according to local conditions. As the floods will carry off the scum and purify the water, so will the flood of God's spiritual mercy carry away our spiritual scum and purify the water. (3) The froth may make a great show on the surface, but it will not last. So will there for forthy knowledge, which will disappear, but God's Truth will endure.

Form that (ore) which they heat use In the fire, to make ornaments' Or utensils therewith, There is a scum likewise. Thus doth God (by parables) Show forth Truth and Vanity. For the scum disappears Like froth cast out; While that which is for the good Of mankind remains On the earth. Thus doth God Set forth parables.

Good things. But those Who respond not to Him,—

Will the reckoning be terrible:
Their abode will be Hell,—
What a bed of misery!

C. 115.—The seeing and the blind are not alike:
(XIII. 19-31.) Nor are those blessed with Faith and those without.

The former seek God, and attain Peace and blessedness in their hearts, And a final Home of rest: the latter Are in a state of Curse, and their End Is terrible. If God in His wisdom Postpones retribution, it is for a time. His promise never fails: it will come To pass in His own good time. In all things it is for Him to command.

SECTION 3.

 Is then one who doth know That that which hath been ٠ * أَفَرَنِعَنَا لِمُأَثَّمًا <sup>1832.</sup> In continuation of the last note, the fourth parable is that of metal ores : (4) the ore is full of metal ores. (4) the ore is full of metal or house admixture, but the fire will separate the gold from the dross (or ornaments, or (3) some metal of household untilty, with which you make every-day utensits, which the fire will separate from admixtures which you do not want. So the fire of God's test, either by adversity or by affluence, will search out the true metal in us and reject the dross. It will show us what is valuable or what is useful, from all sorts of seum and vanity which we collect and mesall knowledges.

Revealed unto thee From thy Lord is the Truth, Like one who is blind? 1884 It is those who are Endued with understanding That receive admonition;—

- 20. Those who fulfil the Covenant Of God and fail not In their plighted word:
- 21. Those who join together
  Those things which God
  Hath commanded to be joined, 1855
  Hold their Lord in awe,
  And fear the terrible reckoning;
- 23. Gardens of perpetual bliss:
  They shall enter there,
  As well as the righteous
  Among their fathers, their spouses,

1834. In this section the contrast between Faith and Righteousness on the one hand and Insidelity and Evil on the other is set out. The righteous man is known as one who (1) receives admonition: (2) is true to his convenants; (3) follows the universal Religion of Faith and Practice joined together; (4) is patient and persevering in seeking God; and in practical matters he is known to he (5) regular in prayer; (6) generous in true charty, whether open or secret; and (7) not revenge-ful, but anxious to turn off evil with good, thus breaking the chain of evil which tends to perpetuate itself.

1835. That is, join faith with practice, love of God with love of man, and respect for all Prophets alike, i.e. follow the universal Religion, and not odd bits of it.

1836. Their journey in this life was at best a sojourn. The final Bliss is their eternal Home, which is further prefigured in the two following verses.

And their offspring: wat
And angels shall enter unto them
From every gate
(with the salutation):

- 24. "Peace unto you for that ye Persevered in patience! Now How excellent is the final Home!"
- 25. But those who break
  The Covenant of God, after Having plighted their word thereto,
  And cut asunder those things hiss
  Which God has commanded
  To be joined, and work mischief
  In the land;—on them
  Is the Curse; for them
  Is the terrible Home! home
- 26. Sod doth enlarge, or grant
  By (strict) measure, the Sustenance was
  (Which He giveth) to whomso
  He pleaseth. (The world!) rejoice
  In the life of this world:
  But the life of this world
  Is but little comfort
  In the Hereafter. 1811

۞ائتُدَيْنِسُطُ اُلِرَزِقَ لِمِنَ يَشَاهُ وَيَعْدِرُّ وَفَيْحُوا إِلْكِيَّوْهُ الدُّنْيَا وَمَاأَكْيِكُو ءُّالدُّنْيَا فِالْكِيْرُودُ إِلاَّمِنَكُمُّ

<sup>1837.</sup> The relationships of this life are temporal, but love itt righteousness is eternal. In the love and Gardens of Bliss the righteous will be re-united with all the senear and dear once whom they loved, provided only that they were righteous alor; for in eternity nothing else counts. Blood-relationships and marriage relationships create certain physical bonds in this life, which may lead to much good, and possibly also to evil. All fat is physical or evil will go. But the good will come forth with a new meaning in the final Reckoning. Thus ancestors and descendants, husbands and wives, brothers and sisters (for Zurriyai includes them), whose love was pure and sanctified, will find new bliss in the perfecting of their love and will see a new and mystic meaning in the old and ephemeral bonds. Can we wonder at Jacob's re-union with Joseph, or that of Moses with Aaron, or of Muhammad Muhafa with the Lady Khadija? In fact all the Righteous will be re-united in the Hereafter (xil. 101).

<sup>1839.</sup> This is in contrast to the state of the blessed, described in xiii. 22-24 above. The Curse is the opposite of the Bliss, and the Terrible Home is the opposite of the Eternal Home, the Gardens of perpetual bliss.

<sup>1840</sup> God, the Sustainer and Cherisher of all His creatures, gives sustenance to all,—the sustenance including all means for their physical, moral, intellectual and spiritual growth and development according to their needs and capacities. To some the grants it in abundance; to others He gives it in strict measure. No one can question Him, for His Will is supreme, and it is the measure of all good.

<sup>1841.</sup> Cf. ix. 38. The meaning here may also be: This present life is just a furniture, a convenience a stepping stone, a probation, for the life to come. In itself it is less important than the Hereafter.

SECTION 4.

- 27. 所 he Unbelievers say: "Why Is not a Sign sent down To him from his Lord?" 1844 Say: "Truly God leaveth, To stray, whom He will; But He guideth to Himself Those who turn to Him In penitence,—
- 28. "Those who believe, and whose hearts
  Find satisfaction in the remembrance
  Of God: for without doubt
  In the remembrance of God
  Do hearts find satisfaction."
- 29. "For those who believe And work righteousness, Is (every) blessedness, <sup>1844</sup> And a beautiful place Of (final) return."
- 30. Me hus have We sent thee Amongst a People before whom (Long since) have (other) Peoples (Gone and) passed away; to order that thou mightest Rehearse unto them what We Send down unto thee by inspiration;

- 1842. The question is repeated from xiii. 7 above; for the line of reasoning there suggested in answer is now completed, and another line of reasoning is now taken up. God provides every guidance for those who turn to Him in perhience, but He will leave those to wander astray who deliberately close their eyes and their hearts to His grace and the comfort that comes from remembering Him and celebrating His praises.
- 1843. The Sign or Miracle is not something external: it is something internal, something in your mind, heart, and soul. It depends on your inner spiritual experience. If you turn to God, that light, that experience, will come. If you do not, God will not force you.
- 1844. "Blessedness": Table 'an internal state of satisfaction, an inward joy which is difficult to describe in words, but which reflects itself in the life of the good man, through good and ill fortune, through good report and evil. And then, there is always the final goal to which his eyes are turned, the beautiful Home of rest in the Hereafter, after this life's struggles are over. That goal is God Himself,
- 1845. Our Prophet came later in time than other Prophets, to complete their Message and universalise Religion. And certainly it is after his age that the process of the unification of the world began. That process is not complete yet, but is proceeding apace.

Yet do they reject (Him). The Most Gracious! Sav: "He is my Lord! There is no god but He! On Him is my trust. And to Him do I turn !" ISSE

31. If there were a Qur-an With which mountains were moved.

Or the earth were cloven asunder. Or the dead were made to speak. (This would be the one!) But, truly, the Command is With God in all things ! thin Do not the Believers know. That, had God (so) willed, He could have guided All mankind (to the Right)?

But the Unbelievers, -never Will disaster cease to seize Them for their (ill) deeds. Or to settle close to their homes. Until the promise of God Come to pass, for, verily, God will not fail In His promise.1868

C. 116,-The mockery of God's apostles is an old game (xiii, 32.43.) Of the world. But God's Truth will come

> To its own in good time. The End Of the righteous is their Home of Bliss. And they rejoice in the revelations They receive. The Messengers of God Take their due share in the life Of the world; they win through by God's grace Against all the plots of the world. Their witness is from God, through His revelation.

1846. Faith tells us that no amount of opposition from Unbelievers can ever stop God's Plan

1847. Everything is possible and in God's power. His Plan is beneficent and all-embracing. But it is not for His creatures to dictate to Him, or demand what He should do, or how He should do it, The Command is with God in all things. The Believers know His omninotence, and they also know that He will order His world for the best.

1848. Let not the Unbelievers think that if they seem to prosper for a time, that is the end of the matter. They are warned about three things. (1) Their ill deeds must carry evil consequences for them all the time, though they may not perceive them for a certain time. (2) Their homes, their places of resort, the circles in which they move, will also be haunted by their ill deeds and their consequences. For evil makes a complex of its environment. The walls of Jericho, when they fall, must bring down all Jericho in its ruins. (3) The ultimate Disaster, the final Reckoning, must come. for God never fails in His promise. True values must eventually be restored : the good to the good, and the evil to the evil.

The Commentators draw illustrations from the life of the Apostle, his exile from Mecca, and his restoration A similar miracle works in all history. But the Command is with God, 1850. The punishment was in many cases deferred. But when it did come, how terrible and exemplary it was!

1851, Cf. xii. 40. 'You have but to name your talse gods, and you will see that they are nothing hut names. There is no reality behind them, whereas God is the One great Reality. He penetrates everything through and through and knows all things. Do you dare to tell Him of something on earth that He does not know? Or is it just a trick or a show of words?

1852. All pretences and fancies seem attractive to their inventors, but alast they are a great obstruction to the Path of Religion and Truth. However, if by their contumacy, they have cut themselves of from God's grace, who can guide them or reclaim them from their errors?

1853. The consequences of sin may be felt in this life itself, but they are nothing compared to the final penalties in the life to come.

(١٣) سورة الأعد

@وَكَذَٰلِكَ أَنْزَلْنَهُ مُحْكُمًا

1854. For the comprehensive meaning of the root akala (literally "to eat"), see v. 69, n. 776. In its derived meaning it means fruit and enjoyment of all kinds, spiritual as well as other. The joys of the aven are not like the joys of the earth, which fade away or cloy. The joys of heaven are pure, lasting, and without any of the drawbacks which we associate with the joys of the sense.

1855. Zillun: Interally shade; hence, shelter, protection, security. All these meanings are implied. Shade is one of the delights of a garden. Cf. iv. 57, and n. 579.

1836. In this, as in other places, the Fire is contrasted with the Garden, as Misery is contrasted with Bliss. We can also Imagine other incidents in contrast with those of the Garden; e.g., with the Fire will be drought, aridity, thirst, instead of beautiful rivers; pain and suffering, instead of perpetual delight; no protection against the fierceness of the heat, as contrasted with the cool shades ever deepening as you proceed in the Garden.

1857. The Book: in a general sense, Revelation. "Those to whom the Book hath been given are both (I) the People of the Book of previous revelations, who study the new Revelation in Arabic without prejudice and Band in it confirmation of what their ancestors had received; and (2) the Muslims who receive the Qur-an with such spiritual joy.

1838. Abrab (plural of hizb)=parties, sects, troops, clans. The reference may be to the clans mentioned in xxx. 20 and 22 (that whole Stra is called Abrab). But we can understand it in a perfectly general sense. Among all sections of the people there are persons who would receive a portion of God's Truth but reject whatever does not suit them or fall in with their selfish aims or vain desires. The proper answer to them is: Surely, God's command is universal,—to worship and serve Him and refuse to bend the knee to any other; the man of God finds his staff and support in it; but he must invite all to share in its blessings; it came from God, and to God shall we all return.

1859. The Qur-an is in Arabic; therefore the Arabs, among whom it was promulgated, could have no difficulty in understanding its precepts and using it in judging of right and wrong in all their affairs. But it is also universal; therefore no one should give preference to his own vaih fancies against this authoritative declaration.

In Arabic. Wert thou to follow Their (vain) desires after the knowledge Which hath reached thee, Then wouldst thou find Neither protector nor defender 15.34 Against God.

مَّا ذُرِّيَّكَ يُعْصَنِّ ٱلَّذِّي يَهِ

1860. Cf, ii 120. The variation is in the single word "Wag" here in place of "Nagtr" in ii. 120. In each case the apt word is chosen not only for the rhythm in its own passage but for the general meaning in the Argument.

1881. All the apostles of whom we have any detailed knowledge, except one, had wives and children. The exception is Jesus the son of Mary. But his life was incomplete; his ministry barely lasted three years; his mission was imited; and he was not called upon to deal with the many-studed problems that arise in a highly organized society or State. We pay equal respect to him, because he was God's Messenger; but that is not to say that his Message covert she same universal ground as that of Muştafa. There is no reproach for a normal human being if he lives a normal human life; there is glory if he beautiles it and sets a nobler example of virtue than other men, as did Muştafa.

1862. No apostle performed any Miracle or showed forth any "Signs," except as God willed. God's Will (MashSyul) is an all-wise, universal Plan, which is not formed for the benefit of one tribe or millat or of one age or country (see also next verse). The greatest Miracle in history was and is the Qur-an. We can apprehend its beauty and grandeur to-day as much as did the people of Muştal's day,—even more, as our collective knowledge of nature and of God's creation has increased.

1863. Kitāb; I have translated "a Book (revealed)"; but it can aslo mean "a Law decreed." or "a Decree established." Ultimately the meaning is the same; for each age, according to God's wisdom, His Message is renewed.

1864, Umm-ul-Kitäb; Mother of the Book; the original foundation of all revelation; the Essence of God's Will and Law. . Cf. iii. 7, and n. 347.

(Before it is all accomplished).
Thy duty is to make

It is Our part

1865. In the Aposite's ministry at Mecca, the Most stift-necked opposition came from the seat and centre of power in Mecca. The humbler people—the firing of Meccan society—came in readily, as also did some tribes round about Mecca. After the Hijrat there was a haid struggle between Mecca and Medina, and at last the bloodless conquest of Mecca in A.H. 8 made the Pagan structure finally collapse, though it had already been supped to its foundations. So generally, Truth finds easiest entrance through the humble and lowly, and not in the beginning at the head-quarters of power, but in the fulness of time it makes its way everwhere with tressible force.

1866. Cf. 11i 54 and n. 393.

. 1867 The enemies of Islam have to acknowledge that Mustafa was a great and noble character, but they deny his apostleship. He could point to his credentials from God in the work which he achieved, and the Qur-An which he brought.

1888 That is, those who have knowledge of revelation generally will recognise God's revelation in the holy Qur-ān. An alternative reading is "min "inds'-hi", which is written the same in Arabic, with only three rowel points different. If we adopt that, the last clause will be: "and from Him is (all) knowledge of the Book ": i.e, 'as all knowledge of the Book comes from God, the Qur-ān also bears witness to me'.

INTRODUCTION TO SURA XIV (Ibrahim).

For the chronology and the general argument of this  $S\bar{u}ra$  in the series  $S\bar{u}ras$  x, to xv, see Introduction to S, x.

The special subject-matter of this Sūra is a continuation of the concluding portion of the last Sūra, which explained how God's revelation gains ground in spite of selfish men's opposition Here illustrations are given from the story of Moses and Abraham, and Abraham's Prayer for Mecca forms the core of the Sūra.

Summary.—Revelation leads man from darkness to light. It comes to each nation in its own language and for its own special circumstances. So was it with Moses and other apostles. There was a conflict of evil with good, but evil was destroyed. Parable of the Goodly Tree (xiv. 1-27, and C. 117).

Why will not men receive God's grace? Why will they choose to go astray? Abraham prayed to be saved from initidelity, himself and his posterity, and he prayed for Mecca, the city of the new revelation through Arabia. Good and Evil will find their proper retribution, and God's Plan of Unity will prevail (xiv. 28-32, and C. 118)

C. 117.—Revelation leads mankind from the depths (xiv. 1-27) Of darkness into light. It comes
To every age and nation in its own
Language. So was it before; so is it
Always. The apostles were doubted,
Insulted, threatened, and persecuted,
But their trust was sure in God.
It is Evil that will be wiped out.
God's Truth is as a goodly tree,
Firmly established on its roots,
Stretching its branches high and wide,
And bearing good fruit at all times.

1869. For these Mystic Letters see Introduction to S. x.

1870. It is instaled on that every apostle speaks not from himself but from God. His leading into the light is but by the grace and mercy of God, not by any power of his own, or by any merit of those who hear him.

1871, In this and the next verse where the sentence is completed, three qualities of God are mentioned, viz., (I) His exalted position above all Creation; (2) His goodness, which entitles Him, and Him alone, to Praise; and (3) His Power in all heaven and earth. Thus He stands in no need of man's worship; His goodnessis all for the good of man (and His creatures); and His control over His creatures is complete; so He can carry out His Will and Plan.

1872. See the last note. That being the case, in what a sad plight are those who reject the Faith and Grace offered to them, and draw down on themselves all the terrible consequences of that rejection.—the Wrath to come!

1873. The Unbelievers are here characterised in three ways: (1) they love this ephemeral life and its vanities more than the true Life which goes into the Hereafter; (2) they not only harm themselves but mislead others; (3) their own cronked minds search for something crooked in God's straight Path (Cf. vii. 45). But in doing so, they go fatther and farther from the Trutt.

1874. If the object of a Message is to make things clear, it must be delivered in the language current among the people to whom the apostite is sent. Through them it can reach all makind. Their is even a wider meaning for "language." It is not merely a question of alphabets, letters, or words. Each age or people—or world in a psychological sense—easts its thoughts in a certain mould or form. God's Message—being universal—can be expressed in all moulds and forms, and is equally valid and necessary for all grades of humanity, and diust therefore be explained to each according to his or her capacity or receptivity. In this respect the Quirân is marvellous. It is for the simplest as well as the most advanced.

1875. "Whom He pleases": the usual expression for Mushayat, the universal Will and Plan, which is all-wise and on the highest plane of goodness and right-considers.

1876 "The Days of God": the days when God's mercy was specially snown to them. Every day and every hour and minute, God's grace flows to us abundantly, but there are special events in personal or national history which may be commemorated as Red-letter Days. Those to the Israelites were set out in great detail in it. 30-b1 and in other places.

1877 Sabbār is the intensive form, and includes all the ideas implied in Sabr (ii, 45 and n, 6), and ii, 133 n, 137) in an untensive degree. Shabār and Shākir have in them the idea of appreciation, recognition, graitived as shown in ideeds of goodness and rightleousness. Both terms are applied to God 'as, well as to men. A slight distinction in shades of meaning may be noted. Shabār implies that the appreciation is even for the smallest favours and response on the other side; it is a mental attitude independent of specific facts. Shābār implies gigger and more specific hinas;

1878. Cf ii. 49. The reference back to Israel and Moses serves a double purpose—as an appeal to the People of the Book, and as a reminder to the Quraish of the favour now conferred on them by the coming among them of a greater Prophet than Moses.

1879. The various shades of meaning in Shukara are explained in n. 1877 above. Kajara im Plies : (1) to reject Faith, as in ii 6 and n. 30; (2) to be ungrateful for mercies and favours received, as here; (3) to resist God or Faith, as in iii. 13; (4) to deny (the Signs of God), as in iii. 21, or deny the mission of apostles, as in xiv. 9. Kalir in the most general sense may be translated "Unbeliever"

1880. Ingratitude not only in feeling or words, but in disobedience, and wilful rejection and rebellion. If the whole of you band together against God, you do not detract from God's power one atom, because God does not depend upon you for anything, and His goodness and righteousness and praiseworthiness cannot be called in question by your contumacy.

188]. Cf. in Milton's sonnet On his Blindness: "God doth not need either man's work or His own gifts!"

1882. Even the names of all the Prophets are not known to men, much less the details of their story. If some "news" of them (for the word translated "story" may also be translated "news") reaches us, it is to give us spiritual instruction for our own lives.

11. Their apostles said to them: "True, we are human Like yourselves, but God Doth grant His grace )883. That is, either that the Unbelievers metaphorically put their hands up to the mouths of the Prophets to try to prevent them from proclaiming their Message, or that the Unbelievers put up their flagers to their own mouths, as much as to say "Don't listen to them," or title their own fingers in token of incontinent rage. Whatever construction we adopt, the meaning is that they were intolerant of their apostles, even as the Quraish were intolerant of Muntafa and did all they could to suppress God's Truth.

1884. Cf. xi. 62. The distinction between Shakk and raib may be noted. Shakk is intellectual doubt, a doubt as to fact: is if so, or is it not? Nath is something more than intellectual doubt; a suspicion that there is fraud or deception; something that upsets your moral belief, and causes a disquiet in your soul. In lii, 30, it is used as equivalent to "calamity" or "disaster", some punishment or evil. Both kinds of doubts and suspicions are hinted at axainst men of God.

1883. The spostles (generally) clear both kinds of doubt. "You cannot doubt the existence of God! Behold His works! We are not speaking for ourselves or deceiving you. We speak according to the Message of inspiration from God." Notice that the doubters had said to the Prophets, "Ye invite us." The Prophets say; "It is God Who invites you, and He does it to save you by His grace, and give you plently of time (but not indefinite time) for pentience and amendment."

1886. Inddelity is illogical and argues in a circle. If the apostle speaks of God, the Unbeliever says, "You are only a man!" "But I speak from God!" "Oh well I our ancestral ways of worship are good enough for us!" "What if they are wrong?" "What authority have you for saying so?" "The highest authority, that from God!" And so we come back full circle! Then the wicked rely on violence, but it recoils on them, and they perish.

<sup>1887.</sup> The arguments in a circle were explained in the last note, But Infidelity looks upon argument merely as an amusement. Its chief weapon is physical force. As its only belief is in materialism, it thinks that threats of force will put down the righteous. It offers the choice between exile and violence against conformity to its own standards of evil, which it thinks to be good. But Paith is not to be cowed down by Force. Its source of strength is God, and it receives the assurance that violence will perish ultimately by violence, and that Paith and Good must stand and be established. In fact the good must inherit the earth and the evil ones be blotted out.

<sup>1888. &</sup>quot;Fear" means here "have present before their minds something which should cause them fear, so that they should shape their conduct in order to avoid the ill consequences of wickedness."

18. Me parable of those who Reject their Lord is that Their works are as ashes, 1892. On which the wind blows Furiously on a tempestuous day: No power have they over Aught that they have earned: That is the straying Far, far (from the goal).

1889, Cf. vni. 19. I have assumed that "they" in this verse is the same as "them" in the preceding verse, i.e., the ungodly. Hoping for victory they forced a decision, and they got it—against themselves. Or they challenged a punishment, and it came in good time. Some Commentators construe "they" here to mean "the apostles": in that case the verse would mean: "The Apostles prayed for a victory and decision, and the ungodly were frustrated in their efforts to suppress the Truth."

1890, Cf. xi. 59.

1891. A graphic and deterrent picture, from the preaching of the earlier Prophets, of unrelieved horror of the torments of Hell. The door of escape by nihilation is also closed to them.

1892. Note the fulness of the parable. The works of the ungodly are in themselves light and unsubstantial like ashes: they are the useless rubbish that remains out of the faculties and opportunities which they have misused by burning them up. Further, the ashes are blown about hither and thither by the wind: the ungodly have no compass, direction, or purpose that can stand. The wind, too, which blows on them is no ordinary wind, nor the day on which they seek to enjoy the fruits of their labours an ordinary tranquil day: a furious gale is blowing, for such is the Wrath of God. They have neither internal peace nor external gain. In the scattering of the ashes they lose control even of such things as they might have earned but for their misdeeds. Their whole nature is contaminated. All their wistes go astray. They are carried so far, far away from what was in their minds. What did they aim lar, and what did they achieve?

- 19. Seest thou not that God Created the heavens and the earth In Truth? hats If He so will. He can remove you And put (in your place) A new Creation?

They will reply, " If we Had received the guidance ING Of God, we should have Given it to you: to us It makes no difference (now) Whether we rage, or bear (These torments) with patience: For ourselves there is no way Of escape."

SECTION 4.

22. And Satan will say When the matter is decided: 1887 "It was God Who gave you A promise of Truth: I too Promised, but I failed In my promise to you.

1893, Hagg: Truth, Right, Righteousness, True proportions, Reality. God's creation is not to he trifled with. It is built on righteousness, and those who do not obey its laws must give place to others who do. This warning is repeated again and again in history and in revelation, Cl. vi. 73,

1895. When the time for judgment comes, there are two kinds of disillusionment waiting for the ungodly. (1) Those who were misled and failed to see that each soul bears its own personal responsibility (it. 134) and cannot shift it on to others, will turn to those who misled them, in the hope that they might intercede for them or do something to help them. They receive a plain answer as in the latter part of this verse. (2) Those who relied on Satan, the Power of Evil. His answer (in xiv. 22 below) is (rank, cynical and brutal,

18%. Those whose power or specious intelligence or influence misled them-such as false priests or leaders-will find themselves in a parlous state. How can they help others? They themselves failed to profit from God's guidance, and they can with some justice retort that they put them in the wrong path as they followed it themselves !

1897. After the Judgment, Evil declares itself in its true colours. Frankly it says: 'I deceived you. The promise of God was true, but you believed me rather than God. I had no power to force you. I had but to call you, and you came running after me. You must blame vourseives. Did you think I was equal with God? I know too well that I was not and never could be. If you did wrong, you must suffer the Penalty."

I had no authority over you Except to call you, but ye Listened to me: then Reproach not me, but reproach Your own souls. I cannot listen To your cries, nor can ye Listen to mine. I reject we Your former act in associating Me with God.

For wrong-doers there must be A grievous Penalty."

- 23. TBut those who believe And work righteousness Will be admitted to Gardens Beneath which rivers flow,—To dwell therein for aye With the leave of their Lord. Their graeting therein Will be: "Peace!" 1980
- 24. Seest thou not how God sets forth a parable?—
  A goodly Word 1000
  Like a goodly tree,
  Whose root is firmly fixed,
  And its branches (reach)

1898. See the last note. An alternative interpretation of this sentence may be: "I had already beforehand rebelled against God with Whom ye associated me."

1899. How this contrasts with the misery and the mutual self-recriminations of the ungodly!

1900. "Goodly word" is usually interpreted as the Divine Word, the Divine Message, the True Religion. It may also be interpreted in a more general sense as a word of truth, a word of goodness or kindness, which follows from a true appreciation of Religion. For Religion includes our duty to God and our duty to man. The "evil word" is opposite to this: false religion, blasphemy, false speech, or preaching or teaching unkindness and wrong-doing. The Word, in mystic language, is the root of the Deed, and is identified with the Deed.

1901. The goodly tree is known for: (1) its beauty: it gives pleasure to all who see it: (2) its stability; it remains firm and unshaken in storms, because its roots are firmly fixed in the earth; (3) its wide compass; its branches reach high, and it catches all the sunshine from heaven, and gives shade to countless birds in its branches and men and animals beneath it, and (4) its abundant fruit, which it yields at all times. So is the Good Word, it is as beautiful as it is true. It shides in all the, changes and chances of this life, and even beyond (see verse 27 below); it is never shaken by sorrow or what seems to us calamity; its roots are deep down in the bed-rock facts of life. Its reach is universal, above, around, below; it is illuminated by the divine light from heaven, and its consolation reaches countless beings of all grades of life. Its fruit—the enjoyment of its blessings—is not confined to one season or one set of circumstances; furthermore the fortunate man who is the vehicle of that word has no self-pride; he attributes all its goodness, and his act in spreading it, to the Will and Leave of God. Cf. the New Testament Parable of the Sower (Matt. iv. 14-20) or of the Mustard-seed (Matt. iv. 30-32). In this Parable of the Qur-an there are fewer words and more spiritual meaning, and the emphasis is one more essential things.

C. 118.—But the evil not only choose evil
(xiv. 28-52.) For themselves but mislead others
To perdition. The godly should learn
From the Signs of God all around them,
And be on their guard against all
That is false. So Abraham prayed
Not only for his posterity, but for all:
For he foresaw the universality
Of God's Message in Islam.
That leads to the mystic doctrine
Of Oneness, which will be seen
In its fulness on the Great Day
When a new Earth and a new Heaven
Will proclaim the end of Evil
And the adjustment of all this life's accounts.

1902. The evil tree is the opposite of the goodly free. The parellelism of contrast can be followed out in all the details of the last note.

1903. His Will and Plan may be above comprehension, but will prevail over all things. It is not like the will of man, who may plan good things but is not necessarily able to carry them out.

1904. There is a particular and a general manning. The particular meaning is understood to be a reference to the Meccan Pagans who turned the House of God into a plane for the worsh. If not rible idols and the practice of unseemly rites and cuits. There is no real difficulty in accepting this as part of a late Meccan Straleven without supposing it to be a prophecy. The Meccan Lagans had turned Religion into a blasphemous superstition, and were misguiding their people, the might be represented by the superstition and were missing the property of the description of the property of the prop

The general meaning is also clear. Selish men, when they selze power, want worship to 'titemselves or their Phantasies, in derogation of the true God. Power, which should have been an instrument of good, becomes in their hands an instrument of evil. They and their people rush is along to perdition. "These be thy gods, O Israel!" has been a cry repeated again and again in the story, in the face, or at the back, of men of God!

1903. Putting ourselves back in the position in which the Muslim community found them. I say a lecca just before the Hijrat, we can imagine how much encouragement and consolation the redder from the preaching, the Fauth, and the steadards character of Alustafa. Intolerant persecution as the order of the day; neither the life nor the property or reputation of the Muslims was said. They are asked to had strength and tranquility in prayer and in helping each other according their meeds and resources.

1906. Here, as elsewhere, "Sustenance" is to be taken in the literal as well as the metasense. There were many among the Muslims why were poor, or slaves, or depressed, but they were deprived of the means of livelihood on account of their Faith. They were to be face, (edit to and sheltered, by those who had means. There were those who were ignorant and needed spiritual sustenance: they were to be taught and strengthened by those to whom God had given knowled; and firmness of character. Charity was to be ordinarily secret, so as to cut out all show or part by and firmness also lest the enemy should dry up those sources by unprincipled violence; but there must be much that had to be open and organised, so that all the needy could know where to go to be "in eved."

1997. The great Day of Reckoning would be one on which all values would be canaged. Wealth, as understood in this world, would in longer count. Should we not therefore use any wealth we have in this life, to give here and receive there? But includes all barganing—barrer, purchase and sale, etc. In this world, where wealth has some value, let us spend it and get for ourselves "treasures in beaven." In the next life each man will stand go its merits and personal responsibility. One man cannot help another. Let us here help each other by become true and righteous, so that our personal account may be favourable there.

1984. We must realise that behind all our strength, skill, and intelligence there is the power and good-ness of God. Who gave us all these things. Must can understand and control the forces of nature to as to bring them to his own service: he can only do so, because (1) he has got these gifts from God, and (2) God has fixed definite laws in nature, of which he can take advantage by God's command and permission. He has been made Vicegerent on earth (ii 30): God commanded the highest ocalures to how down to Adam (ii 31). Man, by God's command, can use rain to produce food for himself; make ships to stall the seas; use rivers as highways, and our canals for traffic and tringatio. Not only this, but even the heavenly bodies can (by God's command) contribute to his needs (see next verse).

John, The sun gives out heat, which is the source of all life and energy on this planet, and botturm iteral in the shape of light, health, and other blessings. The sun and the moon together produce hides, and are responsible for atmospheric changes which are of the highest importance in the life of man. The succession of Day and Night is due to the apparent daily course of the sun through the skies; and the cool light of the moon performs other services different from those of warm day-light. Because there are laws here, which man can understand and calculate, he can use all such things for his own service, and in that sense the beavenly bodies are themselves made subject to him by God's command.

- 1910. Sincere and true prayer in faith is answered by God. Thus He gives us everything which a wise and benevolent Providence can give.
- 1911. I have tried to render the intensive forms of the Arabic by what I consider their near equivalents here: the phrase "given up to injustice and ingratitude" suggests habitual ignoring of just values and ingratitude for the innumerable gifts and favours which God has showered on manking.
- 1912. This Prayer of Abraham, the True in Faith, the progenitor of the Semitic peoples and the Prototype of their Religion, is introduced in this place, to illustrate the points referred to in the preceding action, xiv, 31-34, vic., how the new Revelation through the Karba bears out the universal Revelation of Prayer and Charity, Love of God and man, Recognition of God's handwork in nature, and insistence on man's turning away from false worship and ingratitude to God. Notice the four divisions into which it falls: (1) verses 35-36 are spoken by Abraham as on his own behalf ("O my Lord"); (2) verse 47-38 are spoken on behalf of his progeny ("O our Lord") but with special reference to the elder branch, the children of IsmaTi; (3) verses 39-40 are again a personal appeal, but both branches of his family, vic., the sons of temd'il and Issac, are expressly mentioned; (9) verse 41 is a Prayer for himself, his parents, and all Believers, typliying that in the universality of Islam all nations are to be blessed. Jerusalem, for the Mosaic Law and the Gospel of Jesus, was the centre and symbol for the Jewish race, though of course all God's Truth is universal; Mecca, the centre of the Arab race, was to throw off its tribal character and become universal, in spice of the Meccans themselves,
- 1913. Cf. ii. 125-129. Abraham (with Ismā'tl) built the Ka'ba, and Abraham asks a blessing on his handiwork and forgiveness for such lapses into idolatry as both branches of his family might fall into
- 1914. The Meccan valley is enclosed by hills on all sides, unlike Medina, which has level cultivated plains. But just because of its natural isolation, it is fitted to be a centre for Prayer and Praise.

1915. Cf. ii. 126, and n. 128. (The "Fruits" are there explained.) The righteous, though they have sustenance, both in a literal and figurative sense, require also the love and sympathy of their fellow-men.

1916. In Abraham's prophetic mind was the secret and open enmity or contempt which the Children of Israel were to have for the Children of Isma'll (Arabs). He prays to God that they may be united in Islam, as indeed they were, except a small remnant,

1917. Abraham was 100 years old when Isaac was born (Gen. xxi. 5); and as Jama'il was 13 years old when Abraham was 99, (Gen. xxii. 24-25), Isma'il was also a son of his father's old age, having been born when Abraham was 86 years old. The younger son's progeny developed the Faith of Israel and that of Christ; the elder son's progeny perfected the more universal Faith of Islam, the Faith of Abraham the True.

1918. Abraham prays for both branches of his family, having a wider vision than some of the later Children of Israel, 1919. Read again n. 1912 above. Having prayed for his progeny, Abraham now prays for God's grace on himself, his parents, and the whole Brotherhood of Faith, irrespective of family or race or time, to be perfected in the ideal of Islam.

<sup>1921.</sup> My parents. Abraham's father was an idolater ixim, 26; vs. 74). Not only that, but he persecuted the Faith of Unity and threatened Abraham with stoning and exile (xix, 46); and he and his people cast him into the Fire to be burned (xxi. 32, 68). Yet Abraham's heart was tender, and he prayed for forgiveness for, his father because of a promise which he had made (ix 114), though he remounced the land of his fathers (Chaldea).

<sup>1922</sup> At the final Reckoning, all that may seem inequality or injustice in this world will be redrassed. But the ments of the best of us will need God's Grace to establish us in that lasting Felicity which is promised to the righteous. And Abraham, as the father of Prophecy, prayed for all.—for the Universal Faith perfected in Islam.

<sup>1923.</sup> A picture of horror. The evil ones, when they realise the situation, will be dazed: theireyes will stare without expression, and never move back; their necks will be outsiretched; their heads uplifted in terror of the Judgment from on High; and their hearts become empty of all hope or intelligence as the physical heart might become empty of blood when the circulation stops. In this state they will press forward to Judgment.

<sup>1924.</sup> Zausāi,—decline from the zenith, as that of the sun; decline from the highest point reached by a heavenly body in its course through the sky. The ungodly are apt to think that their power will remain in the ascendant, on account of some material advantages given them temporarily by God, but they are constantly receiving warnings in history and revelation and from the example of others before them. There is a warning to the contemporary Pagan Meccans here; but the warning is perfectly general, and for all time.

- 50. Their garments 1927 of liquid pitch, 1938 And their faces covered with Fire;

1925. "A new earth and a new heaven" refers to (1) the entirely changed conditions at the end of things as we know them, so that we can only have the new world described to us by symbols and metaphors as in the following verses; and (2) to the spintous world of changing valves even as time goes on, so that the judgment on man bogins gradually to take effect even while in externals he is in the phenomenal world, for in his inner being he is experiencing the effects, good or evil, of his conduct on earth. In the latter case, also, his mystic experience can only be described in exhibits.

1926. The Jetters will be their evil actions, thoughts, and motives, which they cannot shake off, as they could have shaken them off by repentance and amendment while there was yet time and opportunity to do so.

1927 Subhit; plural, Sarabit: a garment or coat of mail, breast plate; something covering the most vital parts of the body, like the shirt or the Indian kuria, 1928. Quivān: black pitch, a resinous substance exuding from certain kinds of trees like the terebinh or the pincs or distilled from wood or coal. It catches fire readily. Issuing from the upper garments (Sarabil) the filames soon cover the face, the most expressive part of man's essence or being. The metaphor of fetters (n. 1926) is now changed to that of pitch, which darkens and sets on fire the soul of man.

(١٤) سورة أبرأهيم

51. That God may requite Each soul according To its deserts; 1999 And verily God is Swift In calling to account, 1980

1929, Its deserts: i.e., according to what it earned by its own acts, good or evil, in its life of probation.  $^{\circ}$

1930. Surji is calling to account: We can understand this in two significations. (1) Let not the wicked think that because God, out of His infinite grace and mercy, greats respite, therefore the retrobution will be slow in coming. When the time comes in accordance with God's Plan and Wisdom, the retribution will come so swithly that the ungodly will be surprised and they will wish they could get more respite (xiv. 44; (2) On the great Day of Reckoning, let it not be supposed that, because there will be millions of souls to be judged, there will be any delay in judgment as in a human tribunal. It will be a new world and beyond the flight of Time. Or if a metaphor from time as we conceive it in this world can be taken, it will all be as it were in the twinkling of an eye (xiv. 7).

1931. Here is another aspect of the Truth of Unity. God being One, all justice is of one standard, for Truth is one, and we see it as one as soon as the scales of phenomenal diversity fall from our eyes. The one true Reality then emerges. Blessed are those who treasured this Truth in their souls already in their life of probation.

INTRODUCTION TO SÜRA XV (Hijr).

This is the last of the six Sūras of the A. L. M. series (x. to xv.). Its place in chronology is the late Meccan period, probably somewhere near the middle of that period. See Introduction to S. x., where will be found also an indication of the general subject-matter of the whole series in the gradation of Quranic teaching.

The special subject-matter of this Sura is the protection of God's Revelation and God's Truth. Evil arose from Pride and the warping of man's will, but God's Mercy is the antidote, as was proved in the case of Abraham and Lot, and might have been proved by the people of the Aika and the Hijr if they had only attended to God's "Signs". The Qur-an, beginning with the Seven Oft-repeated Verses, is the precious vehicle for the praises of God.

Summary.—God will guard His Revelation, in spite of the cavils of the Unbelievers; God is the source of all things; He knows His own people, whom He will gather to Himself (xv. 1-25, and C. 119).

How Evil arose through the pride of Iblis, to whom a respite was granted for a period; but neither fear nor evil will affect those who receive God's Message. (xv. 26-50, and C. 120).

The Mercy of God to Abraham was conveyed by the same messengers that were sent to destroy the people of Lot for their unspeakable crimes; Evil brought its retribution also on the Companions of the Wood (Aika) and of the Rocky Tract Hijr (xv. 51-84, and C. 121).

The Qur-an and its Suras teach you to celebrate God's praises, learn humility in worship, and serve God all your life (xv. 85-99, and C. 122).

1932. For these mystic letters, see Introduction to S0ra x.

1933, Ct x 1, and n, 1382.

1934. Note how appropriately the different phrases in which the Qur-an is characterised, bring out its different aspects as a Revelation. Let us just consider the phrases used at the beginning of the six A, L. M, Suras of which this is the last in order of arrangement. In x, I we read. "Ayats for verses or Signs) of the Book of Wisdom", the theme being the wonders of God's Creation, and its relation to His Revelation. In gi 1 we read, "a Book, with verses basic or fundamental, further explained in detail": the theme is God's lustice and punishment, to preserve the fundamental scheme of His Laws. In xii. I we read, "The Symbols (or verses) of the Perspicuous Book ": the wonderful unfolding of God's Plan is explained in Joseph's story. In xiii, 1 we read, "The Signs for verses) of the Book"; the contrasts in the modes of God's Revelation and its recention by man are pointed out, but not illustrated by detailed examples as in Joseph's perspicuous story. In xiv. 1 we read, "A Book......revealed.....to lead.....out of.....darkness into light": the theme being Abraham's praver for man to be rescued from the darkness of false worship into the light of Unity Here, in xv. 1 we read, "Ayats (or verses) of Revelation,-of a Qur an that makes things clear (or perspicuous)": the theme being an explanation of evil, and how God's Truth is protected from it.

1935. The time must nevitably come when those who allow themselves to be deceived by falsehood or deliberately break God's Law will find themselves in a terrible plight. They will then wish, ardently and again and again, that they had sought God's Will and walked in the light of Truth. That time may be early or late,—in this life, or at death, or at the Day of Judgment, but it must come. Man's own highest interest requires that he should awake to the Reality before it is too late for repentance.

1936, Literally, " to eat", C/, v, 69 and n, 776,

1937. The foolish and the wicked set great store by the pleasures of this world. In their pride they think they have all knowledge. In the fulness of knowledge they will see how wrong they were. Meanwhile those who have received the Light should not for a single moment wonder at the apparent prosperity of the ungodly in this world. They should leave them alone, confident in the goodness and justice of God.

1938 Kitābus malām: literāly, "a writing known". There are many shades of meaning implied (1) For every people, as for every individual, there is a definite Term assigned: their faculty of choice gives them the opportunity of moulding their will according to God's Will, and this identifying themselves with God's Universal Law. During that Term they will be given plenty or rope: after that Term is past, there will be no opportunity for repentance. (2) Neither the righteous northe ungodiy can hasten or delay the doom: God's Will must prevail, and He is Ali-Wise. (3) The destruction of a people is not an arbitrary punishment from God : the people bring it on themselves by their own choice; for the fixed Law or Decree of God is always made known to them beforehand, and in many ways.

1939. Cf. vii. 34. Also see the last note.

1940. Musiafá was accused by the ungodly of being mad or possessed, because he spoke of higher things than they knew, and acted from motives purer and nobler than they could understand. So, in a minor degree, is the lot of all the righteous in the presence of an ungodly world. Their motives, actions, words, hopes, and aspirations are unintelligible to their fellows, and they are accused of being mad or out of their senses. But they know that they are on the right path, and it is the ungodly who are really acting against their own best interests.

1941. Cf. vi. 8-9, and notes 840, 841. On the part of the unbelievers, this is a more taunt. They need to in God nor in angels nor in revelation nor in any but material things. It is ridiculous to suppose that they could be taken seriously.

1942 Angels are not sent down to satisfy the whim or curlosity of the unbelievers. They are sent to bring inspiration to God's messengers and to execute God's decrees.

1943. If the angels were to appear before the ungodly, it would mean that they came to execute just punishment, and then there would be no hope of respite possible for the ungodly.

1944. The purity of the text of the Qur-an through thirteen centuries and a half is a foretaste of the eternal care with which God's Truth is guarded through all ages. All corruptions, inventions, and accretions pass away, but God's pure and holy Truth will never suffer eclipse even though the whole world morked at it and were beat on destroying it.

1945. Skiya un, plural of Ski'atun=a sect, a religious division. Mankind sees fragments of Truth at-a time, and is apt to fall into fragments and divisions. All true apostles of God come to reconcile these fragments or divisions, for they preach the true Gospel of Unity. So came Mupfals to bring back to Unity the many jarring sects among the Jews, Christians, and Pagans. His mission was held up to reflectle, but so was the mission of his predecessors. Mockery itself should not discourage the preachers of Truth,

1946. If evil and disbelief exist in the world, we must not be impatient or lose our own faith. We must recognise that if such things are permitted, they are part of the Universal Plan and purpose of God, Who is All-Wise and All-Good, but Whose wisdom and goodness we cannot fully fathom. One consolation we have, and that is stated in the next verse and the next note,

Of the ancients have passed

1947, Sects, divisions, and systems invented by men tend to pass away, but God's pure Truth of Unity endures for ever. This we see in history when we study it ou a large scale. Cl. the parable in xiv. 24-26. Khalat: I have translated it here in the same sense as in xiii. 30, x. 102, and other places. Some Commentators give it a slightly different shade of meaning. The other meaning is seen in xlvili, 23.

1948. Cf. vi. 35. The spiritual kingdom is open to all to enter. But the entrance is not a mere matter of physical movement. It is a question of a total change of heart. Evil must cease to be evil, before it can see or enjoy Good. If we could suppose Evil, like Bottom the weaver, to be "translated" or in some way carried up to heaven, it would only think that the Truth was an illusion, and the reality was mere witchery. The taint is in its very nature, which must hist be purified and rendered fit for the reception of light, truth, and bliss

1949. Evil having been described, not as an external thing, but as a laint of the soul, we have in this section a glorious account of the purity and beauty of God's Creation. Evil is a blot on it. not a normal feature of it. Indeed, the normal feature is the guard which God has put on it, to protect it from evil.

1950. In the countless millions of stars in the universe which we see, the first step in our astronomical knowledge is to find marvellous order, beauty, and harmony, on a scale of grandeur which we appreciate more and more as our knowledge increases. The first broad belt that we distinguish is the Zodiac, which marks the suns path through the heavens year after year and the limit of the wanderings of the moon and the planets. We make twelve divisions of it and call them Signs of the Zodiac. Each marks the solar path through the heavens as we see it, month after month. We can thus mark off the seasons in our solar year, and express in definite laws the most important facts in meteorology, agriculture, seasonal winds, and tides. Then there are the mansions of the moon, the mapping out of the Constellations, and the other marvellous facts of the heavens, some of which affect our physical life on this earth. But the highest lessons we can draw from them are spiritual. The author of this wonderful Order and Beauty is One, and He alone is entitled to our worship,

1951, Taking the physical heavens, we can imagine the supreme melody or harmony-the Music of the Spheres-guarded from every disturbing force. If by any chance any rebellious force of evil seeks to obtain, by stealth, a sound of that harmony to which all who make themselves consonant are freely invited, it is pursued by a shooting star, for there can be no consonance between evil and good.

1952. Rajim; driven away with stones, rejected, accursed. Cf. iii, 36.

1933. Spiritually speaking, order, beauly, harmony, light, and truth are repugnant to evil. It deliberately rejects them when offered freely as God's gifts. But its crooked nature loves to gain access by fraud or strakth. Its malevolent curnosity impels it to gain by stealth a sound of that harmony of which it is itself a negation. And its punishment is a flashing light, in itself most uncongenial to the powers of darkness, which are a negation of light. Notice that in the allegory the objective of Evil was to steal a hearing of Music: its punishment is therefore different—a flaming light which it did not seek. For both celestial harmony and celestial light are repugnant to the spirit of evil.

1954. A shooting star appears to be meant. Cf. xxxvis. 10.

1955. Majesty, order, beauty, and harmony are shown in all God's Creation, but especially in the heavens. Coming nearer to man. God's care for man and His goodness are shown (besides His other qualities) in His creation of the earth. In highly poetical language, the earth is described as spread out like a carpet, on which the eternal hills act as weights to keep it steady.

1956 And every kind of thing is produced on the earth in due balance and measure. The minral kingdom supports the vegetable, and they in their turn support the animal, and there is a link of mutual dependence between them. Excess is eliminated. The waste of one is made the food of another, and wire versa. And this in an infinite chain of gradation and inter-dependence.

1957. See last note. 'We provide sustenance of every kind, physical, mental, spiritual, etc., for you, (i.e., for mankind). But We do more. We provide for everyone of Our creatures. And there are those of which mankind is not even cognisant. We provide for them also. There are those who may at first sight appear hostile to man, or whom man may consider hostile, such as wild and noxious animals. They are Our creatures, and We provide for them also, as they are Our creatures. But there is due order and balance in the economy of Our universal Plan.

1999. All the wonderful gifts and forces and energiés which we see in the world around us have their sources and fountain-heads with God, the Creator and Sustainer of the Worlds. And what we see or perceive or imagine is just a small portion of what exists. That portion is sent out to us and to our world according to our needs or its needs from time to time as the occasion arises. It is strictly limited according to rule and plan. Its source is unhimited and inexhaustible. In the same way the forces which we see operating around us, in nature or in the spiritual world, according to laws which we can grasp and ascertain, are mere derived forces, in the 2nd, 3rd, or nth degree. Their source and ultimate fountain head is with God.

1960. Lousdays, planta of lagis, from locaba, to impregnate or fecundate the female date-palm by putting the pollen of the male tree on to the ovaries of the female tree. The date palm is unia sexual. The wind performs this office for many flowers. Here, by a bold metaphor, its fecundating quality is transferred to the clouds, which by means of rail produce all kinds of fruit, grain, and vegetation. The clouds as vapour are manipulated by the winds, which set up atmospheric currents resulting in condensation and the descent of rain. Note the appropriateness of the little particle "then", showing the connection of winds with rain.

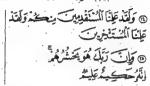

1961. Cf. the previous verse, and n. 1958. Man may store water in cisterns, tanks, lakes, and head waters of canals. But he has no control over its original sources, which are the clouds, which by the help of the winds, act as the grand distributors of water over wide spaces of the world's surface.

1962. This verse must be understood as furnishing an example of illustration of what is said in the last verse.

1963. Note how the argument has mounted up from xv. 16 onwards to xv. 21—from things most remote from man to things touching his inmost being, and each of them in its own way is a wonderful instance of God's glory and goodness, and the beauty, order, and harmony of His creation. First, the heavens, the zodiacal Signs, the stars, and the mysterious phenomena that we see above us; then the earth, and the perfect balance of lide and forces therein, with man as an important factor, but not the only factor; then, the inexhaustible sources of energy, of wi..ch God alone is the fountationable, but which come to us in measured proportions, as needed; and lastly, Life and Death itself, which will pass away but God will remain. A noble passage, and a fine vindication of God's wisdom and providence in dealing with His creatures.

1964. Literafty, "We ard the Heirs, or Inheritors," Cf. iii, 180: "To God belongs the heritage of the heavens and the earth." See also the latter part of n. 988 to vi. 165.

28. Pehold! thy Lord said
To the angels: "I am about
To create man, from sounding clay
From mud moulded into shape;

1965 Cf. ix 100, where the Sābiṣān may perhaps correspond to the Musiagdimin here. In that case the two classes are those who are the first to accept Faith and do deeds of righteousness and those who come later, but are still numbered with the righteoids. A second alternative meaning may be: "those who preceded you in point of time and those who come after you in point of time; they are all known to God, and He will gather them all together on the Day of Judgment."

1966. Salsal: dry clay which produces a sound, like pottery. Cf. Iv. 14. Taking verses 26 and 29 together, I understand the meaning to be: that man's body was formed from wet clay moulded into shape and then dried until it could emit sound feprhaps referring to speech); that it was then further fashioned and completed; that into the animal form thus fashioned was breathed the spirit of God, which gave it a superiority over other Creation; and that the order for obeisance was then, given.

1967, Cf. vi. 100, and n. 929. Hidden or invisible forces are aptly typified as arising "from the fire of scorching winds."

 "When I have fashioned him (In due proportion) and breathed Into him of My spirit, Fall ye down in obeisance Unto him."

1968. Among other passages where the creation of Adam is referred to, cf. the following: ii 30.39; vii, 1;23. Note that here the emphasis is on three points: (1) the breathing of God's spirit into man £c, the faculty of God-like knowledge and will, which, if rightly used, would give man superiority over other creatures; (2) the origin of evil in arrogance and jealousy on the part of Satan, who, as wonly the lower side of man (his clay) and failled to see the higher side, the faculty brought in by the spirit of God; (3) that this evil only touches those who yield to it, and has no power over God's sincere servants, purified by His grace (xv. 40, 42). Adam is not here mentioned by name, but only Man, whose symbol is Adam.

1969 Cf. n. 49 to il. 34.

1970. Iblis : the name has in it the root-idea of desperateness or rebellion. Cf. n. 52 to ii. 36.

1971. Apparently lblie's arrogance had two grounds: (1) that man was made of clay while he was made of fire; (2) that he did not wish to do what others tild. Both grounds were false: (1) because man had the split of God breathed into hiva; (2) because cantempt of the angels who obeyed God's word showed not lblis's superiority but his inferiority. The word "boshar" for man (verse 3) suggests a gross physical body.

1972. After the Day of Judgment the whole constitution of the universe will be different. There will be a new world altogether, on a wholly different plane. (Cf. xxi. 104.)

36. (Iblis) said: "O my Lord! Give me then respite 1973 Till the Day The (dead) are raised."

And I will put them 1878

1073. What was this respite? The curse on Iblis remained, i.e., he was seprived of God sprace and became in the spiritual world what an outlaw is in a political kingdom. An earthly kingdom may not be able to catch and destroy an outlaw. But God is Omnipotent, and such power as Iblis may have can only come through the respite granted by God. The respite then is what is expressed in xy 39 below. In God's grant of limited free-will to man is implied the faculty of choosing between good and evil, and the faculty is exercised through the temptations and allurements put forward by Statan, "the open enemy" of man. This is for the period of man's probation on this earth. Even so, no temptations have power over the sincere worshippers of God, who are purified by His grace.

1974. Aguations: 'thrown me out of the way, put me in the wrong 't C, vii 16. Satan as the Power of Evil cannot be straight or truthful even before God. By his own arrogance and rebellion he fell; he attributes this to God. Between God's righteous judgment and Satan's nares and temptations there cannot be the remotest comparison. Yet he presumes to put them on an equal footing. He is taking advantage of the respite.

1975. Iblis (the Rebellious) is powerless against God. He turns therefore against man and becomes Satan (the Enemy).

1976. To be sincere in the worship of God is to obtain purification from all stain of evil and exemption from all influence of evil. It changes the whole nature of man. After that, evil cannot touch him. Evil will acknowledge him to be beyond its power and will not even tempt him? Apart from such purified souls, everyone who worships God invites God's grace to protect him. But if he puts himself in the way of wrong and deliberately choose evil, he must take the consequences. The blame is not even on Satan, the power of evil; it is on the sinner himself, who puts himself into his power; six v. 2z; z. v. 42.

- 48. There no sense of fatigue Shall touch them, Nor shall they (ever) Be asked to leave.

1977, Seven is a mystic number. The ways of sin are numerous, and if they are classified into seven, each of them points to a Gate that leads to Hell,

Apart from the literal meaning, which is itself based on metaphors, the whole of this section and indeed of this Sura, is full of mystic meaning, which it is outside the power or scope or limits of a running Commentary to expound adequately.

1978, Cf. vit. 43, and n. 1021. The hearts and minds will be so purified that all past rancour, jealousy, or sense of injury will be obliterated. The true Brotherhood will be realised there, when each will have his own dignity; there will be no question of invidious comparisons; each will face the others with joy and confidence. There will be no sense of toil or fatigue, and the joy will last for ever.

1979. We must realise both sides of God's attributes: His mercy, grace, and forgiveness are unbounded; if we reject all this, His justice and punishment will also be beyond all that we can conceive.

1980. In illustration of the contrasts between Good and Evil, and the consequences that flow from them, we have now a reference to four incidents from the past, viz.: [1] an incident from the story of Abraham; [2] from that of Lot, nephew of Abraham, and the end of the Clies of the Plain, which he was sent to warn; [3]; the People of the Wood; and (4) the People of the Rocky Tract (Rfir), after whom this Strat is called. A susual, the recital of God's abounding grace comes first.

1981. For a full understanding of this reference to the angels who were Abraham's guests and came to announce the birth of a son to him in his old age, read xi. 69-73 and notes. The appearance of two strangers of uncommon appearance, who refused to partake of the host's sumptuous hospitality, made Abraham at first suspicious and afraid.

Considering that the angels were divine messengers, the wisdom referred to was divine wisdom, and the event became an event of prime Importance in the world's religious history. For Abraham became, through his progeny, the root of the three great universal religions diffused throughout the world.

Ahl (xv. 55 below) usually implies "household" but may be taken in an extended sense to include People generally; see xv. 67. Qaum (zv. 62) may be any collection or aggregate of people. In xi 70 the hostile inhabitants of the Cities of the Plain are called the goum-i-Luf (the People of Lut). Ashab (companions) refers to a Group rather than to a People : Cf xv. 78

1989. The unusual appearance of the angels struck Lot as it had struck Abraham: Knowing the abominable vices to which the Cities were addicted, he feared to entertain handsome young men. They at once disclosed their mission to him in mystic language. In effect they said: "You, Lot, have been preaching in vain to these wicked Cities. When you warn them of their inevitable end, Destruction, they laugh and doubt. Now their doubt will be resolved. Their destruction will be accomplished before the morning."

<sup>1991.</sup> As the last remnants of the wicked were to be out off, and as the Minroy of God wished to save every true soul who might be with Lot, God's decree was made known to Lot, so that he might save his adherents.

<sup>1992.</sup> They were addicted to unnatural crime, and the news of the advent of handsome young men inflamed them. How true it is that at the very verge of destruction, men rush blindly to their fate, and cut off any last hope of repentance and metry for themselves. Cf xv. 72 below.

<sup>1993.</sup> I understand the meaning to be that Lot, the only righteous man in the City, had frequently remonstrated with the inhabitants against their unnatural crimes, and they had forbidden him to speak to them again on behalf of any one, "as if" (they might tauntingly say) " he was the protector of all and sundry".

Some Commentators understand the verse to mean: 'Did we not forbid thee to entertain any strangers?'

<sup>1994</sup> Cf, xi 78, n. 1875. "My daughters" in the mouth of a venerable man may mean young girls of the City, which would be appropriate considering the large number of men who came to besiges Loft house.

2000. "Companions of the Wood": As-bāb ul Aibsti. Perhaps Aiba is after all a proper noun, the amen of a town or tract. Who were the Companions of the Aiba? They are meltioned four times in the Qui-ân, viz, here, and in xxv. 176-19; xxxviii. '13; and i. 14. The only passage in which any details are given is xxv. 176-191. There we are told that their Prophet was Shu'aib, and other details given correspond to those of the Madyan, to whom Shu'aib was sent as Apostle; see vii. 85-93. In my notes to that passage I have discussed the question of Shu'aib, and the Madyan people. It is reasonable to suppose that the Companions of the Wood were either, the same as the Madyan, or a Group among them or in their neighbourhood.

2006 The Hour will not be long delayed when the true Design and Pattern of Life will be manifest. We must not be impatient, if there appear to be, to our limited vision, apparent injustices. We must bear and forbear, and as far as our own personal feelings are concerned, we must overlook other people's faults with "a gracious forgiveness".

2007. Khaliā; i the emphatic intensive form, as meaning the Creator, Who is perfect in His skill and knowledge, and Whose creation answers perfectly to His design. Therefore no one should think that anything has gone wrong in God's creation. What may seem out of joint is merely the result of our short-sighted standards. It often happens that what appears to us to be evil or imperfect or unjust is a reflection of our own imperfect much . See the next two vents and notes.

2008. The Seven Oft-repeated Verses are usually understood to be the Opening Stra. the Falibo. They sum up the whole teaching of the Quran. What can be a more precious gift to a Muslim than the glorious Quran or any Stra of 11? Worldly wealth, honour, possessions, or anything else, sinks into insignificance in compatison with it.

2009. It may be that other people have worldly goods which worldly men envy. Do they necessarily bring happiness? 2013. The Commentators differ as to the precise signification of verses 90 and 91. Are the persons referred to in the two verses the same, or different? And who were they? I adopt the view, for which there is good authority, that the two classes of persons were different but similar, Verse 90, I think, refers to the Jews and Christians, who took out of Scripture what suited them, and ignored or rejected the rest : ii, 85, 101. For verse 91 see next note, 2014. The Meccan Pagans, in the early days of Islam, in order to dishonour and ridicule the Qur-an, divided what was so far revealed, into bits, and apportioned them to people coming on pilgrimage to Mecca by different routes, slandering and abusing the Apostle of God.

INTRODUCTION TO SURA XVI (NaM)

Chronologically this Sūra, like the six which preceded it, belongs to the late Meccan period, except perhaps verse 110 and some of the verses that follow. But the chronology has no significance. In subject matter it sums up, from a new point of view, the arguments on the great questions of God's dealings with man, His Self-revelation to man, and how the Messengers and the Message are writ large in every phase of God's Creation and the life of Man. The new point of view is that Nature points to Nature's God.

Summary. — Everything in Creation proclaims the glory of God. To man is given dominion over Nature, that man may recognise God's Unity and God's Truth (xvi. 1-23, and C. 123).

Man should never lose sight of his goal, which is the Good, or dispute with the great Teachers, who are sent to all Peoples, to bring about Unity: all creatures serve God (xvi: 26-50, and C, 124).

God's favours and man's ingratitude recounted. His Signs in the rain bearing clouds, the cattle that give milk, the bee that produces honey, the wonderful relations of family and social life, and the refinements and comforts of civilization (xvi. 51.83, and C, 125).

The Messengers of Truth will bear witness against those who reject the Truth. God will judge us according to our faith and deeds (xvi. 84-100, and C. 126).

The Quran is true: it guides and gives glad tidings. Believe, and make the most of Life in all things good and lawful. Follow the example of Abraham: be true in Faith and righteous, and do good (xvi. 101-128; and C.-127).

C. 123.—God's Command must inevitably (avi 1-25.) Come to pass. But all His Creation

Come to pass. Dut all risk creation.

Froclaims His glory, and leads to His Truth.

In all things has He furnished man.

With favours innumerable,

To lead and guide him and bring him.

To Himself. Why then does man.

Refuse the Truth, except for arrogance?

Why does he run after false gods,

Thus acting against his own lights.

And misteading others less blest in knowledge?

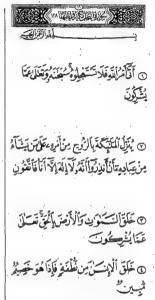

Sūra XVI.

Sora, AVI.

Nahl or The Bee.

In the name of God Most Gracious, Most Merciful.

- 4. In e has created man

2019. This is an answer to the taunt of the Pagans, who said: "It there is a god, the One True God, as you say, with unified control, why does He not punish the wrong-doers at once?" The answer is: "The decree of God will inevitably come to pass; it will come soon enough, when it comes, you will wish it were delayed; how foolish of you to wish even to cut off your last hope of forgiveness?"

2020. The Pagans, with their multiplicity of gods and goddesses, good and evil, could play one off against another. That is mere mockery of religion. With such conceptions, man cannot understand the Unity of Nesign in the Universe nor realise the Power and Glory of the One True God, to Whom alone worship and service are due.

2021. Not for sport, or fortuitously and without Design. Cf. xv. 85. Surely the Unity of Design in Creation also proves the Unity of God their Creator.

2022, Man's physical origin is lowly. Yet do men go back to material things, and neglector dispute about the highest things in Life, 2023. Why will you go back to material things, considering that material things are made subservient to your use and enjoyment in various ways as suggested in the clauses that follow.

2024. From wool, and hair, and skins, and milk. Camel's hair makes warm robes and blankets, and certain kinds of goats yield hair which makes similar labrics. Sheep yield wool, and Llamas alpace for similar uses. The skins and furs of man animals yield warm raiment or make warm rugs or bedding. The females of many of these animals yield good warm milk, a nourishing and wholesome diet. Then the flesh of many of these animals is good to eat. There are other uses, which the animals serve; and which are referred to later.

2025. The good man is proud of his cattle and is good to them. As they go to, and return from, pasture, morning and evening, he has a sense of his power and wealth and their beauty and docility. Will not man turn from these material, facts to the great spiritual truths and purpose behind them?

2026. The cattle and animals also carry loads, and thus make inter-communication between different lands easy. But for them there would have been many difficulties, not only physical, but psychological. Weary men carrying loads are in no mood for social and spiritual intercourse. This intercourse is made possible by the kindness and mercy of God.

2027. Horses, mules, and donkeys as well as other animals may be beasts of burden, but they may also be pedigree animals bred for beauty and for all those more refined uses, such as processions, in which grace and elegance is the predominant feature.

2028. If we examine the history of transport, there have been vast changes through the ages, from rude pack animals to fine equipages, and then through mechanical contrivances, such means of transport as elegant coaches, transways and raijways, useful motor lorries and Rolls-Royce cars, and air-ships and aeropianes of all descriptions. At any given point of time, many of these were yet unknown to man. Nor car we suppose the limit to have been reached now or that it will ever be reached at any future time. Through the mind and ingenuity of man it is God that creates new things hitherpro unknown to man.

2029. Through material things "the Way" does always lead to God. But some minds are so obsessed with material things that they miss the pointers to the spiritual. God could have forced all to the true Way, but in His Will and Plan is the training of man's will, and that is done by the Signs in nature and in Revelation.

2030. The least thought and study of nature will show you God's wise and benign Providence in making the processes of nature subserve man's use and refined life. A higher degree of intelligence and study is required, "men who are wise") to understand God's Signs to man in the processes connected with the heavenly bodies (verse 12). And a still higher spiritual understanding ("men who celebrate His praises" with gratitude) to realise the marvellous gradations, colours, and nuances in the creatures on this little globe of ours (verse 13). Reason this out carefully.

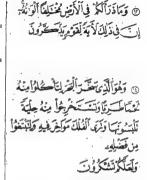

2031. The Night and the Day are caused by astronomical rotations. What is important for man to mote is how God has given intelligence to man to make use of this alternation for work and rest; how man can, as soon as he rises from the primitive stage, get over their inequalities by artificial illuminants, such as vegetable or mineral oils, coal, gas, or electricity, which ultimately are derived from the storred-tip energy of the sun; how the sun's heat can be tempered by various artificial means and can be storred up for use by man as required; how man can be independent of the tides caused by the moon and the sun, which formerly controlled navigation, but which no longer stand in man's way, with his artificial harbours and great sea-going ships; how navigation was formerly subject to direct observation of the Polar Star and other stars, but how the magnetic needle and charts have now completely altered the position, and man can calculate and to a certain extent control magnetic variations, etc. In such ways the sun, the moon, and the stars themselves become useful servants to him, all by God's gift and His Command, without which there would have been no laws governing them and no intelligence to make use of them.

13. And the things on this earth Which He has multiplied . In varying colours (and qualities) : 9032

Verily in this is a Sign For men who celebrate The praises of God (in gratitude). 9033

14. Wet is He Who has made some

The sea subject, that ve May eat thereof flesh That is fresh and tender. 2035 And that ye may extract Therefrom ornaments to wear : 0086 And thou seest the ships Therein that plough the waves, That ye may seek (thus) Of the bounty of God mon And that ye may be grateful.

2032. Whose heart has not been moved by the glorious gradation of colours in the sunset clouds? The gradations are infinite, and it is only the eye of an artist that can express their collective beauty. They are but a type of the infinite variety and gradation of qualities in the spiritual sphere even in the little space of our own globe. The big things that can be measured and defined have been spoken of before. Here we have mention of the subtle nuances in the spiritual world which can only be perceived by men who are so high in splittual insight that their only reaction is to "celebrate the praises of God" in gratitude for His infinite Mercies.

2033 Read again n. 2030 above, and see how subtly we are led up from the perception of the big to the perception of the subtle and delicate colours and qualities in the spiritual world.

2034. We have gone up in a climax of material things from the big to the subtle in the sky and the earth. Here we have another climax as regards the things of the sea. We get the delicate flash of fishes and marine creatures of all kinds; we get the treasures of the deep : pearls, coral, amber, and things of that kind; and we have the stately ships ploughing the wayes, for maritime commerce and intercourse, for unifying mankind, and for realising the spiritual bounty of God which can best be expressed by the boundless ocean.

2035, Connoisseurs know the delicate flavours of sea fish, such as the pomfret of the Indian Ocean, the herring of the North Atlantic, the mullet of Marseilles, and many another kind. Tari, translated "fresh and tender," also refers to the soft moist nature of fresh fish it is another wonder of God that salt water should produce flesh of such fresh, tender, and delicate flavour.

. 2036. Diving for pearls-in both the primitive and the more advanced form-is another instance of man's power over apparently inaccessible depths of the sea.

2037. After the material benefits which we get from the sea, we are asked to consider things of higher import to the spirit of man.' There is the beautiful ship which stands as the symbol of international commerce and intercourse, things that may be of material benefit, but which have a higher aspect in unifying man and making his civilisation more universal. These are first steps in seeking of the "bounty of God" through the sea. But there are higher aspects. Navigation and international intercourse increase knowledge, which in its higher aspects should clean the mind and make it fitter to approach God. The salt water, which covers nearly 72 per cent. of the surface of the Globe, is itself a purifying and sanitary agent, and is a good symbol of the higher bounties of God, which are as boundless as the Ocean.

2018. Cf. xii. 3 and xv. 19. It is a favourite figure of speech to speak of the earth as a spacious carpet spread beneath our feet and the eternal hills as a steadying agent to keep the carpet from rolling or shaking about. In lxxviii, 7 they are spoken of as pegs or stakes.

2039. In this passage (avi. 15-16) we have the metaphor of the fixed mountains further allegorised. In these verses the key-words are indicated by the symbols for man's Guidance (tahtadan). First, the physical symbols are indicated: the mountains that stand firm and do not change from day to day in the landscape, unlike, shifting sand-dunes, or the coast line of the sea, or rivers and streams, which frequently change their course; then we have fives and roads, which are more precise and therefore more useful. Though less permanent; then we have 'alkmāt (sign-posts), any kinds of signs erected by man, like direction posts, light-houses or beacons, or provided in nature, as tall trees, etc.; and finally, we have the pole-star, and now the magnetic needle, with its variations marked on navigation charts. All these are symbols for the higher Guidance which God provides for the spirit of man. See next note.

2040. See last note. Let us examine the completed allégory. As there are beacons, landmarks, and signs to show the way to men on the earth, so in the spiritual world. And it is ultimately God Who provides them, and this is His crowning Mercy. Like the mountains there are spiritual Landmarks in the missions of the Great Teachers: they should guide us, or teach us, to guide ourselves, and not shake hither and thinter like a ship without a rudder or people without Faith. As rivers and streams mark out their channels, smoothing out levels so we have wholesome Laws and Customs established, to help us in our lives. Then we have the examples of Great Men as further sign-posts: "Lives of great men all remind us, We can make out; lives sublime," In long-distance travel, the pole-star and the magnetic needle are our guides: so in our long-distance journey to the other world, we have ultimately to look to heavenly guidence or its reflection in God's Revelation.

2041 The supreme majesty of God having been set out in His favours of all kinds, it will be seen at once that the worship of any other than God is meaningless and ridiculous. Shall we not take the hint and understand?

2042. Of all God's favours innumerable, His Mercy and Forgiveness in the spiritual plane is the greatest, and of eternal value to us in our future Lives.

2043. God is the only Creator and the Ultimate Reality. Everything else is created by Him, and reflects His glory. How foolish then to worship any other than God!

2044. Idols are dead wood or stone. If men worship stars, or heroes, or prophets, or great men, they too have no life except that which was given by God. In themselves they are lifeless. If they worship figments of the imagination, they are reflections in a double degree, and have no life in themselves. All these things will be raised up on the Last Day, in order that Talse worshippers may be confronted with them. But they themselves cannot tell when that Day will be.

2045. Everything points to the One True Eternal God. If so, there is a Hereafter, for He has detarted it. In so far as people do not believe hits, the fault is in their Will: they do not wish to believe, and the motive behind is arrogance, the sin which brought about the fall of bils: it. 34.

2046. Cf. xvi. 19, where the same words refer to men generally. Whether he conceals or reveals what is in his heart, God knows it, and as God is Oft-Forgiving, Most Merciul, His grace is available as His highest favour if man will take it. Here the reference is to those who "refuse to knr.w", who reject God's guidance out of arrogance. God "loveth not the arrogant". Such men deprive themselves of God's grace.

2047. When the arrogant Unbelievers are referred to some definite argument or illustration from Scripture, they dismiss it contemptuously with the remark, "Tales of the ancients!" In this, they are not only playing with their own conscience, but misleading others, with perhaps less knowledge than themselves.

27. Then, on the Day of Judgment, He will cover them

2048: Their responsibility or crime is twofold: (1) that they rejected God's Message, and (2) that they misted others. Their Penalty will also be double. In vi. 164, we are told that "no bearer of burdens can bear the burden of another". This is against the doctrine of vicarious atomement. Every man is responsible for his own sins; but the sin of misleading others is a sin of the misleader himself, and he must suffer the penalty for that also, without relieving those misled, of their responsibility.

2049, Evil will always devise plots against the men of God. So was it with Mustafa, and so was it with the aposites before him. But the imposing structures which the ungody build up, (metaphorically) collapse at the Command of God, and they are often punished from quarters from which they least expected punishment. For example, the Quraish were confident in their numbers, their organisation, and their superior equipment. But on the field of Badr they collapsed where they expected victory.

<sup>2050</sup> The worshippers of false gods (the ungodly, the Unbelievers) will be unable to reply when brought before the Judgment Seat. The comment of those "endued with knowledge"—the Prophets and Teachers whom they had rejected—will be by way of indictment and explanation of the position of those before the Judgment Seat.

<sup>2051.</sup> That is, those who died in a state of kuir, or rebellion against God, which was really wrong-doing against their own souls.

<sup>203.</sup> The excuse is a mere pretence. At first they were too dazed to reply. When they reply, they cannot deny the facts, but resort to the sinner's excuse of raying that they sinned through ignorance, and that their motives were not wrong. Such a plea raises a question of hidden thoughts which are difficult to appraise before a human tribural, But here they are before their Divine Author, Who knows every secret of their souls, and before Whom ho false plea can be of any value. So they are condemned.

<sup>2053.</sup> The contrast and parallelism is with xvi. 24, where the tingodly in their levity and their deliberate rejection of guidance find no profit from God's revelation.

<sup>2054.</sup> Unlike the ungody, the good and good everywhere, in this world and in the Hereafter; because they understand and are in accord with the truths around them.

<sup>2037.</sup> The old, old argument: if God is All-Powerful, why did He not force all persons to His Will? This ignores the limited Free-will granted to man, which is the whole basis of Ethics. 2038. The Pagan Arabs prescribed various arbitrary prohibitions in the matter of meat; see vi. 1435. These, of course, are not recognised by Islam, which also temoved some of the returnions of the Jewish Law; vi. 146. The general meaning, however, is far wider. Men erect their own taboos and prohibitions, barriers and restrictions, and ascribe them to Religion. This is wrong, and more consonant with Pagan practice than with Islam.

2009. Citer Message. Mubin: in three senses: (1) a Message clear and unambiguous; (2) one that makes all things clear to those who try to understand, because it accords with their own nature as created by God; (3) one preached openly and to everyone.

2000. Bven though God's Signs are everywhere in Nature and in men's own conscience, yet in addition God has sent human Messengers to every People to call liher attention to the Good and turn their from Evil. So they cannot pretend that God has abandoned them or that He does not care what they do. His divine Grace always invites their will to choose the right.

2061. While some people accept the guidance of the divine Grace, others so surrender themselves to Evil that it must necessarily follow that Evil obtains a grip over them. They have only to travel through Tim, or Space to see the end of those who abandoned their lights and surrendered to Evil and Error. For apaged and the meaning of apage in this connection of xv. 6.

2062. When once God's Grace is rejected by any one, such a person loses all help and guidance. Such persons are then outside God's Grace, and therefore they are outside guidance.

2063. The strongest oath of the Pagan Arabs would be by the Supreme God: less strong oaths would be by their subordinate deities, or their ancestors, or other things they valued or held sacred.

2064. The usual Pagan creed is: If there is a God, it does not follow that He will raise us up: why should He? The answer is twofold: (I) God has promised it, and God's promise is true; (2) He must finally manifest the Truth to them, convict them of their falsehood, and enforce their personal responsibility (xvi, 199).

2065. See the last note.

2066, God's "Word" is in itself the Deed. God's Promise is in itself the Truth. There is no interposition of "time or Condition between His Will and its consequences, for He is the Ultimate Reality. He is independent of the proximate or material causes, for He Himself creates them and establishes their Laws as He pleases.

2007. There is no merit in suffering exile (Asiyra) in itself. To have any merit, it must be: (1) in the cause of God, and (2) after such an oppression as forces the sufferer to choose between God and man. When these conditions are fulfilled, the exiles are entitled to the highest honour, as having made a great searches in the cause of God. Such were the early Muslim exiles to Abyssinia; such were the later exiles to Medina, before the Apostle himself left his home in Mecca and went to Medina; and such were the exiles who went with the Prophet or followed him. At all these stages, his approval or advice was always obtained, either specifically or generally.

2068. God's apostles were always men, not angels; and their distinction was the inspiration they received.

2009. If the Pagan Arabs, who were ignorant of religious and other history, wondered how a mind from among themselves could receive inspiration and bring a Message from God, let them ask the Jews, who had also received God's Message againet through Moses, whether Moses was a man, or an angel, or a god. They would learn that Moses was a man like themselves, but inspired by Glod. "Those who possess the Message" may also mean any men of Wisdom, who were qualified to have an opinion in such matters.

2070. For "Clear Signs" see n. 401 to iii. 62. For Zubur (Books of dark prophecies), see iii, 184, and n. 490. As the People of the Book had received "Clear Signs" and inspired Books before, so also God's Message came to the Prophet Muhammad through the Qur-an, which superseded the earlier revelations, already corrupted in the hands of their followers.

2071. Cf. xvl. 26. The wicked plot against men of God in secret, forgetting that every hidden thought of theirs is known to God, and that for every thought and action of theirs they will have to account to God. And God's punishment van seize them in various ways. Four are enumerated here. (I) They may be swallowed up in the earth like Qairin, whose story is told in xxvlit, 768.1 le was awailowed up in the earth while he was arrogantly exutting on the score of his wealth. (2) it may be that, like Haman, the prime minister of Pharaoh, they are plotting against God, when they are themselves overwhelmed by some dreadful calamity: xl. 358; xxx. 3340. The case of Pharaoh is also in point. He was drowned while he was arrogantly hoping to frustrate God's plans for Iranel x. 30,922. For (3) and 4) see the next two notes.

2072. (3) Or the punishment may come to people away from their homes and humble them in their pride. It so happened to Abd Jahl, who came exulting in his pride to the Battle of Badr (A.H. 2). His army was three times the size of the Muslim army from Medina. But it suffered a crushing defeat, and he himself was ignominiously slain.

2073. (4) Or, as often happens, the punishment comes alowly and imperceptibly, the power of the enemies of God being wasted gradually, until it is extinguished. This happened to the Meccans during the eight years of the Prophet's exile. The re-unquest of Mecca was bloodless, because the power of the enemy had gradually vanished. The Prophet was thus able to show the unexampled generosity and elemency which he showed on that occasion, for two of God's attributes are expressed in the titles "Full of kindness" (Ro-#I) and "Full of mercy "Ratim".

2074. I take "things" here to be inanimate things, for the next verse speaks of living "moving creatures" and angels. By a metaphor even such inanimate things are spoken of as recognising God and humbly worshipping Him. Even their shadows turn round from right and left according to the light from above, and they humbly prostrate themselves on the ground to celebrate the praises of God. The "shadows" suggest how all things in this life are mere shadows of the true Reality in heaven; and they should turn and move in accordance with the divine light, as the shadows of trees and buildings move in ope direction or another, and lengthen or shorten according to the light from heaven.

2075. Moving creatures, i.e., living creatures. "All that is in the heavens or earth," includes every created thing. And created things are mentioned in three classes: inanimate things, ordinary living things, and angels. Even the highest angels are not arrogant: they bow down and serve their Lord, and so does all Creation.

But in many tangible ways He cares for man and provides for his growth And sustenance. In rain, in milk, In fruits and honey, and in Nature and the life Of man, with his opportunities Of social, moral, and spiritual growth, Are Signs for those who understand. Why then does man show ingratitude By going after false gods and forgetting God?

SECTION 7.

- 51. God has said: "Take not (For worship) two gods: 9077 For He is just One God: Then fear Me (and Me alone)."

- 53. And ye have no good thing But is from God: and moreover. When ye are touched by distress, Unto Him ye cry with groans; 907

2076. God is so high above the highest of His creatures, that they all look up to him in awe and reverence And they juyfully do their duty in serving Him. This is the meaning of the "fear of the Lord."

2077. The ancient Persians believed in two powers in the Universe, one good and the other evil. The Pagan Arabs also had pairs of deities; e.g., Jibt (Sorcery) and Tagut (Evil), referred to in iv. 51, n. 573, or the idols on Safa and Marwa referred to in n. 160 to ii. 158; their names were Isaf and 2078. The Pagana might have a glimmering of the One True God, but they had also a haunting . fear of malevolent Powers of Evil. They are told that such fears are groundless. Evil has no power over those who trust in God: xv, 42. The only fear they should have is that of the Wrath of God. To the righteous all good things come from God, and they have no fear in their hearts.

2080. Idols and fictitious gods are certainly things of which they have no knowledge, idols being liteless things of whose life or doings no knowledge is possible, and fictitious gods being but figments of their imagination.

2081. Cf. vi. 136—140, 142-144, and v. 106. The Pagans, in assigning and dedicating some of their cattle, or some of their cattle, or some of the produce of their fields, to their false gods as sharers with the true Supreme God, made themselves doubly ridiculous; first, because every good thing that they valued was given to them by God, and how could they patronisingly assign to Him a share of His own gifts?—and secondly, because they brought in other gods as sharers, who had no existence whatever! Besides, the cattle and produce was given for their physical sustenance and the children for their social and spiritual sustenance, and how can they, poor creatures, give sustenance to God?

2082. Some of the Pagan Arabs called angels the daughters of God. In their own life they hated to have daughters, as explained in the next two verses. They practised female infanticide. In their state of perpetual war sons were a source of strength to them; daughters only made them subject to humiliating raids 1

But He gives them respite For a stated Term:

2083, "It," in this and the following clause, refers grammatically to the "news" (ma bushshira bits). In meaning it refers to the "female child"—by the figure of speech known as metonymy.

2084. Cf. ixxxi. 8-9. The practice of female infanticide is condemned in scathing terms. Female children used to be buried alive by the Pagan Arabs

2085. It was an evil choice to decide on. Either alternative—to keep the poor girl as a thing of sufferance and contempt, bringing disgrace on the family, or to get rid of it by burying it alive—was cruel and indefensible.

2086, Cf. xxx. 27. God is above all comparison. But If, for our own understanding, we use any similtudes at all, the highest and noblest would be for God, and the vilest for the Unbelievera, for they deay their own nature. The Pagans reversed this process, and attributed daughters to God, when they considered daughters a sign of shame and ignominy to themselves!

2007. God's decree works without fail. If He were to pusish for every wrong or shortcoming, not a single living creature on earth would escape punishment. But in His infinite merry and forgiveness, He gives respite: He provides time for repentance. If the repentance is forthcoming, God's Mercy is forthcoming without fail. It hot, the punishment comes inevitably on the expiry of the Term. The sinner cannot anticipate it by an insolent challenge, nor can no delay it when the time arrives. Let him, not think that the respite given him may mean that he can do what he likes, and that he can scape sool-free froight the consequences.

62. They attribute to God What they hate (for themselves), 2008 And their tongues assert The falsehood that all good things som Are for themselves: without doubt For them is the Fire, and they

- 64. And We sent down the Book To thee for the express purpose, . That thou shouldst make clear To them those things in which 9001 They differ, and that it should be A guide and a mercy To those who believe.
- 65. And God sends down rain From the skies, and gives therewith Life to the earth after its death : Verily in this is a Sign 2088. See above, mvl 57-58 and notes.

2089. The philosophy of Pleasure (Hedonism) assumes that worldly enjoyment is good in litself and that there is nothing beyond. But it can be shown, even on its own ground, that every act has its inevitable consequences. No Good can spring out of Evil. For falsehood and wrong the agony of the Fire is waiting, and the boastful votaries of Falsehood will be the first to fall into it.

2090, in all ages and among all Peoples God sent His Messengers to teach the Truth and point the way to righteousness. But the allurements of Evil seemed always attractive, and many men preferred their own ways and the ways of their ancestors to the more difficult path of rectitude, This happened again in the time of Muetala, and will always happen as long as men succumb to 2091. But the path of duty before God's Messenger is clear. He is sent with the Revelation (the Qui-an) for three express purposes: (1) that he should bring about unity among the jarring sects, for the Gospet of Unity, while preaching the One True God, leads also to the unity of mankind; (2) that the revelation should be a guide to right conduct; and (3) that it should show the path of repentance and salvation, and thus be the highest mercy to erring sinners.

2002. When the earth with all its vegetation is well-night dead, parched and shrivelled up, a wirlying shower of rain from above gives it new life. This is a Sign or Emblem of spiritual life. When sin well-nigh kills the soul, the fertilising shower of God's Revelation from above puts new beauting.

2093. The spiritual sustenance which God gives is typified by the wonderful ways of sustenance in the physical world, which figure forth God's providence and loving care for His creation. And the wonderful transformations in the physical world, which all tend to the benefit of man, are also Signs of His supreme wisdom. In the previous verse rain was mentioned, which gives new life to dead nature. In this and the following two verses cur attention is drawn to milk, the products of the date and the vine, and honey.

2004. Their: in the Arabic, it is "its", in the singular number, for two reasons: (1) cattle is the generic plural, and may be treated as a singular noun; (2) the instructive Sign is in cattle collectively, but the milk is the product of each single individual.
